The work of constant preaching and visiting has been very little interrupted, but there have been great changes among the men. It is hard to part with converts so new, and often but little instructed. It is a touching sight when they come and kneel with the pastor, asking him to pray that they may be kept faithful. But it stirs him up to seek that the empty places may be filled, and to give diligent attention to his evening classes for edification, as well as to the larger gatherings for evangelization.

From the New Hebrides.

WRITING from Tongoa, New Hebrides, March 3, Rev. Oscar Michelsen says:—I returned from New Zealand in December, after a rather prolonged, but much-needed holiday in that country. The natives gave me a very hearty welcome back. Some of the scenes were as touching as amusing. I could soon see that whilst they showed kindness to me and joy at seeing me among them, they had much need of being stirred up. So I decided to have a week of meetings; and whilst in many lands the brethren were holding up our arms during the Week of Prayer, "Israel prevailed" here. We had a splendid time.

I had intended to follow up the work by having a weekly meeting for some months, but I heard that I was much needed in my district on Epi. I therefore went over there towards the end of January. I at once commenced with a week of meetings, which in some respects were more successful than those on Tongoa. I left Epi on February 6, and was looking forward to plenty of hard work here. Two days afterwards, however, I was attacked by what the native call Epi fever.

For three weeks I was very ill. On the 15th of the month, just as the people came back from church, I seemed to be sinking. I told them where to dig my grave, and waited only for the change. The women stood round me weeping and fanning me, for I could not breathe; the men sat down on the floor, one after another praying. Their prayers were heard, and now I am so much improved that I am able to write this. But I still need all prayer.

Progress at Nice.

IT is about a year since I sent you a little account of the good work done at San Remo by the church and schools of the Waldensian Mission. I have great pleasure in giving you an encouraging report of its further development and progress.

There has been a considerable increase to both church and schools, fourteen new members having joined the former, while the numbers on the roll of pupils have risen from 126 to 150. A crowd of children demand admission; but, alas! there is no room, and no teacher for them, for I grieve to say we have no funds to provide either.

The present pupils are mostly Roman Catholics, who have no other opportunity of hearing the Scriptures, in which they are carefully instructed. They carry home from these schools their daily portion of the Word of Life; so that hungry souls dwelling in dark and desert places have also their chance of being fed by some of "the crumbs which fall from the children's table," when the young voices sing or repeat the sweet hymns and texts they learn by heart and make their own for life.

But what of the children who stand without and knock, and pray the Master, through His servants, "Give us this day our daily bread"? Does His command, "Give ye them to eat," apply to us? Are we to hear and obey the voice echoing through the ages—from that last day it was heard on earth in pleading accents—"Feed my lambs"?

More children are eagerly demanding entrance; but the educational work is solely maintained through the funds collected by Signor Janni (9, Via Sierogallo, San Remo), who will gladly give all information about his excellent and efficient mission.

How God Guides.

I HAVE thought that aged Christians might help their younger brethren by recording God's dealings with them. In the great work which was going on in this country from 1857 to 1874, my dear wife and I had no occasion to ask for our expenses in travelling or taking houses. Our private means, as a rule, sufficed. When we settled in the west of London, and had to pay £2,000 for the land on which Talbot Tabernacle was built, we prayed about it; and though we did not receive a large sum, we doubt not it was as much as God deemed right.

Another difficulty then arose. We had seen very large Bible-readings in the neighbourhood of Belgrave Square, in the house of Mrs. General Campbell (which some readers may still remember); and it appeared to us that very many in Bayswater and Notting Hill would attend similar gatherings. But our drawing-room could not comfortably hold more than forty persons, and we began to pray about a house capable of receiving about a hundred people. We refused to increase our rent, and wondered how we could obtain such a large house. After a few weeks God chose His own wonderful way.

A builder who had just finished a handsome square of large houses called to ask us to take one having two drawing-rooms on the first floor. I told him we never speculated, and his houses were quite beyond our mark, as they would oblige us to pay quite £200 a year for rent and rates. A week or two later he called again, and said, "I am quite selfish in the proposal I make. London people are very jealous about what neighbours they have in such a square, with open gardens; and it would answer my business plans if you took one of my large houses, at any rent you pleased to pay; but you must not mention the amount to anyone as long as you live there."

We considered the matter, decided that this was God's strange answer, and occupied that house. We filled the drawing-room often, holding weekly meetings open to Christians and their friends. Gordon Forlong.

Mr. Charles Montague.

HIS WORK IN SPITALFIELDS.

FROM the smallest or most insignificant of beginnings, the King Edward Ragged Schools and Mission in Spitalfields have grown into one of the most important and far-reaching of similar Christian enterprises at the East End of London. The fifty-seventh anniversary was celebrated towards the end of last year, when Hon. Evelyn Ashley presided at a crowded meeting which alone pleasantly testified to the interest still felt, by people who live near or far away, in the service carried on. Practically, Mr. Montague may be said to have been associated with the schools during the whole of his working life; and through the Divine blessing, it is greatly owing to his faith, hard work in organizing, and perseverance, that the outlook is what it is to-day.

It was on a wet night in the fall of 1845 that the Earl of Shaftesbury (then Lord Ashley), opened the building, a disused stable or cowshed, which for some time was the best accommodation that could be afforded. During the forty years ending with his death in 1885, Lord Shaftesbury was president of the work, and he ever felt the deepest interest in what was being done. The operations have expanded year by year, and to-day two large buildings—one in King Edward Street, and one in Albert Street—are busy hives of service.

In the forties of the last century, when the Ragged-school crusade was commenced, Spitalfields was a typical ragged-school quarter, squalid and swarming with neglected children, as well as a hot-bed of disease. It was there that the last outbreak of cholera took place in 1866; and a house is still pointed out in which six deaths occurred in about as many days. Descendants of the French Huguenot refugees, who settled in this region two centuries ago, are still found. Here also, at the Open-air Preaching Station of the Spital, some of the principal London divines preached during the era of the Reformation.

In due course the comprehensive work carried on attracted the attention of members of the Royal family, so that the schools and mission found a patron in the late Duchess of Teck, who remained until her death a warm-hearted friend and subscriber. In her visits to Spitalfields the late Duchess would be accompanied by her daughter, the Princess May, and at the present time the Prince and Princess of Wales are patrons of the King Edward Institutions.

There are not less than 1,500 children in the Sunday-schools; while the Bible-classes have 400 members. There are Gospel services on Sundays both for children and adults. These are much appreciated. Week by week a great deal is done in the way of diffusing pure literature of a Christian kind among the people. This is no doubt far-reaching in its good effects. It has to be remembered that, in these days, all can read, or, if there are exceptions, they are old people who grew up before the establishment of the elementary Board Schools. In Spitalfields, as elsewhere, the young are the hope of the future. Still acting on this principle, Mr. Montague has been successful in founding a week-night religious service for children, which has found much favour with those who attend.

In other ways Mr. Montague puts forth strenuous efforts to keep in touch with the young people who have passed through the Sunday-schools. Years ago dens of vicious amusement, known as penny gaffs, were dangerous pitfalls in their pathway, and by way of counteraction facilities were offered of learning interesting industries during week-day evenings. This has not only been successful; lads and lassies have learned arts and crafts which have proved to be of considerable value to them in after years. Thus girls have been taught plain needlework, cutting out, and dress-making, such knowledge being of no small value in an East End home, for it appears that the making of a dress will often cost as much as the materials. There is often great waste among the poor through want of knowledge of cookery, and this is therefore one of the things taught. Boys can learn cabinet-making, carpentry, and other useful arts.

It has been customary to hold an Industrial Exhibition every year; and on successive occasions this was opened by the late Duchess of Teck, whose popularity among the poor people was like that of a personal friend, so that when the Princess of Wales was married, a very large piece of wedding cake was sent for distribution among them. Indeed, the late fondly remembered Duchess was a friend and adviser, as well as a helper, of Mr. Montague; and when her funeral took place at Windsor, the superintendent of the King Edward Schools was invited to the Castle to attend the service as a friend, and also as a representative of those in Spitalfields who revered the Duchess's memory.

When young persons, after making a start in the world, maintain a good character in situations for a lengthened period, it is the best possible proof that their Christian training has been effective. Mr. Montague has the satisfaction of knowing that the Sunday-schools attached to the Mission he superintends distribute a greater number of prizes in recognition of good conduct in situations than any other similar institution.

During each winter a good deal is done in the way of giving relief to the aged, the infirm, and the distressed; also free dinners to insufficiently-fed children who attend the elementary schools. During the past winter, the whole neighbourhood has suffered from very hard times; and those who visit in connection with the King Edward Mission have been working hard to relieve the distress caused by want of employment in the case of large numbers. A great deal of suffering has been caused by the incoming of foreign aliens, many of whom are of the criminal class. There is much feeling among the native population on this subject; and the Mission workers seem to be of opinion that the immigration ought to be checked by Parliament.

The chief event of 1902 was the opening of a Holiday Home on a delightful site at Sandon, near Chelmsford, the garden of which has been planted with 300 fruit trees. The builder's contract for putting up the house was £1,500, and the whole of this was given by Mr. John Grove Johnson, of Highgate; so that the Home remains as the best possible monument to the memory of the late Mrs. Johnson, who during her life on earth was an open-handed benefactor of the poor of Spitalfields.

We may think of the neighbourhood as being of great interest to Christian antiquaries as well as to philanthropists. Some of the descendants of the Huguenot silk-weaving settlers may sometimes be met with at the King Edward Sunday services. We have visited old weavers in their rooms, to find them proud of their ancestry, while treasuring time-stained family papers in French. Pensions are still given to those who need aid, and a fine asylum or hospital for indigent weavers of French descent has been erected near Victoria Park.

As a Christian benefactor of Spitalfields, Mr. Montague's work deserves the cordial recognition of all who are interested in the diffusion of the Gospel among the working-classes. His address is 16, Addington-rd., Bow. G. H. P.

To Help the Blind.

THE forty-seventh annual meeting of the Home Teaching Society for the Blind was held at 22, Hyde Park Gardens a few days ago. The Right Hon. Viscount Midleton, who has for many years been its president, took the chair, and explained the way in which the work is being carried on by fourteen blind teachers at as many centres in and round London. Each worker has at his disposal a valuable library of books embossed in Moon and Braille types.

Referring to the objects of the Society, Sir John Stirling Maxwell, M.P., reminded its supporters that they had the satisfaction of knowing they were not doing what ought to be done by the State. Happily the State now took care of the education of blind children; but the lot of those who lost their sight in middle life must ever be most tragic, and the work of cheering them as this Society does could never be undertaken by the State.

Mr. Reginald MacLeod remarked that there were 3,556 blind people in the county of London, and that of these the Society had more than 1,800 on its registers. He called attention to the fact that by far the greatest part of its income went to maintain the blind teachers. Mr. Tadasu Yoshemoto, who is studying the best methods for assisting the blind of Japan, was much impressed with the value of the Home Teaching Society, and hoped at no distant time a similar institution would be established in his own country. Other speakers were Revs. Prebendary Ridgeway and G. F. Bateman.

Among Our Seamen.

MANY and incessant are the labours of the workers connected with the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission on behalf of the merchant seamen and fishermen.

Every Sunday morning a band of Christian young men may be seen at the Mission House, under the wise and energetic superintendence of Mr. J. Cleall, busily preparing bags of books, cards, Scripture portions, Gospels, &c., in various languages; and after prayer they go forth with heavy loads, bearing the precious Word of God.

From boat to boat they go, warmly welcomed, and in many cases gladly listened to, as kindly counsel is given. The friendly shake of the hand often unlocks the heart to unfold its own story, and the confession that they are tired of living without God. An invitation to the Bible-class and tea affords the opportunity needed to deal with the various obstacles in the minds of some of these sailors who are honestly striving to serve God, and yet have so few opportunities of learning the way. After tea, all make their way to the "Bethel," and the meetings, pervaded by the power and presence of God, have wrought a decided change in the lives of many.

A short time since we heard of the foundering of a boat with all hands quite near to us. Before leaving our harbour, the crew had received the usual gift of books, woollens, &c., as well as loving entreaties to "Seek the Lord while He may be found." We know not how many on board really accepted Christ. Shortly after we received a letter from a stranger, saying that they had picked up a New Testament with our mission stamp on it, which had been washed ashore from a wreck a mile or two from where the boat went down. New arrivals of boats are watched for day by day.

A Soul-Winning Singer.

MR. T. ARMON JONES.

THE earnest colleague of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry in the Christian Temperance Campaign is one of the most striking figures in present-day evangelism. His voice has carried messages of help and hope to thousands in all parts of the land.

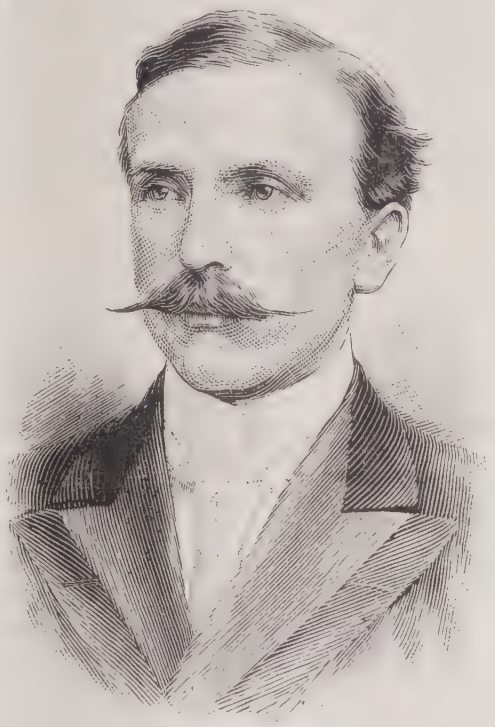
A native of North Wales, Mr. T. Armon Jones comes of a musical family, his father being known throughout Cambria as a powerful bass singer. From almost his earliest recollection, Mr. Armon Jones has been interested in and a student of music. His gifts marked him as likely to occupy a prominent position as a singer, and the world would doubtless have hailed him as a rare recruit for the operatic stage. Happily, at an early age his aspirations were ennobled by a change of heart, for when only twelve years old he tasted of the joys of salvation, and acknowledged that he was Christ's for ever.

Born and trained among a people who realize the power of Gospel song, and delight to utilize music as a vehicle for the expression of holy truths, the newly-converted lad quickly took a prominent place in the musical department of worship. He was associated with the Wesleyan body, but as time passed by he came to be regarded as "national property." While yet a youth, he was often chosen as a leader of choirs and the conductor of music at great religious gatherings. Wales, as all know, delights in trials of skill in musical matters, and young Armon Jones in youth and early manhood won no fewer than eighty-nine prizes in these competitions. In fact, he not only remained undefeated, butwas actually debarred from entering further contests, in order that other aspirants might have an opportunity to gain the eagerly-coveted prize. He was but twenty-one years of age when Dr. Parry, the famous teacher, appointed him to adjudicate in a contest of some twenty-eight choirs. It will be remembered that the popular Choir of Welsh Singers who visited America a few years ago included Mr. Armon Jones, who earned golden opinions, not only for his admirable singing from a technical point of view, but for the religious glow and fervour that so greatly added to the effectiveness of his delivery. It was during this trip that Mr. Armon Jones sang to the late President McKinley.

During the past six years, Mr. Jones has devoted himself to music, always with the ambition of better fitting himself to be a singer for the Lord Jesus Christ. In pursuance of his desire to perfect himself, he studied in the Royal Academy of Music, and manifested his skill by winning the bronze medal for singing, there being no fewer than 300 contestants. Engagements came plentifully; in the chief halls of the Metropolis his singing was greeted with rapturous applause, and won the praise of the critics; but he was never so much at home as when, in the sanctuary, he could deliver his message to hearts that were open to receive it. Mr. Armon Jones was a favourite singer of the late Dr. Parker's, and his voice has frequently been heard at the City Temple. On the occasion of the Coronation service, held at that popular place of assembly, he was selected to be soloist, and well he justified the choice.

With ripening manhood there came many alluring temptations. The prizes of the profession, the rich rewards, the worship of society—these could be his almost without an effort. In particular, the stage, with glitter and pomp, had its laurel crowns of popularity and its enormous salaries to proffer. But "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to Thy Word." Not in vain had been those solemn impressions of childhood, those earnest seekings after the Lord, those glorious realizations of acceptance in Christ. "Soon as my all I ventured on the atoning blood, the Holy Spirit entered, and I was born of God." Should the heart that loved God, and had fixed to follow Him, be content with the dross of worldliness? No.

But, the temptations had to be met and conquered, once for all; and the rightful decision was helped by the memory of a promise made to his mother on her death bed, that "he would never sing for the world, but would devote his talent to the glory of God and the good of mankind." During his preparation for his life-work, our friend has suffered not a few personal privations rather than break that sacred promise.



MR. T. ARMON JONES.

Turning his back, then, on these invitations from the theatrical world, Mr. Armon Jones sang "for Christ alone," and his record has been one of great effectiveness in his Master's work. In connection with religious undertakings in London and the provinces, he came rapidly to the front. There was such clearness in his delivery, such a happy commingling of finished art and Gospel simplicity, that multitudes flocked to hear him. There was no affectation about this new and notable singer, none of the posturing of the professional; more than a singer, he was, with modesty and self-effacement, an ambassador of God.

It was a brilliant plan that, at a later date, set Mr. Armon Jones in harness with Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, the distinguished temperance advocate. For the past four or five months they have been together, to the great gain of the abstinence cause. Their joint labours have had most helpful results. In the chief cities of the United Kingdom vast audiences have come together, and these have been thrilled both by preacher and singer. Many people, assuredly, were attracted by the well-known abilities of Mr. Jones as by the telling oratory of his esteemed colleague. In every place tributes to the singer's taste, skill, and devotion abounded. Choosing from many samples, we may quote the words of a Devonshire paper regarding the mission at Newton Abbot:—

> The power of song was demonstrated again and again. The solemn awe which rested upon the meetings when Mr. Jones sang, "We shall know Him by the prints of the nails in His hands," revealed how deeply his words touched many a heart. Mothers wept and prayed for wandering boys and girls as the singer gave with much pathos, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?"

Of Mr. Armon Jones' part, too, in the mission at Motherwell, it was said that—

> Nothing like it (the singing of Mr. Armon Jones) has ever been heard in Motherwell before. To very many it proved fully as attractive as Dr. Henry's speaking—high toned and powerful as that was. It was not merely the wonderful compass, power, and purity of his rich baritone voice, nor the evidence of high culture which his perfect control of it revealed; it was, above all, the soul and meaning he put into everything he sang, so that the simplest melody went straight to the hearts of the listeners. He sang, after a finished fashion, some of the masterpieces of sacred song; but it is probably his rendering of humbler productions that will best be remembered by the crowds. Not many who heard it will ever forget his rendering of "The Ninety and Nine," which seemed to bring before the listener the waywardness and despair of the wandering soul on the one hand, and the joy of the Saviour in its recovery on the other."

The campaign in which Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones are engaged is an arduous one, but it gains greatly by the fact that it is essentially religious. Indeed, it would be difficult to estimate how many have been won, not so much for abstinence, as for the Lord Jesus. Both speaker and singer lift the question on to the highest plane, and the greatest harmony exists in this choice partnership. To use Dr. Henry's own words:—"As a spiritual and soul-winning force, his ministry of song is well-nigh irresistible. Our comradeship is charming. We look forward to years of fellowship in service, if our lives are spared, and it be His will. The more the people hear Mr. Jones, the more they want to hear him. He improves every week in the service which he renders to this noble campaign."

Our readers will surely join in the prayer that this gifted singer and servant of God may long be used in seeking to win souls for Christ.

The Rest Giver.

O Soul, aweary of life's loss and pain,
By feverish aims and aching griefs possessed,
The voice of Jesus pleads yet once again—
"Come unto Me and I will give you rest."

Are sins like midnight heavy on your thought?
The future dark—by judgment fears oppressed,
His invitation comfort brings unsought—
"Come unto Me and I will give you rest."

When inward conflicts rend the soul apart,
And peace forsakes the spirit, storm-possessed,
No words like these can soothe the fainting heart—
"Come unto Me and I will give you rest."

What though with toil the weary hands hang down,
And growing years have lost their strength and zest?
Still for the heavy-laden light is sown—
"Come unto Me and I will give you rest."

Yea, when love's last farewells die out unheard,
And life's spent sunset darkens in the west,
Heaven opens with the music of His word—
"Come unto Me and I will give you rest."

The Leysian Mission.

ONE of the most important undertakings of Methodism in London is the Leysian Mission in City Road, N., which from small beginnings has gone steadily forward until new and extensive premises have become necessary. A convenient site having been secured, the foundation stones were laid on Wednesday, April 22, by Lord Strathcona, Sir Horace B. Marshall, and other supporters of the work. There was a large rally of friends from all parts of the country, particularly of Old Leysians. Sir G. H. Chubb presided.

A pithy review of the work was given by Mr. J. Southall, hon. sec., who reminded the assembly that the Mission originated with the Leys School, Cambridge, where Dr. Moulton started the Leys Christian Union. When members of that Union left the school, and came, as many of them did, to London, they felt that Christianity meant something more than looking after their own salvation, and they sought a sphere in which they might do active Christian work. After four hard years in Whitecross Street, the Mission was established in Errol Street, and now the time has come for its extension. The new site has cost £36,000, and the buildings which are proposed another £108,000.

Following the stone-laying came a public meeting in Wesley's Chapel. Mr. Albert Spicer, who presided, said there never was a time when there were so many earnest Christian men and women as there is at present trying to do God's work; but there never was a time when some departments of Christian work were so difficult as to-day. One of the reasons was the separation of different grades of society into different districts. Time was when people in the City stood by each other, acting and reacting on each other. That is now changed. Different grades of society are scattered into different districts, and that is a change as bad for those at the top as for those at the bottom. The efforts of the Mission are directed to fill in the gaps to some extent.

Canon Hensley Henson, who followed, observed that it was his singular privilege to enter into open and friendly fellowship with those who ought to be associated as fellow-workers in the great army of the Church of God. However dark the horizon may be at this moment, the clouds are going to lift, and the day is not far distant when the people of the great Christian Churches will feel it their duty to draw together for common work under the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. J. Ash Parsons, head of the settlement, announced that several residents of the West End are coming to assist. The work will be one of aggressive evangelization.

Church Army Anniversary.

FOR twenty-one years our work has been going on, and God has abundantly blessed the labours beyond our expectations. The committee are deeply thankful to the many readers of The Christian who have so generously supported us.

As you know, our staff is almost entirely honorary, so that scarcely any of the money given by the public goes towards paying salaries or working expenses.

We have now some 600 workers—working men and working women—who in different parts of the country are striving to win souls to Christ, many of them having given up large salaries and good prospects in life. There is scarcely any class of people with whom we are not in touch, and we have set apart special missioners for vans, prisons, barracks, workhouses, and reformatories. Our mission nurses work among the very poorest.

As a thankoffering to God for the many blessings given during the past twenty-one years, we are anxious to raise a sum of £10,000 to extend and push forward new departures.

We earnestly appeal for help in this direction.

Open-Air Preaching.

NOW that summer is rapidly approaching, I desire to ask some of the readers of The Christian whether they cannot help in preaching and teaching Christ in the open-air. On a recent Sunday I had a long walk to Hyde Park, near the Marble Arch. I was amply repaid in the opportunity given to speak to hundreds. Reaching the park about 3.30, I found eight different crowds advocating all kinds of subjects. Joining the St. James' Hall company, I was invited to take part in their goodly meeting. At its close I joined the Freethinkers' crowd, which was also large. The speaker, who had been on the stand for an hour and-a-half, was denouncing churches and parsons in the strongest terms.

Not content with this, he proceeded to say that "there was no crime that the Bible did not permit and sanction." I at once replied that such a statement was false, a lie, and in direct opposition to the testimony of the Bible from beginning to end. Being invited to speak, I then quoted the moral law forbidding murder, theft, adultery, false witness, &c., and concluded by adding the words of our Lord, that "as ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." The same speaker followed, but made no answer whatever to my proofs that what he had said was false and unjust. The sad part of it was that, in a crowd of fully 300 men, there was no protest made against this false witness concerning the Bible. I fear this arose from ignorance of the Word of God. Here is a fine opportunity for many who have to face the fact that numbers of the churches and chapels are more than half empty.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth Clibborn.

THE meetings conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Booth Clibborn at Portman Rooms, W., have indeed been seasons of gracious refreshing. Although by no means loudly heralded, the gatherings have already become widely known through the inspiration received by very many of the Lord's people, who have rallied each Thursday in increasing numbers. The absence of conventionality and the burning force of the truths set forth by the speakers had a deep spiritual influence. Not a few of the unconverted have been present, and seekers of various nationalities—British, French, Belgian, or Dutch—have been pointed to Christ.

On Thursday evening last, Mrs. Booth Clibborn's address on "We esteemed Him not" (Isa. liii. 3) was full of cogent argument and telling appeal. The speaker's long experience in soul-winning, amid the infidelity and misery of the great cities of the Continent, added to the interest, and the incidents and illustrations drawn from her plentiful store were as darts to the consciences of the godless or the half-hearted. Mr. Booth Clibborn's career has been one of romantic adventure in evangelism in some of the darkest places of Europe, and his stories of deliverance and of revival blessing brought encouragement to many hearts.

A correspondent writes: "There was no undue excitement, or working upon feelings, but a quiet calm. Truly the Great Searcher of hearts was in our midst. One trusts that many churches will welcome these two servants of God to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, and that a great revival will sweep over this dark London."

The meetings are to be held at Portman Rooms each Thursday, at 3 and 8, until May 21.

Of the meetings also conducted on Wednesday evenings at Dr. Barnardo's "Edinburgh Castle," at Limehouse, E., Mr. Walter Notman writes in terms of warm appreciation.

To Amend the Welsh Sunday Closing Act.—At the quarterly meetings of the Montgomeryshire Welsh Congregationalists, held at Llanfair-caereinion on April 14 and 14, a resolution was passed calling the attention of the Government to the need of further legislation in order to amend the Welsh Sunday Closing Act, so that the abuses in connection with the bonâfide travellers' clause may be done away with.

Baptist Spring Assembly.

THE first session of the Baptist Spring Assembly was held on Monday afternoon, when, after the customary devotional exercises, the retiring president (Rev. J. R. Wood) introduced as his successor Mr. Alderman George White, M.P. The annual report of the council was then presented.

The presidential address, given in the evening by Alderman George White, M.P., was a striking examination of "The Nonconformist Conscience in its Relation to our National Life." Political, social, and religious conditions were passed in review by one well qualified to pronounce on them. Alike on the questions of the housing of the poor, religious equality, and the Education difficulties, he showed his close touch with all that is passing.

With some pride, he said, the English Church in former days claimed to be the great bulwark of Protestantism; now it is fast becoming an entrenched fortress of Rome, and, from the vantage ground which the State itself provides, is attacking those verities of religion for which the martyrs suffered and which conscience compels us to defend. Time does not permit me to prove this—if I quote cases they will be challenged as isolated and unfair; but the fact that there are upwards of 7,000 clergymen members of the English Church Union whose teachings include High Mass, Vestments, Incense, Prayers for the Dead, the Mixed Chalice, and Confessional, is surely sufficient to prove the danger, especially when we know the character of their operations—as shown, for instance, in recent cases even in connection with the London School Board. Nothing that belongs to Rome either in belief or practice, is, so far as I can understand, eliminated from their creed.

Now, we have always stood for perfect religious liberty, and though our great ancestor, John Milton, "drew the line" at the Romanist, we cannot; but to see Romanists in a Protestant church taking the pay of the nation, and, under the disguise of Protestant teachers, insidiously undermining this faith in families and in schools, as well as in their public ministrations, touches the Nonconformist Conscience, and I think also the National Conscience, most strongly.

Past history teaches us there are several methods by which liberty of conscience can be vindicated. We can leave our country, and, our enemies would add, for our country's good. This the Pilgrim Fathers did, and, by planting at the corner of a building plot a school-house, under public control, where we should plant a public-house, under brewery control, they helped to bring the great Republic to the foremost place it holds to-day. Or we can allow the law to take its course, as did that noble band of 500 Scotch ministers when they walked away from the manse rather than submit, leaving behind them property to the value of £2,000,000 sterling and all the endeared associations of the manse and the church. Or we can join others in a revolution against ecclesiastical tyranny, as did the majority of our countrymen in 1688. These and other methods have all been adopted again and again in the history of nations. Choose whichever conscience dictates; but submit? Never!

Nothing could possibly happen so disastrous to religion and Nonconformists as cowardly submission. If we decline to stand in the breach, then all is lost, "until God shall make some true men." The young people of our churches know that the two great representative bodies of Baptists and Congregationalists have declared for resistance; they know that the strongest deputation of Free Churchmen which has in modern times waited upon a Prime Minister declared it would not submit; what will they think of our devotion to principle if now a small minority (glorious though it be) is all that remains in the day of trial?

Lovers of religious art will be interested in a beautiful large gravure, which has just been published by Nicolaus Lehmann, of Gabriel v. Max's famous picture, "The Great Physician" (Mark v. 41). (30s. 11, Ferdinandstrasse, Prague.)

The "May" Meetings.

Open-Air Mission Jubilee.

THE celebration, on Tuesday of last week, of the jubilee of the Open-Air Mission—to which we referred in our last issue—was marked by much enthusiasm on the part of the workers and friends. Expressions were heard on every hand of devout gratitude to God for the way by which He had led the Mission during the fifty years. Equally evident was the determination to make the occasion a stepping-stone to greater things in days to come. At the meeting in the morning the members received some wise counsel and helpful guidance from Rev. F. B. Meyer (who presided) and Rev. F. S. Webster. The afternoon was devoted more particularly to descriptions, by friends from a distance, of the work accomplished at different centres. As chairman, Sir Robert Anderson, K.C.B., gave an address full of encouragement; and was followed by Rev. John Davidson (Douglas), Rev. Dr. A. E. Joscelyne (Millom), Rev. C. L. Thornton-Duesbery (Barrow), and Mr. W. R. Lane.

In the evening Lord Kinnaird presided, and gave Romans i. 16 as a key-note for the proceedings. Recalling personal memories of early days, and fellow-labourers who had gone to their rest, he voiced the satisfaction of all that Mrs. John Macgregor and Mrs. Gawin Kirkham were able to be present. The spirit of the meeting, and of the effort which it represented, was manifest in the hearty responses as Lord Kinnaird rang out his declaration that the Gospel of Christ is the message delivered at every meeting held, and his adherence to the old-fashioned lines on which the Mission was founded. His words were again corroborated on every side as he spoke of the numerous openings for extension, and of the fact that there were men ready to devote themselves to the work, if the necessary financial support were forthcoming. An increase of the income to £5,000 a year would enable very much to be done.

The report submitted by Mr. Frank Cockrem abounded with facts showing that it was worthy of its title—"Blessing at Flood-Tide." It opened with a review of past years which will constitute a useful and valuable contribution to the history of aggressive Christian effort in the home mission field. The work for the past twelve months was dealt with under the heading, "The Wars of the Lord," and summed up fittingly in the words, "Now thanks be unto God, which always leadeth us in triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of His knowledge by us in every place."

Needs in Town and Village.

As an instance of the fruitfulness of the work, special emphasis was laid on the visit of eight evangelists, under the leadership of a member of committee, to Newcastle during the Midsummer Race Week. A large number of local helpers, including the Newcastle City Mission staff, rallied to the support of the visitors; and the blessing far exceeded that of past years—on the Racecourse; on the Town Moor, where a great fête is held; and in the Bigg Market at night. Mr. Cockrem mentioned that there was present in the meeting a brother who was, till eighteen months ago, an infidel lecturer at Newcastle, and who was turned to the Lord at these meetings.

"Is the need less?" he asked. Assuredly the lapse of half-a-century finds the Society face to face, not with a task fulfilled, but with a vast work only just begun, and of which the possibilities are well-nigh boundless. In our crowded cities there exists an awful welter of practical heathenism, a condition of things which only the Gospel of Christ can assuage or remove; and which, if it be not removed, threatens to engulf our beloved country in moral and spiritual ruin. The villages present a scarcely less urgent problem from the spiritual point of view, and well repay the devoted labour of the most ardent servants of God. "Heathenism" is hardly too strong a word to use of the state of many villages, when we have regard to the deplorable absence of reverence for the Lord's Day, the awful ignorance of many concerning the way of salvation, the spiritual carelessness and indifference even where the Gospel is preached, and the prevalence in hundreds of parishes of semi-Roman ritual and doctrine—teaching which obscures Christ, exalts the priest, and conducts the soul as by the attraction of the delusive mirage to a Dead Sea of soul-destroying error.

In graphic words Prebendary Fox recalled the beginnings of his own experience in the open air when the Mission was in its "teens." In the early seventies he had stood with Henry Bazely at the Oxford Martyrs' Memorial and in St. Giles' Fair; after which he had considerable practice in similar efforts in the Broadway and neighbouring courts at Westminster. He believed there was no training ground for preachers equal to the kerb-stone. In addition to the direct influence of such work, it was pointed out that the orderliness of holiday crowds in places of public resort, unknown a generation ago, is largely an indirect outcome of missionary effort.

A stirring address was given by Rev. W. Y. Fullerton (Leicester), and a few words from Mr. H. W. Maynard brought a profitable and stimulating meeting to a close.

A Call to Young Men.

CENTRAL Y.M.C.A.

EXETER HALL is always to be seen at its best when used for gatherings of the Central Y.M.C.A., whose home it is; and the wealth of young life which thronged it last Friday evening was only the latest in a long series of testimonies to the power exerted by the followers of Christ amid the business life of London. The occasion was the celebration of the fifty-ninth anniversary, and the appearance in the chair of the veteran president and founder (Sir George Williams) was the signal for an outburst of the deep feeling of affection entertained for him by all those whom he delights to describe as his young friends.

As has been the case for so many years, the report submitted by Mr. J. H. Putterill bristled with figures of the deepest moment to the future well-being and progress of the Church of God. The members number 2,197, who, with 885 associates, make a total of 3,082 young men banded together to seek the Kingdom of God in their own experience and among their fellows. Eleven meetings for Bible study are held weekly, with thirty-two of a more general character, and seventy-eight educational classes. In the junior section there are 126 members. For those too young to be entered on the roll, three meetings are held weekly, with ninety-five boys in attendance. The number of young men visiting the three centres—Exeter Hall, Aldersgate Street, and Cornhill—weekly is estimated at 14,000. The marked and gratifying increase in the attendances at the Bible study meetings was traced to the much valued co-operation of Rev. Dr. Pierson.

Welcome to the President.

A warm welcome having been extended to Sir George Williams on his return to London and to the head of the Association, he expressed the joy and gratitude with which he found himself once more among the members. He rejoiced that the past year had been one of activity and progress in the Y.M.C.A. all over the world. With the exception of the jubilee meeting in London, the largest international Y.M.C.A. gathering ever held was that at Christiania in August last; and almost without exception testimony was then given that the Association is becoming a permanent and valued feature of the life of many nations. It had given Sir George and others special satisfaction to take part in the enthusiastic celebration of the jubilee of the French Association.

The responsibilities imposed by the tokens received of Divine favour were pointed out and pressed home. We must, he said, go forward, cultivate large conceptions of our possibilities, and keep in touch with the life of the world. God is waiting not only to repeat but to multiply the manifestations of His power and blessing. If we do our part, God will assuredly do His, and an impression will be produced which will far transcend the most blessed achievements of the past.

The Example of Liverpool.

Coming with a heart full of gratitude to God for what has been accomplished in the direction of the purification of his own city, Archdeacon Madden (Liverpool) affirmed his belief in the Y.M.C.A., because (1) the members are enthused with a spirit of manly chivalry that makes for national righteousness and purity. One of the clamant needs of the present day was for Christian chivalry in the treatment of great questions connected with womanhood; and what has been done in Liverpool may be repeated in London.

An appeal was then made (2) for a holy conception of the responsibilities of Christian citizenship. We have no right to leave these things to other people. The country is ours. God has given it to us. It does not belong to the devil, the world, or the flesh. England is God's, and we must make it God's country. People want something to help them to live straight and to do what is honest, and to help them in their struggles with poverty and misery. Why should unbelieving Socialists be the men to sympathize with them? It is the Christian who is the true man, with a heart for God and the people.

(3) The religion of the members must not be of a jelly-fish, backboneless, creedless order, but must be an affair of the heart. No man could estimate the power for good of such an assembly if all were converted and consecrated to God.

The Association in God's Purpose.

Dr. A. T. Pierson spoke on "The Mission of the Y.M.C.A. in the Purpose of God." As a close and long student of history, he had been privileged to see the tangled skein of human events become symmetrical. History appeared the story of God's work among men. The attention of the audience was riveted as Dr. Pierson showed how the finger of God could be traced in the opening up, in the Victorian era, of the sphere for women's energies in Christian work, and that God next made a draft on his reserves by enlisting young people in large numbers in the furtherance of the Gospel. The Y.M.C.A. had then been followed naturally by the Y.W.C.A., and at a later period by the Young People's Society for Christian Endeavour, with its marvellous story of energy and expansion.

There is nothing, said Dr. Pierson, in the Association which interests me with the intensity of its place in the plan of God. The fact is that the Armageddon of the ages is upon us, and God needs all His reserves to be called to the front. So the great regiments of Christian men and women have been gathered as an organized body to move forward and meet the foe; and the great mass of Christian young men begin to feel the stupendous responsibilities of living, and of independent work for souls.

A helpful exposition was given of the position of lay and clerical elements in Christian service. It is a quite remarkable fact that, when "they were all scattered abroad" after the martyrdom of Stephen (Acts viii. 1), the words "except the apostles" should have been inserted to show that, whatever God may have use for in the way of preachers and teachers set apart, they are not intended to monopolize the business of witnessing for Christ, but only to lead the way for a Church obedient to the call of God.

The Protestant Alliance.

ENTHUSIASM in defence of Evangelical truth, and determination to resist Papal aggression, were manifested at two stirring meetings of the Protestant Alliance held at the Queen's Hall, W., on Wednesday last week.

Presiding at the afternoon gathering Colonel Wellesley Robinson protested against monks and nuns, expelled from France as national enemies, being welcomed to this country. As servants of the Pope, they are necessarily the foes of Protestantism, and of the best interests of the people. The Colonel contended that the Education Bill makes easier the advance of Rome in the sphere of education, and expressed the earnest hope that King Edward will not be prevailed upon to visit the Vatican.

THE PRETENSIONS OF ROME.

Rev. Dr. George Hanson, who followed, said that not infrequently toleration is a synonym for mere indifference. We must tolerate no "rival" to our Lord Jesus Christ. If His priestly prerogatives are filched from Him, if the Bible is forced to be read in the "dim, religious light" of mediæval superstition, if barriers are to be put between the soul and the free gift of God, then shall we not be found protesting? It should be remembered, while warring with Papal superstition, that some Roman Catholics are awakening to the enslaving character of the system, and efforts should be made to win individual Romanists to drink from the wells of salvation. This is no mere conflict regarding details of ceremonial. Rome abates no jot of her pretensions, but, on the other hand, has grown steadily worse since the days of Luther. It was Cardinal Wiseman who said of the English that "Indiscriminate Bible reading has transformed a mild, promising race into immoral infidels." It is for Protestants to uphold the truth without admixture of error, and to stand by Christ alone, and Christ always.

SHIELDING CLERICAL LAW-BREAKERS.

The next speaker, Rev. H. Lindsay Young, made a vigorous speech directed against the efforts of the Romanizing party in the Established Church to bring it into closer agreement with the idolatrous and apostate Church of Rome. Mr. Lindsay Young made an earnest protest against episcopal inaction in view of the introduction of Popish ceremony. In no church has the Mass been put down, but, on the contrary, the episcopal veto is used to shelter Romanizers. That veto should be abolished, for no corporation or individual should have the right to interpose between prosecutor and law-breaker. Dealing with various instances of error, the speaker pointed out that the Christian minister is an ambassador, a messenger of peace; but the priest, since he is to make a sacrificial offering, is useless, the great Sacrifice for sin having been made. Again, the altar suggests propitiation to be made, but the Lord's Table reminds us that we are His guests. In either case, the priest is an interloper.

The last speaker, Dr. William Minifie, said that the pages of Church history are stained with the blood of Rome's butchery, and instead of repenting of her crimes she only longs for the opportunity of repeating them. Romanism is the antithesis of true Christianity, and God shall bring it down.

THE ROYAL DECLARATION.

In the evening Mr. B. Nicholson, who presided over a large assembly, referred to the controversy regarding the projected "Memorial Communion" of the Army "Guild of the Holy Standard" in St. Paul's Cathedral. As The Times has said, the members of that guild "must be a strange species of Churchmen if 'the ordinary Communion service' cannot satisfy their natural desire to remember their fallen comrades."

A declaration of "firm adhesion to the Scriptural principles of the Reformation" was made by Rev. W. R. Mowll, who expressed the determination of Protestants to defend against all aggressions the Royal Declaration against transubstantiation, and the constitutional liberties and safeguards of the nation.

Rev. George Ensor urged that "people who want prayers for the dead should go where such prayers are allowed"; and Mr. T. H. Sloan, M.P., appealed for united action. Indeed, the time is coming when all Protestants will have to unite, for the battle of the Church of England is equally the battle of the Nonconformists. They will also have to get a Protestant Press. When a sound Protestant statement is uttered in the House of Commons one looks for it in vain in the papers next day. Men of Christian character must be elected to Parliament, men who will act up to their pledges. He, the speaker, sits on the Government side, but voted against the Education Bill as an endowment of Roman Catholicism.

Pastors' College Conference.

THE opening day of the Pastors' College Conference (April 20) was the fifth anniversary of the burning of the Metropolitan Tabernacle in 1898, when the fire was witnessed by hundreds of ministers who had been trained in the college. At the four o'clock prayer-meeting there was a large attendance of pastors, and, besides appropriate prayers, many good things were said about work and experience which would stimulate those engaged in active service.

In his annual statement, the president, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, says he believes in an educated ministry, but not in sacrificing spiritual life to scholastic equipment. "While the Lord continues to send to us godly men with preaching powers," he adds, "we will do our very best to furnish them during a three or four years' course with all that will prove most serviceable in battling with sin and building for God. . . Holy Ghost men, with a passion for souls, and an unshakeable faith in the inspired Word, are wanted, and the Pastors' College exists to send them forth."

There are now forty-eight students in training, some of whom will soon be entering on their first pastorates, three having been accepted for the foreign mission field during the year,

The total number of men educated in the college is now 1,045, of whom 646 are still active as pastors, missionaries, and evangelists. There are ninety-one without pastorates, but still engaged in Christian work, and thirty-one have returned to secular callings. Three have been educated for other denominations; and 145 have died, eleven of them during their student years. The clear increase in the membership of the associated churches for the year was 1,949; and the total number in fellowship was 83,795.

"PULPIT SUPPLIES."

At the meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday evening, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon again presided, when addresses were given by Revs. J. J. Bristow (East Finchley) and F. A. Jackson (Nottingham). When the Conference reassembled on Tuesday, the subject of the presidential address was "Pulpit Supplies"—supplies for which there were no substitutes, and without which it was impossible that a pulpit could be effectively maintained. Each must have the spirit of Jesus Christ. Paul was in bonds, but the Word of God was not bound. How greatly they needed the Spirit; they could not give what they did not possess. A well-laden ship lay low in the water; it contained coals, goods, and other things to enable it to cope with the perils of the sea; and all this and more the Spirit was to them. The Holy Spirit was the gift of gifts, and was to be had for the asking. The right text was not always readily found, but the Spirit had no end of ways of supplying the message. He would make them ready for every good work. Hard work was necessary; it was hard work listening to nothing. Like a tree at a perennial spring, they had to be refreshed themselves while refreshing others. While there must be no slovenly preparation, it would not do to prepare the head at the expense of the heart. The world called the pulpit Coward's Castle, but the faithful preacher was no coward. Closing with a word of cheer, the President added that what God had done He would do again. He would surpass Himself and surprise His saints. He kept the good wine till last.

On Wednesday, after a number of prayers had been offered, Prof. W. H. Gaussen gave an address,

"AN OPTIMIST ON PESSIMISM."

It was shown that strain and worry were more productive of depression than hard work. The Bible was full of the joy of life. Divine perfection was proved by the perfection of the moral law. The universe was a manifestation of love. They needed a keener sense of the sinfulness of sin. As regarded the struggle between good and evil, it was believed that good would overcome. Did that involve restoration? He believed in eternal punishment, and held that this was not inconsistent with Christian optimism. Pessimism was the doctrine of despair; Christianity said they would be more than conquerors. The Rev. H. A. Phillips (Cheltenham), then read a paper on "The Place of the Atonement in the Modern Ministry."

Mr. D. Cooper Apperly presided at the meeting of subscribers on Wednesday evening. He said that all who loved evangelistic work must love the Pastors' College, which did not manufacture ministers, but opened the door to such as possessed gifts. If ever there was a day when such men were needed, it was to-day. Ritualism and the influence of the priest being so much on the increase, the simple Gospel was needed. He did not much believe in the power of argument; if darkness was to be scattered they must have light; and Romanism must be superseded by the Gospel.

So far as the institution was concerned, Mr. Thomas Spurgeon was able to announce that all was well, and to say it with emphasis. The number of those who applied to enter was legion. The funds needed to be replenished, and if their means allowed they might have eighty students. In their methods and teachings they stood where the fathers stood; and the main lines of management which the founder laid down were adhered to. Addresses followed by Revs. H. D. Brown (Dublin), W. J. Hurlow (Walthamstow), and Dr. Barnardo. The latter spoke on the four lepers who discovered the forsaken camp at the siege of Samaria, and showed that the world's suffering could alone be supplied by the Gospel.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

On the reassembling on Thursday morning at eleven o'clock the President read a number of letters from absent members. One was from Pasteur Saillens (Paris), who thought France to be in the midst of a great crisis, and the probability seemed to be that this would result in a separation of Church and State, in which case there would be indeed a wide field opened for evangelistic work. Rev. G. T. Bailey read a paper on "The Minister a Sweet Savour of Christ." In a discussion of the Education Bill, that measure was very severely condemned. Rev. J. W. Ewing accused the Government of setting up a new religious test in the service of the State, and described the Bill as a mean assault on liberty of conscience.

Prof. Hackney said that the question resolves itself into "Is it right to pay for teaching which is anti-Christian?" Rev. W. Y. Fullerton (Leicester), who had joined the Opposition League, advocated passive resistance after John Bunyan's pattern, and they would succeed. Rev. D. J. Hiley (Bristol) was equally emphatic in denouncing the Act as an offence against conscience, and drew a vivid picture of the working of ritualism and popery in the country. While heartily disliking the Bill, Rev. A. G. Brown was not prepared to adopt any form of opposition except at the polls, but there was no sign of this view finding favour.

In the evening several ministers addressed the large audience. At the concluding session, on Friday morning, Rev. D. J. Hiley was elected Vice-President. The usual communion service followed, when Rev. T. W. Medhurst (Cardiff) preached a very forcible and most stimulating sermon from John x. 10. Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon's annual gift to each minister was a volume of her late husband's sermons.

The Nation's Peace Army.

PECULIAR interest always attaches to the annual gatherings of the International Christian Police Association, and the twentieth anniversary, celebrated last week, was memorable as demonstrating the large number of Christian men to be found in the force. The proceedings commenced on Wednesday and continued until Friday. For the meetings on Thursday Exeter Hall was required to accommodate the delegates and friends who were drawn not only from the Metropolis, but all parts of the kingdom.

The Association now has branches in connection with most of our forces at home, the Colonies, Dependencies, and some in the United States. To promote the welfare (temporal and spiritual) of policemen and their families is the first object of the Society, and this is done by providing classes and meetings for the study of God's Word, educational improvement, the principles of total abstinence, and purity of life. Homes, institutes, and orphanages are established at home, and aggressive mission enterprises are being carried on among the heathen.

PRAYER IN A CAB.

The opportunities of witnessing for Christ enjoyed by a Christian constable or officer are numerous and unique, and when used, cannot fail to bear fruit. One among many instances serves to show the good that is being done in this direction. A female prisoner, on being asked the reason of the change in her daily life, replied, "It was because the policeman who brought me here in a cab prayed all the way that I might be saved."

Throughout the year the London Police Institute has answered a useful purpose. The superintendents write: "We had 420 members of the Force staying at the Institute during the year, and we were especially glad to welcome some from abroad. We have had men from the Isle of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Canada, United States, Australia, Calcutta, Hong Kong, Singapore, Straits Settlements, and Gold Coast."

At the missionary meeting on Thursday afternoon, Lord Radstock, who presided, gave a terse and helpful exposition of Isa. vi., pointing out that when the prophet's humility of soul is realised, service for Christ is not self-energized, but is performed in the power of Him who declared "As My Father sent me, so send I you." Miss Tritton, the missionary secretary, gave an interesting review of the year's operations abroad, dwelling particularly on the work in Japan, which has gained the sympathy and support of those in authority. Miss Riddell and her helpers are greatly encouraged by the large numbers of men who attend the meetings and classes, and the appreciation shown by the warders and other officers.

Speaking from personal observation, Dr. Whitney gave further particulars of what is being done in Japan. The distribution of the Word especially had been followed by remarkable results. It was not uncommon to see thirty or forty people, on receiving copies of the Scriptures, commence to read aloud at once. Encouraging news from India was brought by Mrs. E. Nicholson, who spoke in hopeful terms of the various efforts which are being made to bring the police of our Eastern Dependency under the influence of the Gospel. More willing recipients of the Word of God could not be found anywhere than among the forces of India. Lord Radstock's scheme had benefited all classes, and the speaker voiced the gratitude of missionaries in India, whose hands have thus been strengthened in their labours.

Two subsequent meetings were held in the Large Hall, which was crowded on each occasion. The orchestra was occupied by the police choir, and 200 children from the police orphanages, and during the evening they added much enjoyment to the proceedings by their hearty rendering of sacred selections.

Lieutenant-General Sir Charles Warren, who presided at the first of these gatherings, compared the present extensive work of the Association with the meagre efforts made along these lines thirty years ago. Some practical words were spoken by Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield. With characteristic earnestness the speaker pleaded for personal effort to be made by the men, and addressed some forcible remarks (1) to the man who is always grumbling; (2) the man who never helps anyone; (3) the man whom God wants. Bishop Taylor Smith (Chaplain-General to the Forces) pleaded for loyalty to the Cross; and in brotherly and cordial words exhorted his hearers to "Love all men and fear no man." Addresses were also given by Dr. Pierson, Rev. J. J. Luce, and Dr. A. B. Stoney at the later gathering.

Hebrew Christian Testimony.

ON Friday last the annual meetings of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel were held. The anniversary was made the occasion of a large rally of friends, the spacious mission hall being filled to its utmost capacity with friends from far and near. At the afternoon gathering Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who presided, voiced the gratitude to God which filled the hearts of the workers for the numerous tokens of Divine favour which continue to rest upon the efforts being made to evangelize the Jews. He rejoiced that Mr. Baron and his helpers preached the old Gospel—Jesus Christ and Him crucified, risen, and ascended—and that the original lines on which the work commenced were being followed. The Chairman assured the missionaries that they enjoy the unabated confidence of a large circle of Christian friends who rejoice with them in their success, and sympathize with them in their discouragements.

The gratifying statement was made by Mr. A. Boake (treasurer) that never had the financial report shown a balance due to the bank or to the treasurer, indicating the wonderful way in which God has answered prayer for the means necessary for carrying on the work. The operations of the Mission cover a wider field than ever before, and require a larger number of agents; but, owing to the devoted interest of Mrs. Baron and two volunteers, there is no expenditure on secretarial duties.

In reviewing the year's efforts, Rev. David Baron said that he and his fellow-workers felt constrained to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" God had multiplied the number of helpers, and given them that house as a centre for reaching a greater number of the people for whose good they were devoting their lives. Outsiders had but little idea of the hours spent in prayer, and the remarkable response which had been given to these supplications from time to time. Concerning the efforts put forth in the Mission House, Mr. Baron spoke in hopeful terms of the interest with which the daily Bible study is being followed. On many occasions the accommodation of the reading room is severely taxed. The ministry of the Word at the evening evangelistic meetings and open-air gatherings on the Sabbath has been singularly fruitful; while in the course of disputations many misguided Jews have been helped to a full and clear recognition of the claims of Christ. Among the young people and children also there are many signs of the deep impression that is being made. In Hungary, Mr. Robert Feinsilber is experiencing much encouragement and blessing.

A sympathetic address was given by Rev. Francis Paynter, who emphasized the claims of the Jew upon the Christian Church, recognising the privileges and blessings which have come to believers through the "scattered nation." Some cordial words followed from Rev. R. Graves Walker and Pastor Frank H. White; and the meeting closed, as it commenced, with praise to God for the grace and strength vouchsafed to His servants in their endeavours to lead His chosen people into the light and liberty of Christian discipleship. Another gathering took place, and among those who gave addresses were Rabbi Lichtenstein, Rev. C. A. Schonberger, and a number of the missionaries.

Anglo-Indian Work.

IN view of the influence exercised over native thought and opinion by Anglo-Indians, it is evident that the evangelization of our fellow-countrymen in our great Eastern dependency is fraught with importance, not only for its own sake, but in the interest of missionary effort among the heathen. At the annual meeting of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, held on Friday last, at Exeter Hall, encouraging reports of the work were given.

Rev. John Forgan spoke of the services of Mr. Reginald Studd, whose evangelistic services have been signally owned of God. He has spoken both to Anglo-Indians and to native Christians. Mr. C. T. Studd, too, has also spent some months among the planters at Travancore; and a remarkable work has followed the labours of Rev. J. R. Hewison, late of Dharwar. Reference was also made to the labours of Mrs. Cummings, honorary evangelist, and to the return to India in renewed health of Rev. Isaac F. Row.

Mr. W. Stewart Thompson, general secretary, followed with an earnest appeal on behalf of the Society, pointing out that the operations should be considerably extended in order to meet the need.

Speaking from the chair, Sir Andrew Wingate argued that as the Government provides chaplains for the army and navy, the people of this country should provide spiritual help for their sons in our foreign possessions. As one who has personally observed the great success of missionary work, the speaker urged that those at home should give liberally of their substance to maintain such beneficent operations.

The next speaker, Rev. Dr. George Hanson, made touching reference to the position of young Englishmen in India deprived for years of all Christian fellowship. Moreover, India is surely a sacred trust to us for moral and spiritual ends, and we must seek with might and main to win the people for Christ. Rev. Alex. Connell added a further plea for the ever-increasing number of Anglo-Indians, on grounds both of Christianity and patriotism. We do not sufficiently realize what it means to be sent out into "the roaring blackness" which our young men have to face in the dark and distant places of the earth.

WORKERS FROM THE FIELD.

Rev. H. Rylands Brown (Darjeeling) speaking as one who had been sent out "to see how his brethren fare," said that it is not enough to provide services, there must be earnest effort to win the individual. In addition to pastoral work at Darjeeling, Mr. Rylands Brown has travelled largely into out-of-the-way places, preaching the Gospel and meeting with much encouragement. The need is not so much for "parsons," as for earnest men to go in and out among the people speaking of Christ.

Another worker from the field, Rev. J. R. Hewison, spoke of personal dealing with men at stations on the Indian railways. He found people who were commonly regarded as "hopeless," thirsting for the Gospel, and was able to meet the spiritual difficulty of many. In a long conversation in a train, a young Eurasian was led to trust the Lord Jesus Christ. Passing on to a waiting room Mr. Hewison found a sergeant, the slave of drink, and bent on suicide, and this man, too, was won. Another interesting case was that of a young commercial traveller, a Christian worker at home, but then a wanderer from the fold. After prayer and Bible reading, he was restored. On another occasion, Mr. Hewison, alighting from a train in the early morning, found a ragged and miserable man lying in the waiting-room, drunk, and described as "a pest." This man was the son of an English rector, but, step by step, had come down to a lamentable condition. He was handed over by the authorities to Mr. Hewison, who took him to the civil hospital, and, subsequently, spoke to him of the love of Christ. Tears sprang to the man's eyes, and he sought forgiveness for the past.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FOURTH WEEK IN ABERDEEN.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONERS.)

THE services at Aberdeen on Sabbath, April 19, again attracted enormous crowds. Nearly 1,000 persons were present in the morning before church hours, when Dr. TORREY gave an address to Christian Endeavourers. A large proportion of the audience, as might be expected, was composed of young men and young women, for whom the subject—"Love for Souls"—was specially appropriate.

In the afternoon only women were admitted to the Music Hall, but this did not prevent overcrowding, the building, spacious as it is, proving utterly inadequate for the great throng. An over-flow meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall, and was addressed by Rev. A. GRANT GIBB (Baptist Church), Rev. C. H. TODD (East U. F. Church) and others. A good number came forward at the close of the larger meeting and confessed Christ. The music hall was again packed with men at a later hour. The doors were opened an hour before the time of meeting, but the interval was by no means wearisome, as Mr. Alexander was early on the scene and kept the men singing. The people caught up the choruses readily. "Are you ready for the judgment day?" was sung with great heartiness. Dr. Torrey's subject was "What it costs not to be a Christian," and the address was a most earnest and convincing one.

MEETINGS STEADILY GROWING.

The week that has since passed has been in many respects the most interesting one of the whole mission. Every evening the Music Hall has been crowded to excess, while the afternoon meetings in the West United Free Church have steadily grown in size, till on Thursday and Friday it is estimated there were about 1,000 people present.

Midday meetings for business men were commenced on Tuesday in the South Parish Church. This was an entirely new departure in religious work in Aberdeen. On the first day only 200 men attended, but by the end of the week this number had more than doubled. Dr. Torrey's subject was, "Reasons why I believe the Bible to be the Word of God," and it is freely admitted that these lectures were the most able and eloquent defence of the "old views" on the Bible and inspiration ever heard in this city. Ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and other Christian workers have had their faith in the Bible confirmed and strengthened; while many others whose views were vague and uncertain have expressed gratitude for the help they have received.

A STUDENT'S DIFFICULTIES.

A student who had for a considerable time been in great doubt came to Dr. Torrey at the close of one of the lectures, and stated that his difficulties had been cleared away. At the same time he asked if Dr. Torrey thought it would help him to confess Christ publicly at one of the meetings. As, however, he was not perfectly clear on every point, he was advised to wait till this was the case. A day or two after he met Dr. Torrey, and told him the matter was now all settled, and expressed his intention of openly confessing Christ at the first opportunity.

It is becoming more and more evident that the special mission has taken hold of the community as no similar movement has done during the past quarter of a century. There is an absence of the excitement and outward display often associated with a revival; but, on the other hand, there is abundant proof of a deep and wide-spread concern regarding spiritual matters, which is bound to influence the religious life of the city for a long time to come. One of the outstanding features of the mission is the work of grace among the young. Two meetings for children have been held, and, as an outcome, nearly a thousand names have been handed in by workers. In addition to this, many young people have been dealt with at the adults' meetings, and have professed faith in Christ. Very interesting cases have been reported, showing that some at least of the children have an intelligent grasp of the elementary truths of the Gospel—and are seeking to serve their Saviour and Lord to the best of their knowledge and ability.

A PRACTICAL LITTLE HELPER.

One little fellow, about ten years of age, determined to do something to help on the work. By some means he got hold of type, set it up, and printed off a large number of invitations to the meetings on small slips of paper which he distributed among his schoolfellows. Here is a facsimile of the invitation :—

COME TO TORREY AND ALEXANDER
MISSION TO-NIGHT. 8PM.

"BILLY WAITIN' TO BE SAVED."

At the close of one of the children's services, a lady worker was moving along the corridor of the hall where a large number of children were being dealt with personally. She noticed two little boys standing with a wistful expression on their faces, and asked if they wanted anything. One of the boys replied, "Please ma'am, I have brought Billy; he's waitin' to be saved." The lady found that they had been waiting patiently for a long time, till some one should speak to them, and the boy who had brought his chum said he was going to bring others and get them saved too! One older boy has been the means of starting a Christian Endeavour Society among his school fellows, and about a dozen have already joined.

On Wednesday an excursion train was run from Elgin, bringing friends from Buckie, Findochty, Cullen, and other towns on the Moray Firth, to the number of four hundred. In these places a remarkable revival has been going on for some time, and several of the fishermen and others who have been on the scene, gave brief reports of the work at the afternoon meeting. In the evening they were present in large force, and entered into the spirit of the meeting with great heartiness. One young man from Buckie decided for Christ in the meeting that night.

A considerable number of conversions are recorded every night, the total now being about seven hundred; but of these, only a comparatively small proportion are men. Possibly this may arise from an innate aversion to show or ostentation in the matter of personal religion, preventing them from falling in with the method Dr. Torrey follows in dealing with inquirers in the meeting. Perhaps it is mere native "thrawnness."

A STRIKING CASE OF CONVERSION.

Still, there have been some very good cases of definite conversion amongst men. One reported by a minister has a general interest. This man had led a Godless life for many years, but about two months ago got into deep anxiety about his soul. To drown his anxiety he took to drink, but this, of course, only made matters worse. Latterly his case became so desperate that he declared he must either find Christ or drink himself to death. One Sunday night he was induced to attend the men's meeting in the Music Hall. While the service was in progress a prayer meeting was held in an adjoining hall. His wife, who was a Christian woman, went into the prayer meeting to wait for her husband; and while there it was borne in upon her in a special way that she ought to pray for the conversion of her husband that very night. She did so, and felt quite sure her prayer would be answered: and so it was. While the wife was praying in that room her husband was brought to Christ. When they got home the man took out a pack of cards he constantly carried in his pocket, and put them in the fire. In the course of his business he has occasion to travel daily on the railway, and was in the habit of playing cards in the train along with several other men. He knew what was before him the next day, but resolved to make a clear confession of the change in his heart and life at once. On the Monday he went by train as usual, and had hardly entered the compartment where his old companions were seated, when he was asked to produce his pack of cards. "My cards are burned," he informed them. "Oh," they answered, "your wife has been in your pockets again"—for his wife had burned several packs. "No," he replied, "I burned them myself, and intend never to handle cards again." Then and there he told them honestly the whole story of his conversion.

THE WORK IN BUSINESS HOUSES.

All over the city one hears of cases of conversion among different classes of employés, in shops, warehouses, and offices, as well as in families. A work of grace has been going on during the month among the telegraph messengers. One night, at a special meeting held for these lads, thirteen gave themselves to Christ, and others have been brought in since. Mr. Alexander proposed to a partner in a large place of business in the city, where 140 hands are employed, that a meeting might be arranged in the warehouse. The gentleman said he would think over the matter; but a day or two after he came to Mr. Alexander and said, "I expect we'll need to have that meeting, for the hands are all in a stir about religious matters." Six of them have already been converted, and the work shows signs of spreading.

Refreshed by their Saturday's rest, spent delightfully in a visit to Balmoral Castle on the loveliest of spring days, the evangelists were in highest power and happiest spirits for their last Sabbath in Aberdeen. It proved a great day, in every sense of the word.

TWO THOUSAND WORKERS INSPIRED.

At the first service of the day, held at 9.30 a.m., more than two thousand Christian workers assembled in the music hall, and a fine earnestness was manifested from the beginning. There was the flower of Christian energy in the audience, and it was "touched to fine issues" by the stirring address on Bible Study which Dr. Torrey delivered. Mr. Alexander started the meeting with a hymn, which has been blessed to many in Aberdeen—"My Father Knows"—and it was sung with splendid spirit. Dr. Torrey urged all workers to pray for a revival. "We have to leave the city on Wednesday, but if two or three people in every church—and I don't know when I have seen a city with so many churches—really hold on to God in prayer, you are certain to get a revival. God won't disappoint His people if they pray in earnest." He read a touching letter from a mother who had assembled her four children, and had the joy of bringing them all to the Saviour. The servant had also been converted, "and now we are a whole household loving and serving God." Said Dr. Torrey, "One of the first cares of a Christian woman ought to be to see that her servants are converted. We want more household religion." Mr. Alexander told of a German servant who had been addicted to swearing. One morning, however, the mistress came down and heard no noise in the kitchen. She thought the servant could not be down, but was pleasantly surprised when she came in very subdued and said she had been converted the night before.

[We have in reserve for next issue a fuller account of Dr. Torrey's services last Lord's Day, with contributions regarding the work of Mr. George Clarke, and other evangelists at home and in foreign lands.—ED.]

Other Evangelists at Work.

As It Was In 1859.

BANFFSHIRE.

We are glad to be in a position to give a somewhat detailed account of the phenomenal working of God's Spirit in Banffshire, referred to last week.

Last December, when Mr. James Macfarlane conducted a mission in Findochty, the work was stiff and unpromising. Yet the mission was not without apparent result, for about a dozen souls were saved. Still there were no signs on the horizon to indicate the near approach of such a great cloud of blessing as has burst on the place. No one could have then foretold its near advent. The mission was much like many others that are continually being carried on, and the general attitude of the community towards religious things was much the same as in many other places.

Of the converts in December about one-half were from Portessie, a fishing village about a mile and a-half distant, the others being resident in Findochty. Rev. George Ryves (the Wesleyan minister) and others were at the same time hard at work seeking for a revival in connection with their regular ministry in Portessie, and ere long the power of God began to show itself in very striking form in the village. Men and women were caught in the embrace of a heaven-sent revival and blessedly saved. Some young Findochty fishermen, who had been awakened but not converted at Mr. Macfarlane's December mission, and had no rest in their souls all the time between, went over to Portessie about a month ago and yielded themselves to the Lord. Their conversion happened at a most providential moment, for when Mr. Macfarlane arrived at Findochty at the beginning of this month, he found the fields white unto harvest.

At the very first meeting great anxiety was manifested by the unsaved; but judging that some of the Christian people did not seem in a truly prepared state, at the close he took occasion in a kindly way to say so. The result was that not a few went home and spent the whole night in prayer and confession. When the people gathered on the following evening, the changed condition of many was very noticeable, and the place felt as if it were charged with the power of God. When Mr. Macfarlane had finished speaking, he called upon someone to pray, and a brother rose and led in what will be to many a never-to-be-forgotten prayer. Before he had finished unburdening his heart before the Lord, the meeting was convulsed with tears and cries. Every will seemed to be subdued and melted.

The unconverted began to cry out for mercy, and the groans and wails of sin-stricken souls were heart-rending. Outside the building the sobs and cries of the people inside could be heard. The evangelist did his best amid the distress that prevailed to set before the anxious ones the way of life, and his heart was cheered as one and another who had been listening eagerly jumped to their feet, saying, "I'm saved," &c. Some of those who thus stood up had saved relatives in the meeting—parents, wives, &c.—and immediately that confession of Christ had been made these rushed forward to shake hands with them. Very soon the whole meeting was in an indescribable state of confusion. Many were rejoicing, while others sat still weeping and bemoaning their darkened condition.

A number of those who had found peace soon left the meeting to go round about their friends in the village to tell what God had done for their souls. The workers who stayed behind were kept busy dealing with the anxious till between eleven and twelve o'clock. Before leaving the hall, Mr. Macfarlane announced that a meeting would be held next forenoon at eleven. He felt assured that after that memorable night there would be no difficulty in getting an audience. His assurance was justified, for next morning at ten, when going along the street towards the hall, he found a great crowd near the head of the harbour, and in the centre of the crowd were two men, both preaching at the same time. An old man of seventy, who was in a high state of enthusiasm, took the evangelist by the hand. Then a great many others joined hands like children at school, and the crowd marched to the hall, where a meeting was held that is beyond being described.

For two hours it went on, during which singing, praying, weeping, testifying—all had their place, and very frequently overlapping each other. The evangelist had his turn of weeping as well. Such a wonderful sight he had never seen. While a hymn was being sung, a number of men, some of whom had been saved in their own homes, and some the night before in the Salvation Army Barracks—where also the power of God had been signally displayed—came marching in singing:—

> For the Lion of Judah will break every chain,
> And give us the victory again and again.

This put the copestone of interest on that marvellous meeting, and when at one o'clock the hall emptied itself, many who had been present went off, not to go home for dinner, but to testify from door to door.

The evening meeting was to have begun at eight o'clock, but at a quarter past six the hall was packed almost to suffocation. When Mr. Macfarlane arrived he saw that all thought of conducting the meeting according to the orthodox fashion must be abandoned, for preaching and witnessing were already going on in different parts of the hall. It was an hour and a-half before he got a chance of saying a word, and even then he had to cut his address short. Nearly everybody who was saved was eager and anxious to help every other person who was unsaved, and it was midnight before the meeting was closed.

The three days that followed were much the same, two meetings a day being held, the first one commencing at ten in the morning, lasting for three hours, and the second one commencing at six o'clock and lasting till midnight, the power of God manifesting itself from day to day.

It was arranged that on the Saturday there should be no forenoon meeting in the hall, as two new boats were to be launched at Portessie, and the custom is that all the men in the district gather on such an occasion to give their help. When the time for the launch arrived, something went wrong, and the launch could not take place. It had been intended to hold a meeting on board, but this purpose being frustrated, the men and lads, about 500 strong, formed themselves into a march, and sang through Portessie on their way home to Findochty. On reaching their own village, a great open-air meeting was held on the green, and many notable testimonies were given.

During the second week of the movement forenoon meetings could not be held, as the fishermen had to prepare for the fishing season, and nets and boats required to be put in order for their off-going. Every night, however, large and enthusiastic meetings were held, and glorious things were heard and seen. The united testimony of all who have been in touch with the movement, whether residents or visitors, is that they have never seen the like of it before.

One of the most charming features has been the reconciling of men who were at enmity. This, apart from anything else, is sufficient to have stamped it as the work of God. Men who had hated the very shadow of each other were to be seen falling into one another's arms, while others looked on and wept. Amity and good-will have taken the place of strife and spleen, and long-standing feuds have been buried deep in the tide of saving grace. Nothing but the Gospel of Christ, under the applying power of the Spirit of God, could have accomplished such wonders. The sight of men who could only scowl at each other embracing one another demonstrates in convincing fashion the divineness of the movement.

The work at Portessie has also been amazing. Mr. Ryves' ministry there, which has extended over several months, has from the first been fruitful. Towards the end of March, however, everything that had gone before was outdone by the inflow of saving power, numbers of men standing up to confess Christ. Feeling that nightly meetings should be started, Mr. Ryves announced that he would conduct such services, and from the first the chapel was crowded. The tidings of God's doings spread around, and from neighbouring villages people flocked to see for themselves the wonder-working power of God. The chapel became too small for the numbers that sought admission, and the Mission Hall was opened as well. Mr. Edward Hughes, from Barrow, preached in the hall, while Mr. Ryves was preaching in the chapel; and under the word of God souls were melted, subdued, saved, and set free. Nothing else began to be talked about, and the flame quickly spread.

Hundreds, both in Portessie and Findochty, have professed conversion; and Buckie and Port Gordon have also had a measure of saving power poured out on them. The ministers in the different places have thrown themselves heartily into the work, and Christians of all denominations have been labouring together with one heart and mind for the salvation of the lost. J. C.

Mr. A. E. Sims at Forest Gate.

Mr. Albert E. Sims, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a fifteen-days' mission at St. Andrew's, Free Church of England, Forest Gate, E. The difficulties were great, owing to the predominence of a strong sacerdotal party, but Mr. Sims was exactly the right man for the work. There were many instances of blessing at the adult meetings, and at the special services for the young a large number of young people surrendered to the Lord. The encouragement which, by the blessing of God, has attended these services has led the minister to resolve that the Evangelization Society be asked to sanction another mission. One immediate effect of the campaign has been the formation of a Building Fund for erecting a new church.

Mr. Edgar Dowty has conducted a series of services at Tanner's End Gospel Mission, Upper Edmonton, with much acceptance. The addresses were marked by earnestness and power.

At a series of special services conducted by Rev. J. Hilton Stowell (pastor) at Aylesbury Congregational Church, April 14-21, a large number of church members made renewed consecration to God, and over seventy new decisions for Christ were made. Steps are being taken to continue mission work permanently in the town.

Rev. Charles Elton (until lately Primitive Methodist minister at Tranent) and Mr. R. Craig, while on a holiday, conducted a three weeks' mission at Colmonell, Ayrshire. No such meetings had been attempted for twelve years, and the prospect was not promising. God, however, owned the effort put forth, and the interest and attendance were better than had been expected. Best of all, there was evidence of real blessing in the conversion of some and the quickening of others who had not before borne witness to the power of grace. R. C.

An eight-days' Gospel mission has been brought to a close in the Church Army Hall, Brunswick Street, Luton. The evangelist, Mr. Ernest Luce, who has lately returned from extended evangelistic tours in America, was warmly received, and his words have been a means of blessing to many a lost one and to backsliders. His address, "Blacklisted," created a deep impression on the congregation, as also did the discourse on "The Unpardonable Sin." On Sunday afternoon the address on "Interesting Facts and Figures of the Bible" was very much appreciated, as were the three lectures on the Bible.

Hymn—Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 202.

ALL young people who have the right use of their legs are very fond of walking, and talking as they walk; sometimes the talk is not very profitable. I have often heard conversations carried on, during a walk through the most lovely country, which were doing harm instead of good to both walkers and talkers, and I felt they needed to be reminded of our Lord's words—Matt. xii. 36, 37. A pleasant walk with a good companion, and a talk about good things or good people, is one of the best things both for body and soul, giving health and grace.

There is a great deal said in the Bible about walking; you find at the very beginning the story of "God walking in the Garden of Eden in the cool of the day" and talking with Adam and Eve (Gen. iii. 8). But the man and woman listened to the enticing talk of the tempter, and disobeyed their good God. The tempter often tries to whisper thoughts of evil in our ears as we walk nowadays. Oh, do not listen, for there is another, a still, small voice, the gentle voice of Jesus, speaking to your heart, and waiting to guide you as you walk.

Then we read of Enoch (Gen. v. 24), that good man who always walked with God, and kept so close to Him that one day he walked right up to heaven with Him, and did not have to die. We do not like to think of death; but we need not be afraid if we keep close to our Lord Jesus and listen as He speaks to our hearts by His Holy Spirit. He will lead us right through death, and it will only be like the gate into heaven (1 Cor. xv. 55-57). A great contrast to Enoch is found in the story about wicked Cain (Gen. iv. 11, 12), whose punishment was to have to walk through the world, on and on, without God. Oh, how miserable he was!

And so, all through the Bible, we find stories of people walking and talking. One we are all very fond of is about three youths who walked about in a blazing furnace, and were not burned because Jesus was walking with them. Sometimes we have to walk through difficult places in life almost as bad as fires; but no harm can come to us if our Saviour is with us, for we have a promise (Isa. xliii. 2, 3), and this reminds us of two wonderful walks God's people once took through the Red Sea and through the river Jordan (Psa. cxiv.).

But, after all, the very prettiest Bible story about a walk is the one in Luke xxiv. 13-35. Can you not picture that calm, cool spring evening of the first Lord's Day? Early that morning the Saviour had left the tomb; and these two friends, who did not know He had risen from the dead, started from Jerusalem with sad hearts, to walk some seven miles back to their own town, talking about their great disappointment. But if only they had thought about what the Bible had said, and remembered the words of Jesus, they would have been saved all their sorrow. They heard footsteps behind them, and someone catches them up and kindly asks them what is the matter? And then what a talk they had! How I wish I could have heard it! Afterwards the Stranger was persuaded to come in, and while He was asking God's blessing these two men discovered who He was; but He disappeared. They forgot all about their supper, and how tired they were, and off they started back all the seven miles to tell the good news!

The way we go through life is called our walk. The Psalmist says, "I will take heed to my ways"; "I will walk before the Lord" (Ps. xxxix. 1; cxvi. 9). How do we walk? Step by step, and we read that "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. xxxvii. 23).

Have you ever tried to walk in a thick fog? Once I was out in a London fog and passed my own house without knowing it. Can you tell where you are going if you walk in the dark, or with your eyes shut? A little boy once fell down a pit and kept walking and walking to find his way out, and when he was rescued he said, "I have walked miles and miles," but he had just been going round and round in the dark. One day I saw some dirty children walking along in the mud of the gutter. Oh, what a mess they were in! Now fog and darkness and dirt all mean sin; and if you walk in the way of sin, you will get wrong and lose the road to heaven. The Bible tells us to walk in the light; that is, to walk in the right ways with Jesus, who is the Light of the World (1 John i. 6 and 7). Ps. lxxxix. 15 is a good resolution for each of us to make; also Ps. lxxxvi. 11.

I will close by asking you to use this little prayer every day, and then you will be kept walking in God's way: "Cause me to hear Thy loving kindness in the morning, because in Thee do I trust. Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk, for I lift up my soul unto Thee" (Ps. cxliii. 8).

Two Schools.

OUR children, girl and boy—we never know what next they will be up to! Their playthings do not amuse them much; what they like is, to "do what grown-up people do." The other day Papa was repairing the garden wall—a healthful occupation! At once they were doing the same, making a wall of their own, with stay bricks, mortar taken out of mother earth, and what not. It was to be turned into a house, where, in due course, we were all invited to live.

Part of the wall is up now, but what will happen to it by such winds as we have lately had, nobody can tell. The children's latest idea is to cook, as Mamma cooks for the large family. Apples were to be the material of experiment. The work was at once put in hand with sugar and water. Early next morning, Mamma saw her little ones dividing the results of their efforts, to the benefit of those around them. Having tasted the stew, I must say that it was not so bad as I had expected.

A few moments later, the two children were safely established at the breakfast table, and, of course, the subject of conversation was the cooked apples and their merits. Said baby-girl wisely, "I see that I made one or two mistakes in my cooking. When I try something, I learn what is wrong, and then, next time, I do better." "That is the right way," said Mamma; "we must all try to do that, and let experience teach us." Even grown-up people, just as well as little children, should observe this. Every day Papa and Mamma learn something that they did not know before. Life is a big school, in which God has put us in order to learn, with His help, to do better and better that which He gives us to do. It is a preparation for the life before us in God's own beautiful heaven—just like a school is a preparation for the life which we have to live for God in this world. Those who think they know enough, and remain at the bottom of the class, are not doing right, and punish themselves first of all.

"And all their parents' money will be lost!" says practical baby-girl. "Yes," says Mamma; "as it is at the ordinary school, so it is in the school of life, only then much more is lost! Christ's sacrifice, His own life given—more precious than rubies and diamonds—is it not lost for those who will not learn from Him, accept from Him what He gives—that is, the Eternal and blessed Life! Dear children, whatever you do, whatever you lose, do not lose that, the best, the very best of the best, the one thing, the most necessary thing!" Lucy Thoumaian.

"In School and Playground": Five-minute talks with young people. By G. E. Morgan, M.A.—Concerning these talks, Rev. T. Waugh writes :—"They abound in happy illustrations, and are calculated to interest any child into whose hands they may be put. Not only so, but here is abundant suggestion and illustration for teachers and others who are seeking ideas for addresses to children. The book has therefore a two-fold excellency. It appeals to the child, and it is also useful to the teacher." (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, May 3.

THE ELDER BROTHER (Luke xv. 25-32).

OF the two, I think that the prodigal has attracted more of the interest and affection of the world than his elder brother. Esau is more attractive than Jacob; the publican, who smites on his breast, than the Pharisee, who rejoices that he is not as others. Is it because we are conscious of a closer inward affinity to the life of passion, than to that of outward decorum and respectability?

The elder son had a goodly heritage. (1) He had his father's companionship in all the changing seasons of the year, and all the following years of his life. "Son," said the father, "thou art ever with me." (2) He had the comfortable assurance that he had never at any time transgressed the commands and directions which his father gave, so that he was saved from the inward canker of bitter remorse. (3) He was at liberty to help himself, not only to a share of all that his father possessed, but to it all—"All that I have is thine." This is our heritage also, as the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. We may live always in the presence and with the companionship of God, talking over all that concerns our lives and His work; we, too, are at liberty to draw on His resources, for whatever we require, since all that He has is ours, and for our use, to be claimed by an hourly faith; we, also, may walk with Him in holy fellowship, which is unhindered by any conscious waywardness and backsliding of soul.

It is a solemn question to ask ourselves, "Can God our Father address us in such words as these?" Can we be regarded as ever beside Him, ever fulfilled with His grace and heavenly benediction, ever blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke? If not, we are really as much prodigals as our brethren, for we are throwing away, with prodigal and careless waste, opportunities which angels covet. Let us arise, and come back to our Father, and say, in the words of the wanderer, "Father, I have sinned . . . bring me back again into the old blessed companionship and fellowship, that I may live with Thee on earth, until Thou callest me to live with Thee for ever in heaven."

But all these possibilities were rendered nugatory by the condition of this man's inner heart. He was destitute of love. There is a goodness in the world, which is rigorously and austerely righteous; but it lacks loveliness, it is unloving, and unlovable. The Pharisees were its living examples; for, whilst they kept the commands of Moses with rigorous care, they murmured when they beheld the publicans and sinners gathering around the Master (vv. 1, 2).

Notice how loveless and selfish the spirit of the elder brother was! He was jealous of the welcome accorded to the prodigal. Instead of entering into it, he complained that so much should be lavished on one whose conduct had been so great a contrast to his own. He posed as aggrieved, slighted, and injured, because his own life had never received so exuberant an outburst of affection. He forgot all the years of unstinted generosity which had fallen to his experience. He forgot that weeks of growing weather are better than one tropical storm, for the nurturing of the fruits of the ground. After all, is it not better that friendship should pursue its even and unbroken course year by year, than that it should have its extravagant outbursts, preceded and followed by periods of estrangement, misunderstanding, and aloofness!

Notice how his selfish spirit alienated this soul from those who loved him—from the brother, "thy son," "he would not go in," and from the father, who had to come out to him. Selfishness always isolates. The spirit which magnifies itself for its own virtues, prides itself upon them in contrast to others, and counts them as a claim for so much consideration and reward, is not the spirit of true religion, however correct the exterior life may be.

Do we behave ourselves with love enough towards the returned prodigal? I met a sad case the other day of a man reclaimed after forty years of sin, whose place in the House of God was made impossible because he could not help expressing the gladness of his heart in Hallelujahs. Of course, it wasn't good form. The elder brothers didn't like it. But God was glad. The conventional is always at a discount when returned prodigals are about; but God says, "Enter into My joy, let My joy enter into you; let us make merry and be glad."

The Plot against Paul (Acts xxiii. 12-22).

Golden Text—Acts xxiii. 11.

Links between lessons.—(1) From the steps of the castle the Apostle was permitted to speak in his own defence before his accusers; result—renewed outburst of fury on the part of the Jews. (2) An order by the chiliarch for examination of the prisoner by the terrible ordeal of scourging; but Paul was saved from the tormentors by proclaiming himself, to the consternation of the Roman soldiery, a free-born Roman. (3) As another means of learning the facts of accusation a special trial before the Sanhedrim was demanded by the Chief Captain: result—confusion, uproar, almost bloodshed. (4) Paul rescued from the violence of the Jewish rulers by Roman soldiers, and kept in the Castle of Antonia for safety. The chiliarch was responsible for his life as a Roman citizen. Under the Roman rule the Jews had no longer authority to stone those who transgressed the Mosaic law; the Romans did not put to death for heresy. They had been baulked of their purpose twice (xxi. 31; xxiii. 10). Now a company of determined fanatics, with the approval of priests and elders, deliberately plotted the death of the Apostle.

Two Plans Laid Down on the Same Night.

I. The Lord's Plan.—"Paul, the prisoner," with nerves strained (xxii. 1-23), still feeling pain from the violence of the Jewish rulers (2, 10), discouraged because his way was barred on every side; the "Lord stood by him," called him by his name (with love in the tones, not xxii. 22). Comforted him. Commended him. Pledged him he should preach the Gospel in Rome in spite of all opposition. The cell was no longer dark or desolate. Power came with the command, "Be of good cheer."

II. The Jew's Plan.—Over forty plotters. No sleep, malice, hatred, murder, fanned into flame by misdirected zeal. Scheming to quench the Light of the Gospel, and kill the torch-bearer. Satan busy that night injecting into the minds of the men thoughts of evil for them to nurse into deeds of sin (Job v. 12).

Both Plans Carried out Next Day.

I. In the Plotters' Room, early, over forty men with right hands clasped, and left hands uplifted to Heaven took the solemn vow. Later, in the council a request was presented, to all appearance fair, reasonable, necessary, popular (15). Helpers in the council. Messengers next day sent for the Chiliarch's consent for the prisoner to be brought before the Sanhedrim. Forty anxious souls and willing hands "ready to kill," but the servant of the Lord is "covered in the shadow of His hand" (Isa. li. 16).

II. In the Castle Prison.—Paul. Psa. xxxvii. Later his nephew comes with news that rouses in the Chiliarch a soldier's spirit and a man's indignation (v. 20). Quick decision, caution, business (v. 25), but kindly courtesy withal (vv. 19, 21), was not offended—love prompted the youth. Nine o'clock, and a squadron of soldiers leave the palace gates, safeguarding an illustrious prisoner suitably mounted (v. 24). Next day, when the messengers from the Sanhedrim came to the Castle, the prisoner was well on his way to Cæsarea, safeguarded by mounted spearmen. On the road for Rome (Rom. xv. 23; Psa. xxxvii. 4).

Lessons.

1. Paul against forty clever, cunning, strong, determined, unscrupulous men meant defeat, capture, and certain death. But Paul and God meant human weakness linked with Almighty power for rescue, safety, service.

2. "The darkness hideth not from Thee" (Psa. cxxxix. 12). "All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." Paul was as safe after the men had laid their plot as he was before. (Psa. cxxi. 4; Heb. iv. 13, xiii. 6.)

3. Where there are human hearts ready to do His work, the Lord does not call in superhuman aids. An angel released Peter; a young man, Paul. An earthquake opened the prison gates (Acts xvi. 26).

4. The plot was used of God to further His purposes (Rom. viii. 28). God's plans cover means as well as ends. Paul was hastened and protected on his way to Rome by his Captain's overruling (Psa. lxxiii. 24).

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

DEVOTION TO DUTY.

When Holman Hunt determined to paint "The Scape Goat," he went to the wilderness of Zith, at the remote end of the Dead Sea. There he worked day by day, taking infinite pains to reproduce the marvellous Eastern colouring and the pathetic expression of patient and infinite suffering in the face of the animal. So dangerous was the task that Holman Hunt was compelled to work with a loaded gun in readiness under his left arm. Devotion to duty induced the painter to face any trial and overcome any obstacle, and the picture then produced has since comforted many a weary soul who has attempted to carry his own load of sin. The Apostle Paul, in his determination to fulfil his mission, was not easily turned aside, but remained undismayed even at the news that there were more than forty men who had bound themselves with an oath that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed him (v. 21).

GOD'S PROTECTING HAND.

Anyone who has caught a glow-worm will have noticed that the little insect can put out its light on the approach of danger. When the glow-worm is handled, the tiny beacon is extinguished, and under cover of darkness an escape is often effected. If removed, a glow-worm refrains from shedding its light for a long while, as if it were determined to protect itself until all danger had passed. God, who provides a way of escape for the little insect, and who saved the great Apostle by means of a nameless young man, will as surely protect us in our times of danger. The little affairs of life have often great meanings, and the protecting hand of God is upon us, to deliver us, even as Paul was delivered.

SPARED FOR A PURPOSE.

When James Garfield was working on the tow-path, he had a marvellous escape from drowning. One black night he fell into a canal, and, the boat sweeping on, no one knew of his mishap. Death seemed inevitable, when James seized a rope and drew himself, hand over hand, upon deck. Realizing that he had been saved as by a miracle, Garfield exclaimed, "It must have been God. I could not have saved myself. He thinks my life is worth saving, and I ought not to throw it away." That deliverance changed Garfield's heart, it changed his life, and, as we know, it eventually led to his being President of the United States. As the Lord appeared to the Apostle and told him that he should bear witness for Him in Rome; as to Garfield a vision was given—so God speaks to us all in His daily providence. Each one of us is being spared by His mercy for a definite purpose.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

Yielding to the earnest entreaty of many friends all over the United Kingdom, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry has decided to prolong his stay in this country till June, 1904, and to continue the temperance and evangelistic work in which he has been so signally blessed during the past twenty months.

During his sojourn in Great Britain he has probably addressed more people on the subject of temperance than any other advocate has ever done in the same length of time. By a moderate estimate the number of his hearers has exceeded a million. Many of his missions have been accompanied with great soul-saving power, so that, in addition to total abstinence pledges taken, large numbers of open confessions of Christ have taken place. In Falkirk alone nearly 200 such decisions were made. The spiritual and soul-winning features of his work become more and more prominent, and are most acceptable, not alone to temperance people, but to the churches. In some instances Dr. Henry and his singing colleague, Mr. T. Armon Jones, are being invited to return and conduct distinctively evangelistic campaigns. By putting this noble reform upon the most exalted Christian basis, the missions have everywhere generated marvellous moral and spiritual power; not only giving deep significance to pledge signing, but furnishing stimulus to all temperance and Christian workers.

Dr. Henry is essentially an evangelist. When in the Theological Seminary it was predicted by his classmates and professors that he would enter the evangelistic field. During his eighteen years of pastoral service he was always an aggressive soul-winner, not only in his own congregation and city, but in aiding his brother pastors in this blessed work. A great many of his friends feel he ought to devote himself exclusively to soul-saving endeavour. Whether he shall decide to do this or not, he is determined to make his present work tell in that direction. To enable him to do this, he desires to devote more time to one place, and so will plan to give from one week to a month to future missions, according to the size and need of the community.

Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones are now engaged consecutively till December 6, 1903, with many applications for 1904. Mr. Jones, his singing comrade, is not only a wonderful vocalist, but an ardent evangelistic force through his ministry of song. The prayers of God's people are invoked in behalf of His servants and their work.

HULL.

On Friday last Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones concluded a week's memorable mission in Hull. The crusade was begun in Prospect Street Presbyterian Church, the pastor of which is Rev. J. J. Mackay, who, with Mr. J. J. Hatch, U.K.A., organized the campaign. All the other meetings were held in the Anlaby Road Circus. The audiences increased every night, and had there been a second week the vast place would have been too small to contain the crowds.

Dr. Henry has again proved himself a complete master of his subject, and of his audiences. His knowledge is immense, his logic unassailable, and his eloquence sets all else on fire. Though present at every meeting, one cannot give others any idea of Dr. Henry's passion and power. It is impossible to describe a torrent when you are being carried along with it, or a tornado when you are swept off your feet by it, and after you get firmly on your feet again you are more conscious of the power of torrent and tornado than able or inclined to picture them. Hull audiences are somewhat hard to rouse to manifested enthusiasm, but Dr. Henry did rouse them.

Specially did he emphasize the Scriptural aspects of the temperance cause. In proclaiming and proving the Bible to be "a total abstinence book," and laying his foundations on the bed-rock of Scripture, he was able to use the highest motive power. The impression at times was so deep that the audience was awed, and the intense silence was more eloquent than the loudest cheers could have been. The campaign closed with an illustrated lecture on "Public-house Life in America," which was vivid, suggestive, practical, and powerful.

Mr. Armon Jones sang three or four times each evening, and also at afternoon meetings on the Sabbath and Thursday, the latter a women's meeting. He has a magnificent voice, manifests the highest training and skill, and puts his whole soul into his singing. He roused enthusiasm, touched hearts, gave visions of glory, led to decisions for Christ, and inspired for service. One never heard better or more effective solos in Christian work.

The climax of the whole mission in power and blessing was reached on Thursday evening. That night Dr. Henry dealt with "Gospel Dynamics"—the Bible, the precious Blood of Christ, prayer, and the filling of the Spirit. The impression made was deep. The writer never attended a temperance meeting that was marked by such spiritual power. Scores professed to step out on the Lord's side.

On the closing night Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones received a unanimous invitation to return to Hull for a fortnight's mission as early as possible. They will be warmly welcomed.

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.—To the delight and edification of large gatherings, Rev. J. P. Gledstone has given addresses on two successive Mondays, on the respective careers of George Whitefield and John Wesley. Mr. Gledstone is so well versed in the records of the eighteenth-century revival that he weaves a wealth of incident and illustration into his stimulating talks upon the subject. On Monday last, he drew many lessons for present-day workers from the life of Wesley, dwelling especially on his open-air preaching. Mr. Barry Wake aptly followed with a vivid description of soul-winning effort on Epsom Downs during the recent race-meeting.

Personalia.

Dr. BAEDEKER returned to England on Friday last. Our friend encountered rough seas, which somewhat distressed him physically.

Mrs. HENRY COOK, superintendent of the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission, was recently married to Mr. J. A. Cleall, a gentleman well known for his evangelistic work in the Portsmouth district. Our readers will be glad to hear that this mission, so long carried on under great difficulties by Mrs. Cook alone, has been greatly strengthened by the devoted labours of Mr. Cleall, who will continue to carry on the work on the lines laid down by the beloved founder, Henry Cook.

Rev. W. EVANS, B.D., one of the Professors in the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, and pastor of a Congregational Church in that city, is proposing to spend July and August in this country, and will be glad to occupy available pulpits during his visit. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan says of him: "I have the greatest pleasure and satisfaction in recommending Mr. Evans. I look to him as one of the coming men among the Congregational churches on this side of the Atlantic." His arrangements are in the hands of Rev. Albert Swift, 112, East Dulwich Grove, S.E.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN.—The well-known aged Rabbi, whose conversion and writings have attracted much attention on the Continent, is now, together with his wife, on a brief visit to London. In order to give his friends, and all who are interested in the spread of the Gospel among the Jews, an opportunity of hearing him, a special meeting has been arranged in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C., for Thursday evening, May 14, 7 p.m. General Halliday will preside, and several well-known friends of Israel will take part. Tickets can be had from the hon. sec., Rev. D. Baron, 23, Boscastle Road, N.W.

The Tyndal Bible School.—The classes of this school are carried on entirely by postal correspondence, and thus afford to Bible students, in all parts, the opportunity of united study of the Word of God. Rev. Robt. Middleton, of Norwich, has consented to conduct a special course of Bible study during the summer term, commencing on May 2, on "The Church and the Second Coming of Christ." Particulars may be obtained by enclosing a stamp to Miss Mason, The Tyndal Bible School, West Norwood, London, S.E.

Missionaries at Algiers.—Mr. W. Summers, of Tangier, writes:—"Permit me to correct two inaccuracies in the very full account given of our Missionary Conference at Algiers in your issue of April 9. I am represented as saying that the late Miss Herdman, of Fez, accomplished a distribution of 300,000 copies of Scripture. It should have been that she achieved the remarkable total of 30,000. The sentence, 'There were many unquestionable conversions—not less than a hundred—a large proportion of whom she had never seen,' should be amended thus: 'Not less than a hundred professed conversion, a large proportion of whom she had never seen, and many of them are undoubted conversions.' Thanking you for the weekly instruction and refreshing THE CHRISTIAN brings us in these thirsty lands." In the same report, Mr. Lamb's name was in error given as Mr. Lacub—emphasizing the importance of proper names always being written with great plainness. This shows, by the way, that it is a mistake to presume that editors and printers will read correctly names that are not clearly written. R. C. M.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey. Many would read with pain the statement in Monday's papers that Mr. Sankey, having lately undergone a surgical operation, has become "totally and permanently blind." It is some relief to be able still to pray that God may spare to our dear friend the pleasures of sight; for a cablegram to us on Tuesday morning was slightly less despairing :—"Little change; eyes little hope."

The May Meetings. Owing to great pressure upon our space, we are reluctantly compelled to hold over a number of reports of May Meetings, including those of the Ragged School Union, the Church Missionary Society, Miss Weston's Work, and the International Bible Reading Association. It is cheering to note that at these and other gatherings the reports of the year's operations contained much intelligence that should cheer the Lord's people and stimulate to continued effort.

The Charm of Bible Study. One of Mr. Moody's books bears the title, "Pleasure and Profit in Bible Study." It is a suggestive title and a true one too, for there is no greater pleasure than that which Bible study affords. We doubt if anything else could have filled Exeter Hall from end to end on the most awkward night of the week, as it has been filled for so many weeks at the Bible lectures of Dr. Pierson. The success of that experiment might set many preachers and teachers thinking. We believe that very many people who are tired to death of ordinary sermons would rally to an exposition of the Word of God. Certainly people need definite Bible instruction to preserve them from error. It is the ill-instructed people in Scriptural truth who readily fall victims to heresy. A Sunday sermon replaced by a definite thorough Bible study, would help to fill many a church which is but scantily attended.

Long and Short Pastorates. The brilliant and thorough paper read by Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., at the Baptist Union meeting last week, on "The Present State of the Ministry," has an application to a much wider audience than that to which it was immediately addressed. That part of it, in particular, which dealt with long and short pastorates is worthy the consideration of all the churches. Very few men are capable of sustaining a pastorate in one place for a long number of years. In course of time the voice becomes familiar, and the truth, as proclaimed, loses its power of surprise and grip over an audience. We are afraid Mr. Greenhough speaks for many pastors in all churches, when he declares that a change of sphere is desired by them, but they are compelled to remain in the old place because no other door is opened. This could, in part, be remedied by the establishment of a board of interchange, where, with perfect honour and frankness, the question of suitable removals might be considered. The policy of isolated church life needs exchanging for one of mutual helpfulness and intercourse. In this way many difficulties would disappear.

A Worker's Best Days. We were pleased to note the applause with which the remark of an eminent Christian leader was greeted last week, when he declared that so far from a minister being regarded as past work at fifty, his years from forty-five to sixty ought to be regarded as his very best for ripeness, energy, wisdom, and truest success. Of late years there has been an unreasonable disposition to shelve men who have reached the age of fifty in favour of quite young men, whose enthusiasm is supposed to be equal to all demands made upon them. Wisdom and experience are important factors in Christian work, and these only come with years. Churches need to take care that they are not caught with the rush and superficiality of the time. Tried and true men are worth very much to any community, and churches should recognise this and act upon it.

The Need of Spiritual Force. Bulk is not necessarily a sign of strength. Indeed, a thing may be all the weaker because of its size. Huge crowds and big organizations do not always imply real spiritual force. All depends upon what is behind these things. Crowds drawn to church by means which appeal to comfort, æstheticism, and the like, are generally lacking in self-denial. Real spiritual power is never associated with what is too easy. The man who drifts into the church upon the languorous tide of an easy offer is never likely to be depended upon in time of stress. In the olden time the men who stood most firmly were those who paid the price of belonging to Christ. And this must ever be true.

Conscience or Opportunism. In his presidential address at the session of the Baptist Union, Mr. George White, M.P., speaking on the subject of The Nonconformist Conscience in its relation to our National Life, dealt vigorously with the education question, and the attempts made "to give permanence to the 130,000 licensed temptations which exist around us." In so doing, he laid down some broad and undeniable principles, of which in these days of political opportunism it is well to take careful note. Alluding to the public aspect of the compensation question, he characterised the drink trade as "the greatest plague-spot on our civilization, hindering the progress of every good thing, and aggravating the effect of every evil thing," and, he added, what ought to be the motto of all noble and righteous municipal and national life :—

"NO MAN CAN HAVE VESTED RIGHTS IN WRONG-DOING."

And a word to the citizen and the Christian followed :—

It mattered not whether it was the tyranny of a despotic ruler or a despotic majority in Parliament which stepped in between the conscience and God. To both alike he would say, "Stand back, this is holy ground." While they worked for social and political changes they must never forget that it was the character and the life of the individual upon which true national greatness could alone be built. This is the surest antidote to priestcraft.

Scotland and Drink. Mr. Sherwell's paper read before the Society for the Study of Inebriety throws a very painful light upon the condition of things over the Border in regard to drink and crime. The writer states that, although temperance sentiment is undoubtedly increasing, the consumption of intoxicants is growing largely, the average consumption of spirits now being 1·76 gallon per head of the entire population. It goes without saying that crime is increasing proportionately. During the last five years only, the crimes due to drink have increased from 360 per 10,000 to 417. While the population has increased only 4 per cent., the number of persons charged has increased 21 per cent. So, too, insanity, and the death-rate from delirium tremens and cerebral diseases have gone up to a startling degree. Mr. Sherwell thinks the remedy lies "largely in a readjustment of the legislative arrangements"; but in taking this view he has apparently failed to allow for a Premier and a crowd of Members of Parliament who are tied hand and foot to the Juggernaut car of the drink trade.

A Vivid Object Lesson. Outside some of the chief Parisian railway stations there are now being displayed certain physiological charts, setting forth, in a vivid manner, by means of natural colours, the state of the bodily organs in health, and as affected by alcohol. Such representations strike people far more forcibly than mere verbal descriptions. It is an admirable idea. We should like to see charts similar to these employed in all our day schools, so that even children might understand, at their most impressionable age, how the body is ravaged by the use of alcohol. In view of the terrible effects of strong drink upon the population, it would be a wise piece of legislation to make definite teaching upon this subject compulsory in all schools. Children would then see how drink defiles and ruins the handiwork of God.

Building from the Top. The subject of physical deterioration of our people is being unpleasantly thrust upon us from several sides. Already two official reports have been issued this year. Following these comes a striking article in the current Nineteenth Century, in which figures tell a sorry tale. There can be no doubt that the recruiting and medical reports show a serious decline in physical robustness. If this is unchecked, it means a serious thing for the country. But what is the remedy? Nearly all advocate military or naval training, or some other form of physical exercise, but the ultimate causes are untouched by these reformers. The body suffers because the soul has first been wounded. The moral life of the people—at the top, as the Bishop of Kensington told us a day or two ago, as well as at the bottom—is corrupted. The growing religious indifference, the prevalence of drinking habits, the growth of the social evil, and other things of this kind are telling upon the physique of the people. The radical remedy for this decline is a return to God. Above all things else England needs for the whole of her life a religious revival.

Thanks be to God. Is there any doubt as to the issue of our warfare? Nay, verily, thanks be to God. An esteemed correspondent writes:—

> What a joyous hope we have! The devil will not always have it his own way. Psalm ii. is in the Book; and "the Scripture cannot be broken." Praise the Lord, we fight not as those who beat the air; we know the victory is on our side.

We shall overcome, though not by any power of our own; rather because of the blood of the Lamb, and because of the word of our testimony, loving not our lives even unto death (see Rev. xii. 11, R.V.).

"One Fold and One Shepherd." It is lamentable that there still should be room for such an appeal as that made by the Bishop of Wellington, New Zealand, in preaching at St. Paul's Cathedral last week, a plea "for the frank acknowledgment of the Free Churches as part of the Church of Jesus Christ." Rev. Dr. Wallis said that the union for which he pleaded was not "a dead and cold uniformity," but a unity of diverse element, not a unison, but a harmony, with > no destruction of the truth, or abnegation of distinctive beliefs, but a frank acceptance of the possibility of being in the faith, while the verbal expression of the faith may vary.

The Bishop added that with those who are doing the Master's work there should not be either interference or intrusion; and in illustration he commented upon the fact that the Free Church missions in the South Sea Islands have 160,000 communicants as compared with 14,000 connected with those of the Church of England. Such an utterance breathes the true Spirit of Christ: "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold" (John x. 16), and it will find a prayerful echo in many a heart.

Sound Mission Policy. We direct attention to some excerpts, given on page 14, from two remarkable articles in the current issue of the Church Missionary Intelligencer. While welcoming the earnest sympathy with missions shown by the distinguished writers, whose thorough investigations enable them fully to answer the cavillings of critics of the globe-trot order, we specially welcome Sir Andrew Wingate's remark that the Church Missionary Society do not consecrate their Indian churches, but hold them in trust for the Christian congregations of the future. It is easy to see the force of this arrangement, as a definite encouragement to the development of native churches on Indian lines.

Denominationalism Abroad. To plant a denomination in India is a small thing; to plant the Church of Christ is to do God's work in the best way. We rejoice to see evidences of prevailing sympathy on the part of C.M.S. workers and advisers with principles and plans that are so obviously promotive of spiritual life and prosperity in our great Eastern Dependency. This subject is one on which all churches need to seek light and wisdom from above, that the progress of the Gospel be not hindered.

An Indian on Missions. A native Indian barrister, writing in the Asiatic Quarterly Review, deals ably with the present position of Christian Missions in India. He expresses an opinion that very many educated Hindoos are Christians at heart, but fail to make an open profession of faith on account of the persecution and sacrifices which such a step still involves. He finds that much missionary effort fails from various causes, but as to the largest proportion of it, he is satisfied in regard to both the methods and the results, and he is able to anticipate a grand future for Christianity in the Dependency, as he sees undoubted signs of a great and early awakening. After a careful study of mission work, he prophesies that there soon will be:—

> A revival as notable as any in the history of Christianity, which will induce the people to make open declaration of belief in a faith which many have already accepted, though they now refuse to give utterance to the fact with their lips . . .
> I would beseech the English people not to be too eager for immediate results, for it often places the missionary in a false position in trying to secure converts unworthy the name of Christ.

That this prophecy may soon be fulfilled should be the subject of every Christian's prayers.

Church and State in France. The Bill for the separation of Church and State which M. de Pressensé and fifty-six of his fellow deputies intend to lay upon the table may not become law, but the facts of its preparation, and of its adoption by a large number of representatives, points to the steady development in France of the idea of "a national and schismatic church." It points also to the fact that the movement across the Channel is not against religion, but that, as is clearly recognized by those who thoughtfully study French life and thought, "France has become anti-clerical in self-defence." This comprehensive measure has been carefully prepared on the broadest principles of civil and religious liberty, and those who are familiar with the history of the Romish system and of its enslavement of the intellect, and its moral and political tyranny in France, as everywhere else, will watch with interest this further effort to lift the shackles from the people.

The Church and the Congo. After the strong resolutions passed by certain religious bodies which have missionary stations on the Congo, it will now be impossible for anyone to repeat the charge that they are guilty of cowardly silence concerning the atrocities which have been recently made public. As Mr. Stephens, a Congo missionary, pointed out on Thursday last, news of these villainies reached some of the Congo missionaries, not directly, but through the English papers People forget the vastness of the distances separating workers in Africa, as also the fact that there are few means of communication between them. Now the facts are all known, an unmistakable stand has been taken. It is time that the Congo officials should be compelled to carry out the provisions of the Berlin Conference with regard to the treatment of natives. The apathy of our own Foreign Office in the matter is anything but creditable.

The Drifting Church. With singular frankness, admitting that "England is not yet ready for the full Catholic faith and for full Catholic ritual everywhere," the Church Times says that the waiting attitude is no excuse for underhandedness, or subtlety, or disguise as to what that faith and ritual are. It recommends, therefore, "an assault upon the enemy's citadel," for which movement "now is the day," the main body of the clergy, hitherto inarticulate, having been given "stammering speech" by the Education Bill! Referring to "the doctrines of the Real Presence, the Eucharistic Sacrifice, the Ministry of Reconciliation, and the perfecting of Saints by the prayers of the faithful," our contemporary counsels patience "until the permeation of these vital doctrines has affected the main body of English Church life." The object behind all this is admitted to be "to Catholicize England," but not "to bring it to the feet of the Papacy." For all practical purposes, however, the two ends would appear to be near akin.

Dr. Ingram and the Mass. The speech of the Bishop of London at the Diocesan Conference last week contained some strong things respecting the excesses which have been too long permitted in many Anglican churches. His lordship is determined to end these in his diocese, and in this resolution he will have the sympathy of all fair-minded Christians, since such practices are well described by him as "disloyal." But when the Bishop came to a direct appeal to the Evangelical portion of his audience upon the question of the "Mass," he gracefully evaded the heart of the whole matter. The Evangelical opposition to the Mass does not turn upon the number of the communicants nor upon the time of the communion, but upon the character of the service. The crux of the whole thing lies here. If all vestments were omitted, and all communion services were held in the evening, Evangelicals could never be content whilst the doctrine of the Communion took the form of belief in the Real Presence as understood by Romanists and Romanizers.

Lost People. These words are not at the present moment used to describe moral or spiritual conditions; but to point to the deplorable fact that, concurrently with an epidemic of suicide, strange disappearances are ever and anon reported. That advertisements and offers of rewards yield so little may favour the view that some of the "lost" are willingly so. A police surgeon has affirmed that the "mystery mania" is spreading all over the country:—

> People are growing more and more neurotic; their morbid fancies tell them that it is romantic to go away without informing their friends of their intentions.

At the same time, we are more disposed to see the hand of villainy and sin in these disappearances. The activity of the National Vigilance Society, and such like organizations, has not only harassed the agents of evil, but driven them to measures which can only be frustrated and detected by ever-increasing watchfulness and care.

Interest or Usury? Preaching recently in connection with the Christian Social Union, Rev. Dr. Rashdall, preacher at Lincoln's Inn, took for his subject "The Morality of Interest and Investment." The question is one which troubles many Christian men and women who are anxious not to base their investments upon the needs and necessities of their neighbour. Setting aside altogether such points as the justification of capitalism and the morality or otherwise of taking interest, it must be admitted that no Christian can shirk his or her responsibility as a shareholder in any company that works its employees over long hours and gives them unusually low wages, or in brewing and distilling businesses. Neither can the responsibility be escaped when money is placed in loans to States guilty of cruel and abominable tyranny.

God Asking Questions.

"WHAT is that in thine hand?" God is ever asking questions, and, as addressed to the individual, He awaits intently the answer.

The sacred page teems with this mode of appeal, from the earliest history, as recorded in the Book of Genesis, to the last word spoken from the throne of the Eternal in the Book of the Revelation. God would in this way startle men, all men, everywhere, into attention and reflection. He would have men stand still and consider. As one has aptly said, "God Himself is a great thinker, but His thoughts, like His ways, are high as heaven above ours, and their number towards us like the sand which cannot be reckoned. Happy, indeed, are those who can say with the Psalmist, 'I am poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh upon me.'"

God would therefore move us to thought by His oft-recurring and personal questions. How pointed and practical—"Adam, where art thou?" and to Eve, "What is this that thou hast done?" and to their son, "Where is Abel thy brother?"—questions, each of them, which have their application to ourselves to-day. All through the Old Testament, we listen to the voice of God by the mouth of His servants, as when Jeremiah asks: "If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? . . how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?"

But note especially what frequent use the Lord Jesus made, while on earth, of this distinctive style of appeal: "What think ye of Christ; whose Son is He?" "If I tell you the truth, why do ye not believe Me?" "Why go ye about to kill Me?" "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" "Good Master!" "Why callest thou Me good?" And when on His way to the cross, His great heart moved by the sobs of the sorrowing women who had joined the cavalcade, He must needs stop the guilty procession with the words, "Weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves and for your children, for if they do these things in a green tree what shall be done in the dry?" And although "enthroned where glory dwelleth," He is still the same as when He arrested the proud and misguided Pharisee on the Damascus road with the question: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" It was an appeal to his intellect as well as to his heart.

Listen also to the questioning of God as scattered throughout the Epistles: "If judgment begin at the house of God, what shall the end be of those that obey not the Gospel of God?" and "if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" Again, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Yet once more, and this from the closing book of the Bible, "The great day of His wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

These are only a few culled hurriedly from the Scriptures, which will suggest to every reader many others equally forceful, clamant, and urgent.

The one question, however, which claims our attention for the moment—"What is that in thine hand?"—has for us a special interest, inasmuch as it is addressed to one of the greatest among all the prophets and servants of God, and appeals to the humblest or lowliest weapon he chanced there and then to possess—a rod! God is not in search of great men as the world reckons greatness, nor yet of worldly-wise men. "I have found David" has reference to the stripling, the shepherd lad, whom his own brethren affected to despise; but, as Samuel said, "This is he, the chosen, and now the anointed of God." It is ever so. God frequently passes by the wise and the mighty and the noble, and makes choice of the nobodies and nothings, as they estimate themselves.

This was not the uniform experience of Moses, as, for instance, when he went forth in the energy of the flesh "supposing"—as Stephen in his address before the Sanhedrim tells us—"that his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them"; but this was neither God's time nor His way, and although His divine eye had been ever upon him, from the hour he was drawn from the river bed and introduced into the palace, there to receive all the education and training needed to assist him in his future work, all this was not enough.

After forty years of solitude, Moses is summoned to his eventful mission by the sudden and unlooked-for blazing of the common thorn bush, with all the revelation of God, and of His Divine will which this brought to his soul. How changed the man! Self-importance and self-confidence are gone, and erring now in the opposite direction, leading Jehovah to expostulate with him once again in the most gracious, patient, and condescending manner, until His last word seems spoken in the question, "What is that in thine hand?" Only an ordinary shepherd's crook! How commonplace; what a contrast to the flaming bush! As God proceeds to unveil more of His divine and eternal purpose and character, He would have Moses know that, as the fire possessed the bush, so He Himself must possess His servant, that through him, God in him, and he in God, Israel's deliverance might be effected.

God's set time had now arrived; the exact hour had struck, as indicated in the words, "Come now therefore, and I will send thee to Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth My people the children of Israel, out of Egypt; and certainly I will be with thee." Here, then, was both the hour and the man. How mystic and astounding the history of the rod in the hand of this honoured servant of God! What a symbol of power, and this the highest! The man, the rod, plus God—and we behold omnipotence, invincible power.

The question, with its lesson for ourselves—how manifold and diversified in its application! To the consecrated Christian worker, the man of business, the man of letters, the lowly toiler in field or factory, wareroom or workshop, the man embarking on any professional career, the question comes: "What is that in thine hand?" It is surely for us to answer—"Here Lord, I give myself to Thee; time and talents, with every added gift or grace, to be used in Thy service, and for Thy glory, when, where, and how, my Lord the King may appoint."

T. Swanston Smith.

Shipwrecked Lives.—It has just been stated that five per cent. of the "7d. per night" lodgers in the Rowton Houses are "professional men who at one time worked high in their respective occupations," and that at the present time at least 120 doctors, dentists, lawyers, and authors "who have made shipwreck of their lives" are finding a home in those establishments. In four of the houses it was ascertained recently that the inmates included two clergymen, three barristers, nineteen solicitors, fifteen medical men, and eighteen writers and journalists. What a light these striking statistics, supported as they are by the records of all the night refuges and shelters, throw upon the fallacious idea that secular education alone is sufficient to elevate humanity, and to save it from falling! And what a commentary they afford upon the inspired declaration, "The way of transgressors is hard (Prov. xiii. 15)!

Questions Answered.—III.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

MANY difficulties are due only to ignorance or misapprehension. To some representative ones we here give explanation.

Numbers xi. 31: "The quails . . . as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth, and as it were a day's journey on this side, and a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp." A correspondent attempts a calculation, how many quails it would take to cover such a space of perhaps twenty to thirty miles in diameter, and heaped two cubits or three feet high! And he makes out that one day's fall of quails would be enough to last the whole army for forty years! But the meaning obviously is, the flocks of quails were met with all around the camp, a day's journey in each direction, and that they flew only a few feet above the ground, so that they could be easily caught or knocked down. If one should say that he saw a lot of birds as high as St. Paul's dome, would anybody suppose he meant that the birds were piled one on another to that height? Yet this is scarcely a more absurd misunderstanding of language.

2 Samuel xii. 31. Sceptics have construed this to mean that David cut to pieces the Ammonites with iron saws, harrows, and axes, and burned or roasted them alive in brick kilns! It means simply that he put them at work—subjecting them to service—cutting down trees, sawing them up for timber, harrowing the ground, and making and baking bricks! The phrase "under iron saws" refers to their passing under the yoke of servitude, a common ceremony to indicate submission to conquerors and surrender to certain conditions as captives of war.

It is not designed as a reflection on any of our correspondents, when we add that Some difficulties are of our own making. They result from an unreasonable perversity, intellectual or moral, or both. For example, some people demand mathematical proof for moral questions. Mathematics is the science of quantity. It deals with numbers and dimensions. Morals have to do with ethics—distinctions between truth and falsehood—right and wrong. How can one demonstrate that a lie is wrong, or that God exists, or that man has a hereafter, by the same process as that one proves that two and two make four, or that the three interior angles of a triangle together equal two right angles! The character of evidence must conform to the character of that which is evidenced. All proof of moral propositions must be governed by the laws of evidence. It is impossible to reach what is called a mathematical certainty in matters of intellectual philosophy or moral truth. Here the utmost proof attainable is probability, though to one who is content with reasonable demonstration probability may become moral certainty. For example, it is impossible to prove beyond any doubt that the brain is the centre and organ of thought, but this is accepted as fact on the basis of probability. So we cannot prove the existence of God except by the various strong probabilities, all of which converge in such a conclusion.

To other correspondents we would say, generally, that some difficulties need only the answer of common-sense. A young student came to Dr. Witherspoon, in Princeton College, troubled by Berkeley's philosophy—that there is no reality to matter, that it is only a creature of the imagination. He found himself led by such arguments into general doubt about all verities. "Troubled about that, are you? There is a heavy deal door by which you came into my study. Just go and give your head a good bump against that, and it will cure you!" said the quaint old doctor.

Many supposed doubts and difficulties would vanish at once if common-sense rules were applied. Christian Science is really a modern revival of Berkeleian philosophy, and much of its teaching cannot bear the test of simple "mother wit." It affirms that the body is nothing but an idea, and yet it proposes to heal the sickness of an idea! Mrs. Eddy's book can be read backwards as well as forwards, or beginning at the middle, reading both ways at once, and it makes equally good nonsense either way. Mark Twain has been applying to the whole system the test of common-sense in the guise of ridicule. And the widening influence of this new cult is an illustration of the absurdities which human beings will embrace and call them great revelations of truth.

Some Difficulties Need only Patient Waiting—Less hurry, more careful study. When, at times, in handling a first-rate stereoscope, the two pictures refuse to come together, you do not smash the instrument and burn the pictures. You wait till your eye finds the focus. Sometimes all we need in Bible study to reconcile contradictions, is to find the true focal centre, in which the apparent discrepancy is harmonized and reconciled.

In 1 Kings vi. 1 the period of time between the Exodus and the beginning of the temple building under Solomon is made to be 480 years. It appears to have been, in fact, 573 years, a difference of ninety-three years. If, however, we reckon up the various minor periods of Israelitish servitude in the interval, the sum of these several captivities appears to cover just this number of years! Thus:—

In Mesopotamia	8 years
In Moab	18 ,,
In Canaan	20 ,,
In Media	7 ,,
In Philistia	40 ,,
Sum	93

If this be the true solution, it suggests a mystic, prophetic chronology, a method of reckoning not purely historical and chronological, but spiritual. While God's people were out of fellowship with Him, and delivered over to the will of their enemies, He did not count these years in their proper history! This suggests not only a mode of reconciling apparent discrepancies, but a great spiritual truth and law of Divine dealing, most instructive and edifying.

In Num. xxi., it would appear that the Lord has His own spiritual Lexicon, as well as Calendar. It is at least noticeable that in this chapter we meet the name "Israel" in marked prominence, both before and after their murmuring against the Lord and the sore plague He visited upon them; but during that time, after they began to complain, and until they repented and were healed, they are called "the people"—the same name elsewhere in that chapter applied to their enemies! There may be no spiritual meaning in all this, but it is, to say the least, very remarkable. From the point, in verse 5, where we read, "And the people spake against God and against Moses," the word Israel does not occur, except once, until verse 10, where, after they had repented and been restored to God's favour, at once we read, "And the children of Israel set forward." The one exception, in verse 6, is significant: "And much people of Israel died," as though it was meant to emphasize those out of Israel that died as "the people."

Some Difficulties are Wholly Due to a Moral State.—Something is wrong with God or man, and until that is made right there will be obscurity of vision. No intellectual answer can meet a moral difficulty. You cannot cure a disease of the eyes by an operation on the ears. Every reader must get right with God, man, and himself, if he wants to find fewer difficulties in His Word. A man that makes shipwreck of conscience by wrong-doing will find himself making havoc of faith in scepticism. Compare Ezek. xiii. 22 and 1 Tim. i. 19, 20.

The reader who is most reverent, pure-minded, honest with himself and with his fellow-men, will find least difficulty with the Bible. It is the beam in one's own eye that often makes the mote in the Scriptural record. And if it is an object to find an inconsistency or an absurdity in God's Word, the very disposition so to do will often construe falsely what is seen. A childlike spirit brought to bear in Bible study will reduce to a minimum the apparent obstacles to faith—we do not say a childlike ignorance or a childish superstitiousness, but a childlike spirit, which may be combined, and often has been, with the most ample mental equipment and capacity.

"Things as They Are."*

THE POWERS OF DARKNESS.

In its widest sense, environment simply means "all that is." We know that "all that is" includes the existence of certain beings, described as "powers" in Ephesians vi. 12. Some of us are more or less unconscious of this part of our environment. We have no conscious correspondence with it, but it is there. Others, again, seek and find such correspondence, to their certain and awful loss.

Such a subject can hardly bear handling in language. Thank God, we know so little about it that we do not know how to speak of it accurately. Neither, indeed, do we wish to intrude into those things which we have not seen by any attempt at close definition, but we know there is this unhallowed correspondence between men and demons, which in the old days drew down, as a lightning conductor, the flash of the wrath of God.

Here in India it exists; we often almost touch it, but not quite. We would not go where we knew we should see it, even if we might; so, unless we happen upon it, which is rare, we never see it at all. A year ago I saw it, and that one look made me realise, as no amount of explanation ever could, how absolutely out of reach of all human influence such souls are. Nothing can reach them, nothing but the might of the Holy Ghost.

Will you pray for those to whom in the moonless night, at the altar by the temple, there is the sudden coming of that which they have sought—the "possession," the "afflatus," which for ever after marks them out as those whose correspondences reach beyond mortal ken. All devotees have not received this awful baptism, but in this part of India many have.

We were visiting in a high-caste house. The walls were decorated with mythological devices, and even the old wood-carvings were full of idolatrous symbols. The women were listening well, asking questions and arguing, until one, an old lady, came in. Then they were silent. She sat down and discussed us. We thought we would change the subject, and we began to sing. She listened, as they always do, interrupting only to say, "That's true! that's true!" Till suddenly—I cannot describe what—something seemed to come over her, and she burst into a frenzy, exclaiming, "Let me sing! let me sing!" And then she sang as I never heard anyone sing before—the wildest, weirdest wail of a song, all about idolatry, its uselessness and folly, its sorrow and sin.

So far I followed her, for I knew the poem well, but she soon turned off into regions of language and thought unreached as yet by me. Here she got madly excited, and, swaying herself to and fro, seemed lashing herself into fury. Nearer and nearer she drew to us (we were on the floor beside her); then she stretched out her arm with its clenched fist, and swung it straight for my eye. Within a hair's-breadth she drew back, and struck out for Victory's; but God helped the latter not to flinch.

Then I cannot tell what happened, only her form dilated, and she seemed as if she would spring upon us, but as if she were somehow held back. We dare not move for fear of exciting her more. There we sat for I know not how long, with this awful old woman's clenched fist circling round our heads, or all but striking into our eyes, while without intermission she crooned her song in that hollow hum that works upon the listener till the nerve of the soul is drawn out, as it were, to its very farthest stretch. It was quite dark by this time; only the yellow flicker of the wind-blown flame of the lamp made uncertain lights and shadows round the place where we were sitting, and an eerie influence fell on us all, almost mesmeric in effect. I did not need the awe-struck whispers round me to tell me what it was. But, oh, I felt, as I never felt before, the reality of the presence of unseen powers, and I knew that the Actual itself was in the room with me.

At last she fell back exhausted, trembling in every limb. Her old head hit the wall as she fell; but I knew we must not help her; it would be pollution to her if we touched her. The people all round were too frightened to move. So she fell and lay there quivering, her glittering eyes still fixed on us; and she tried to speak, but could not.

Softly we stole away, and we felt we had been very near where Satan's seat is.

Think of someone you love—as I did then—of someone whose hair is white like hers; but the face you think of has peace in it, and God's light lightens it. Then think of her as we saw her last—the old face torn with the fury of hell, and for light the darkness thereof.

O friends, do you care enough? Do we care enough out here? God give us hearts that can care!

United Incessant Prayer.

A PRAYER UNION has been started amongst some London Christians with the object to pray incessantly for the unity of all children of God. The members of the circle believe it to be the will of the Lord now, as well as when He offered up His prayer (John xvii.) to the Father, that His own should be one as He and the Father; and they think that we are responsible to do all in our power for the maintenance or restoration of that unity.

They believe that true sanctification (i.e., separation from all evil) and devotedness unto God, as well as the love of Christ filling our hearts through the Holy Ghost, are essential characteristics of that unity. They feel bound to acknowledge that both are lacking in a sad degree amongst professed followers of Christ, but they are also convinced that the Lord is able to accomplish what He will, if we are only ready to yield ourselves to be His instruments.

They suggest to Christians, whose hearts are prepared and touched by the Lord, to take the place of watchmen, such as will not allow themselves rest, nor give Him rest, until He has restored His Church and removed her shame. They propose to every one of them to select for the performance of his or her piece of watch-service the times most convenient to them, which for the sake of mutual encouragement one should name to the other. It is understood that the times thus arranged are strictly kept, as would be meetings of a public character, and that they are spent in nothing but definite prayer.

Intercessors, living in appropriate nearness one to the other, should, if possible, arrange for regular meetings. The Union started with the words of the Moravian text-book for the day as their motto: "He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock" (Jer. xxxi. 10); and, "Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer" (Rom. xii. 12). Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, United Incessant Prayer, 90, Leman Street, London, E.

British Jews Society.—For the West Central Mission House, in memory of William Wingate and R. Murray McCheyne, this society requires at least £3,000. The financial year just closed places the work in a serious condition. The expenditure for the past year has been about £700 above the income. Unless this amount is at once met, the society will be crippled in its work.

Romanism in Worcestershire. — Writing from a Worcestershire village, a lady correspondent says:—"I am sorry to say that much error is being propagated in our dear old village. Only yesterday I was told that I was a child of the devil, because I dared to say I knew I was a saved soul. And Luther and Calvin were also anathematized in my presence! The Roman Catholic party are more than ever in evidence in these parts."

SUNDAY, May 10. Job xxxiv.

AT the end of the previous chapter, Elihu had challenged Job to reply to him, but he remained absolutely silent. At the beginning of this, he turns to the three friends, and asks them to join him in choosing what is right and good (4). From that point he commences, with the utmost coolness, to discuss the attitude and the language of the sufferer to his face.

What a drop there is between the elevation of thought and diction in the previous chapter, and the random charges of this! In the one, it is clear that the young speaker is under the power of the Holy Spirit; the river of God which is full of water, is flowing through his lips, he is full of humility and tenderness. But now that his appeals have been met, on Job's part, with indifference, his sweetness turns to bitterness, and he is as unmerciful as any of the three friends, who had already accused Job of enormous crimes. Job, in his judgment, must have associated with the workers of iniquity, and walked with wicked men (8). Are we not all liable to these sudden transitions? When we find ourselves making headway with our erring friends, we are pleasant and amiable; but if they resist us, or remain icily unmoved, we are liable to fail in patience, even if we do not begin to charge them with all manner of hidden sins.

Elihu goes on to argue against the suggestion that God could act unjustly. He is too great to do wickedness (10); He will render to every man according to his works (11); He has no respect of persons (19); the history of the world bears abundant witness to His level-handed justice (24-26); whether with nations or men, there is the same inexorable rule (29). The only attitude, therefore, which a man could rightfully assume towards Him, was to confess that His chastisement had been deserved, and to humble himself in the dust (31). But as Job refused to do this, protesting his innocence, there was nothing for it, but that he should be tried to the end (36).

MONDAY, May 11. Job xxxv.

Job is still silent. Contrary to Elihu's earnest appeals, he refuses to confess any special sin, which might account for his conspicuous sufferings. Elihu next urges that God is so highly exalted above man, that He cannot be unjust in His dealings with man (5, 6). He has nothing to gain by favouring the wicked, however influential they may be, or in afflicting the righteous, however poor and inconspicuous (7, 8).

The reason, in Elihu's judgment, why men suffer, is that they do not humbly seek unto God for succour; and thus their ruin must be attributed to their pride. If only they would turn to God with a humbled and penitent spirit, He would have mercy, and would give songs in the night (9, 10). Cries uttered in vanity, i.e., in a proud and unhumbled spirit, cannot avail with God (12, 13); and therefore Job's words had brought no mitigation of his sufferings (15, 16).

What a blessed thought that is, which Elihu drops, as it were, by accident, that God gives songs in the night. Can you look up into the face of God, and say of Him, He is my Maker? If so, be of good cheer, He will enable you, like Paul and Silas, though your feet are fast in the stocks, to fill the listening cell with music. There are no songs so sweet as those which God's children have sung when darkness has overcast their skies; and when, in the thick night, the tempter asks: "Where is now thy God?" Then "in the night His song shall be with me, and a prayer unto the God of my life" (Psa. xlii, 8). This Psalm has ever been a bulwark of defence for the Lord's people. Use it, troubled heart, and thou "shalt yet praise Him who is the health of thy countenance and thy God"

TUESDAY, May 12. Job xxxvi.

This is Elihu's fourth speech. He thus exceeds the others in the length of his remonstrances. There is an air of assumption in the opening words which is far from agreeable (3, 4). He who can wash my feet and really help me, must be willing to gird himself with a towel, and stoop to the irksome task with all tenderness. At the same time, there is on the whole a gentler tone in this closing address.

Elihu says that God will not forsake His own, but binds them in the cords of affliction, that He may open their ears to instruction, and restrain them from returning to iniquity (10). If they will hearken to His instruction, and elect to serve Him alone, desiring only to do His will and to please Him, they shall spend their days in prosperity and their years in pleasures (11). But if they hearken not, they must pass through yet severer discipline (12, &c.)

How beautiful is the suggestion of R.V. (marg.) rendering of 16: "He would have allured thee out of distress into a broad place, where there is no straitness." Yes, beloved friend, softly and gently God is leading thee into a broad place, where there is level standing-room, where the horizon is limitless, and the table is bountifully spread with all needed supplies.

Turning once more to Job, Elihu says: Thou art filled with the judgment which must fall on the wicked, and which the great ransom which thou mightest offer cannot avert (18). It is wrong to ask for the night of death, and do not add to the anguish of thine afflictions, the sin of speaking against God. God is above thy words, humble thyself before Him (20-23).

WEDNESDAY, May 13. Job xxxvii.

The last paragraph of the previous chapter and the whole of this chapter are occupied with the gathering and bursting of the thunderstorm. There is the drawing-up of drops of water which distil in rain from His vapour, the downpour from the skies, the lightnings and thunderings (xxxvi. 27, xxxvii. 4). We can hear the marvellous thundering of His voice, speaking in syllables that we cannot decipher (5). Next come snow and showers from the chambers of the north, which meet the storm, coming up as usual against the wind; and the beasts flee for shelter to their coverts and dens (6-11).

Next come the balancings of clouds; i.e., the black mass seems about to descend on the group gathered still on the dung-hill around the patriarch (16). A suffocating south-wind passes over the land, and a preternatural stillness settles down (17); and now it is impossible to continue speaking because of the overshadowing and impenetrable darkness (19).

Presently the whirlwind rushes through the air, and blows the encompassing cloud into the distance, and out of the north comes a supernatural brilliance of golden splendour, worthy of the terrible majesty of the Divine Being (21, 22). (Compare Ezek. i. 4.) We cannot understand why whirlwinds sweep over our sky; but if we wait quietly they will pass away as they came, and there will be a bright light of golden majesty. Look out for the bright light in the clouds.

> The inner side of every cloud,
> Is bright and shining,
> I therefore turn my clouds about,
> And always wear them inside out,
> To show the lining.

THURSDAY, May 14. Job xxxviii.

When the storm had ceased, and the thunder was quiet, from out of the golden splendour of God's terrible majesty, a voice spoke to the group on the ash-mound. Job had challenged Jehovah to answer him, and now He took him at his word. We are reminded of the scene at Horeb's ancient cave, when, after wind and earthquake, there came "a sound of gentle stillness." "Arise," said the Eternal, "and gird thyself." In after years, when Ezekiel fell upon his face before a similar theophany, God said, "Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak with thee," and forthwith the Spirit entered into him and set him upon his feet (Ezek. ii. 1, 2). Surely some such strengthening may now have passed into God's stricken servant; and he must have felt that God would not plead against him with His great power, but would put His Spirit into him (xxiii. 6).

A sublime series of questions is then addressed to Job; not by a God of judgment and wrath, but by a Father arguing and pleading with His child, pointing out two things—first, the inability of mortal man to understand the ways of God; and secondly, the tenderness and minuteness of God's providence. Job had thought of God as infinitely inaccessible; God reveals Himself as full of infinite sympathy. He is the God of Nature, embracing its vastness, but penetrating to the infinitely minute. He makes bars to the ocean of sand-grains (10); He chequers the pattern of the earth's appearance like the embroidery of a dress (14); He holds the springs of the sea, and knows where is the home of the light; but He sends rain on the lonely spaces of the wilderness (26); He watches the effect on the dust and clods of the earth (38), and provides for the young ones of the raven (41). The age that invented the telescope discovered the microscope. We have so great a God that the heavens cannot contain Him, but He is willing to stoop to our feeblest cry.

FRIDAY, May 15. Job xxxix.

Still we are taught to recognise the gentleness and condescension of God. The hairs of our head are numbered. Do not say that your ways are hid from the Lord, and your judgment passed over from your God: that cannot be, because there is no searching of His understanding. He has sympathy with the maternal cares of the desert goat (1-4); with the passionate love of the wild ass and ox for liberty, as they scorn the noisy city, and range through the meadowed pasture lands of the wilderness (5-12). Even the ostrich, though she is so stupid as to desert her eggs, is an object of this care, for He hath given her power to outrun the swiftest pursuit (13-18). Does He not note the way of the mighty war-horse, pawing the ground with impatience, and glorying in his strength (19-25)? He has regard for the hawk soaring southwards, and the eagle in her eyrie amid inaccessible crags (26-30).

Surely we do not sufficiently read that old pictured story-book, which men call Nature; else many of our anxieties and cares would be done away. Be of good cheer, O tired heart of man, dwelling in cities, with only opportunity of looking across the street; consider God's eternal years, and power, and love. Go forth into His own glorious world, and sit down amid the budding life of another spring—let it rest thee, and soothe thy throbbing pulse! God loves thee; be of good cheer, if thou art His son.

SATURDAY, May 16. Job xl.

God awaits Job's answer to His questions. Had he not protested that he would fill his mouth with arguments if he could but get access to His throne? Ah, that vision of God has robbed Job of all self-reliance. He can only confess that he is vile (R.V.). Laying his hand upon his mouth, he vows never again to speak as he has done. But this is not enough; he must frankly confess that he has sinned (compare xlii. 6).

Jehovah still saw in Job some trust in his own power and influence, and bids him deck himself with it to the uttermost, and do his best (10-14). How little it all amounts to! How impotent he is even to subdue proud and wicked men around him! What chance, then, is there of his being able to hold his own or prevail with the Almighty? He cannot vanquish one of His works, how much less God Himself? This argument is driven home by a magnificent description of behemoth, i.e., the hippopotamus, to whom the strongest things of man are but the fragments of his huge frame, the cedar's swing for his tail, brass for bones, iron bars for limbs, mountains for his food, the river overflow a matter of indifference. But if you cannot prevail against creatures, how can you stand against the Creator? And if the Creator of such creatures is your Father, how safe you are!

OFFICIAL TESTIMONIES.

The May issue of the Church Missionary Intelligencer contains two remarkable articles by laymen who have held high office in India. Sir W. Lee-Warner, K.C.S.I., writes on "Imperial Obligations and Opportunities;" and Sir Andrew Wingate, K.C.I.E., on "What Missions are Doing for India." We make brief excerpts from these deeply interesting papers:—

THE DUTY OF EVANGELIZATION.

By Sir W. Lee-Warner.

IF we believe that God's revelation to man in Christ Jesus is the secret of our national life to-day, and our only hope after death, must we not offer this priceless gift to others with all perseverance, and trust God to give the increase? We have no desire to use our worldly or official position as a lever for conversion. It is not a public duty which we trust to our governments. But it is the duty of every citizen of the Empire of Heaven who has heard the glad tidings to proclaim it to others, and leave it to them to judge whether any other treasure that the West can give to the East is to be compared with this which our fathers received from the land of Judæa.

SOUND MISSION POLICY.

By Sir Andrew Wingate.

The Western India headquarters of the C.M.S. are just on the edge of the densely-crowded native town of Bombay. Here is the very pretty C.M.S. church. I like it because it has always been a powerful elevating influence among the Europeans and Eurasians, of whom there are many in this locality; because the C.M.S. consecrate none of their churches, holding them in trust for the Indian Christian congregations of the future; because the same clergyman ministers to the Indians and to the Europeans, of course in different languages and not at the same hours, but being under one pastor Indian Christians do not feel that they are outside the European fold. Wherever a C.M.S. church exists, I have found it to be the means of bringing European and Indian Christians together.

As we are in Rajputana, you will not forgive me if I forget to mention Dr. Shepherd, though he does not belong to the C.M.S. He needs no introduction from me, for the Kashmir of the plains, as Udaipur is named from its beauty, has many visitors; and as Dr. Shepherd keeps rods and fishing tackle, many, from the young officer to the distinguished traveller, look him up, and he seldom fails to beguile them into seeing how he is a fisher of men, particularly of sick folk and young children; and I never met one of these visitors who did not return enthusiastic about Dr. Shepherd, his tackle, and all his other works. But let us look at the unpromising beginning. As a young man he was denied even a lodging. He took refuge in a sort of grand stand, where the annual sports are held, outside the city, open on three sides to all the winds of heaven, and here he spent in the utmost discomfort his first rains. He set up his dispensary, and soon his fame spread, and the common people heard him gladly. By and by all ranks sought his aid. The passing years saw a well-built hospital, a pretty church, schools, orphanage, a considerable Christian congregation, and his influence penetrating into many households.

Surely such lives are worth living? If any young man is born to easy circumstances and does not know what to do, let him go to India, with an earnest purpose in his heart, and my experience is that he will do a work which, as he looks back on it, will fill him with gratitude to God who committed so much to his charge.

Now change the scene from the plains, where work is done at such cost of health and life, to the invigorating air of the mountains. Many of my readers, no doubt, are acquainted with the Brothers Neve, the two doctors who are exercising so great an influence in Kashmir. But unless you have studied the history of Kashmir and have seen the doctors at work in their splendidly-equipped hospital, you cannot realize what a transforming change is in progress. The confidence which the State authorities have in the C.M.S. may be judged from two instances. They have entrusted the care of the leper asylum to Dr. Neve, and they have built a hospital for a C.M.S. lady doctor. Since my time a very large High School has been started by the Rev. C. E. Tyndale-Biscoe, and he is doing what we used to think impossible, namely, making manly boys out of the hereditarily weakened Brahman class.

The Outlook in Tibet.

I SEND a copy of the Russo-Chinese Treaty about Tibet, and ask that prayer may go up to God, to whom all power belongs, that this device of the evil one to keep the Gospel out of Tibet may be frustrated, and overruled to the speedy opening of all the land to God's servants the missionaries.

COPY OF RUSSO-CHINESE TREATY.

(See Contemporary Review, Dec., 1902.)

Art. 1.—Tibet being a territory situated between Central China and Western Siberia, Russia and China are mutually obliged to care for the maintenance of peace in that country. In case troubles should arise in Tibet, China, in order to preserve this district, and Russia, in order to protect her frontier, shall despatch thither military forces on mutual notification.

Art. 2.—In case of apprehension of a third Power's contriving, directly or indirectly, troubles in Tibet, Russia and China oblige themselves to concur in taking such measures as may seem advisable for repressing such troubles.

Art. 3.—Entire liberty in what concerns Russian Orthodox as well as Lamaist worship will be introduced in Tibet; but all other religious doctrines will be absolutely prohibited. For this purpose, the Grand-Lama and the superintendent of the Orthodox Pekin Mission are bound to proceed amicably, and by mutual consent, so as to guarantee the free propagation of both religions, and take all necessary measures for avoiding religious disputes.

Art. 4.—Tibet shall be made, gradually, a country with an independent inner administration. In order to accomplish this task, Russia and China are to share the work. Russia takes upon herself the re-organization of the Tibetan military forces on the European model, and obliges herself to carry into effect this reform in a good spirit, and without incurring blame from the native population. China, for her part, is to take care of the development of the economic situation of Tibet, and especially of her progress abroad.

I thank God that He has enabled me to live here in this little corner of Tibet, and has brought to nought all the endeavours of those in Chinese employ to have me turned out. The Tibetans trust me and want me. They do not want Russian rule. Pray that wisdom may be given to our rulers in connection with the Tibetan question. God will do great things for this dark land if we only trust Him, and go right through with Him whatever comes.

The State of Johannesburg.

PLEASE pray for Johannesburg. The need is very great. I have never lived anywhere before where such an utterly godless tone was so evident. Here the motto seems to be, "Make money, honestly if you can, but in any case make money." It is very sad. Yet God is blessing the work of the S. Africa General Mission. We have a fine hall, which has lately been altered and improved; and the open-air work is grand.

No city, perhaps, is so easy for open-air work as this. We are always sure of an audience. Generally the men stand throughout the service, and many of them listen intently. It is a moving sight, the solid block of people round the ring—unrest, sin and sorrow written on so many faces. We have an open-air meeting on Saturday nights in the Market Square, opposite the G.P.O., and on Sunday afternoons and evenings at a corner not far from the hall.

On Sunday morning at 7.30 we meet for prayer and praise, with a short address from one of the workers, and in the evening there is the Gospel service. On Thursday nights there is a meeting for Christians, "Talks on the overcoming life;" and on Fridays we have our own prayer-meeting. Then, of course, there are many outside meetings, in which we help; a fact, a big proportion of the evenings are spent in this way. Chr.

Famine-Stricken Finland.

WHEN I arrived in Sordavala, I was told that the famine had spread as far south as Tohmojärvi. But I was not prepared to find such a sad state of things as I did on my arrival.

In one small farmhouse the family consists of six people. The only man is so sick that it requires an effort for him to stand. He seems to be about seventy years of age, but the pastor tells me that he is not sixty. Want and hard work have aged and broken him. His wife is old and weak. There is also a poor, lame old woman, who has no home of her own, and these poor people, in their deep poverty, are now letting her share their last black bread, which is fast coming to an end.

The next house had a low door and only one little window. It was very difficult for me to stay more than a minute or two because of the smoke. An aged, almost blind, man and his wife shared their home and food with a homeless and aged woman. Their son lives with them and for them. He is their only support, but is now without work and does not know where to find it.

A house, such as I had heard of, but had never seen before, was dug out of a hill. In it lived a man, his wife, and four children. The poor mother was nursing an almost naked three-months-old baby. The father and his two little sons of six and nine years of age were out working—all three cannot earn enough to keep one. If not helped, they must die.

I have never seen such self-denying efforts to help others in their poverty and need as I have seen among the poor. J. D. Kilburn.

Miss Reed's Leper Chapel.

I HAD the privilege and honour of opening and dedicating the new chapel for the lepers at Panahgah (Chandag) on Sunday, January 18, when all the inmates, except some half-dozen who were very ill, managed to be present at the service. Some of them with difficulty hobbled along, but evidently as many as could were anxious to be present at the first service in their pretty little new chapel. It was a touching sight to look upon such a congregation of suffering men (for this chapel is intended for the male inmates only). This was a time of precious influences, as was that also which we enjoyed afterwards in Bethel Chapel with the women lepers.

On the following day we had a striking service on the hillside out in the sunshine, where it was warmer than inside the building. It irresistibly recalled that ever-memorable service on the mountain side in Palestine, when the Lord Jesus was the preacher. Our congregation on the Himalayan slope was not a multitude; it was only a group of suffering lepers, to whom in a feeble measure we had to represent our Lord and Master. But our hope is that they have taken in some of His teaching and experienced some of its blessedness.

Disaster in Brittany.

MAY I avail myself of the sympathy elicited of late towards the distressed fishermen of the Breton coast, to appeal to your readers in favour of the fishing community of a small seaport called Primel, a few miles from the town of Morlaix, over which a sad catastrophe has cast a deep gloom? Two fishing boats belonging to that place were lost with all hands, in a terrible gale during a recent stormy night. Fourteen men perished together; seven were married men who have left as many widows, and twenty-seven children; while the rest, though single, were the main support of aged parents and younger brothers and sisters. All these men were well known to me, as they and their families were habitués of our mission hall, and in sympathy with our work.

For most of these families this catastrophe is an unmitigated calamity. In losing their dear ones they have lost their all, and are face to face with poverty and want. I shall only feel too happy to distributs among these distressed families any help that may be sent. Alfred Llewelyn Jenkins,

From Tunis.

THE most prosaic of travellers cannot fail to be impressed with the Oriental beauty of Tunis. From the flat roof of the Darel-Bey the eye beholds an exquisite panorama. Below are the white roof-terraces of the compact Arab city, here and there a graceful minaret, beyond the sea land and mountains, distant towns and buildings, well defined in the pure, clear atmosphere. Over there is Carthage, once the mistress of the sea. The breath of eternity sweeps over its antique ruins. At one time queen of commerce, she was at another the torch-bearer of Gospel light, before which darkness was flying fast. After Rome it was Carthage which had most martyrs within its walls. Eminent scholars, strong, great men lived, suffered, laboured, died in it, counting life worth nothing that they might win Christ. Their example inspired others far and near to heroic lives and patient sorrow.

Where are the vestiges of that glorious past? Why has darkness recaptured North Africa, and for such a long period? Was it because the Church, instead of obeying the supreme command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," wasted her time and her golden opportunities in fruitless discussions and idle strifes? Was it because the power given her was used for worldly ends, and not for the advancement of God's Kingdom upon earth?

On Dido's Hill, the ancient Byrsa, immortalized by poets of many nations, there stands to-day a Roman Catholic cathedral dedicated to St. Louis, who died here of the plague in 1270 while besieging Tunis; but lofty buildings, gaudy ornaments, and white-clad monks can bring no peace to sinful souls. Down in the streets, through picturesque sukhs (bazars) throngs busy humanity, bent upon commercial pursuits or satisfying mere curiosity. These handsome Arabs, whose flowing garments add gracefulness to their dignified bearing, have immortal souls; so have the black-veiled women, silently passing through some side street (though their husbands may deny it) and so have all the others, whether Jew, French, or Italian. Among them lives and moves a busy group of men and women, all in the service of the King, whose business requires haste. They are Mr. and Mrs. Liley, Mr. and Mrs. Purdon, the Misses Grissell, Case, Hammon, Roberts, Cohen, Tapp, and Harnden (the latter at present in poor health at Constantine). Mr. Liley, who heads the list as the senior in service—whose active wife has for some time past been obliged to "meekly wait and murmur not," until the Lord shall see fit to restore her strength—tries to work for two. None of his fellow-workers find the day too long. What with classes for Arab boys and men, for girls and women, with Gospel meetings to Italians who form a large proportion of the population, visiting homes, meeting sailors, &c., there is enough to make the mere looker-on get out of breath.

Friends interested in the mission will please look for details of the work in North Africa, a monthly record of the N. A. Mission, 34, Paternoster Row, E.C. We understand that last year five Arab converts were baptized. The Bible depôt, rented at the missionaries' expense, where free conversation takes place, has proved a great means of blessing in this respect, as the only meeting approaching to an open-air service can be held in it. Besides, the French law forbids the selling or even giving of Bibles and of religious literature outside the house or shop. Why one should not be free to bestow a gift upon anyone who likes to accept it, especially in the colonies of a liberty-boasting country, seems strange, but such is the case in Algeria and Tunisia. Yet rather by the act of the late Governor than of the supreme Government.

Situated in one of the main thoroughfares, the Bible depôt is open to inquirers all the day long. There is always one of the missionaries present, either Mr. Liley, or Mr. Purdon, or Miss Grissell, to meet such, and to help in dispelling their difficulties. Many, of course, especially at the evening meetings, come for the sake of argument, and such cannot be convinced against their will; but there are always some who honestly and diligently seek after truth, and, sooner or later, to find it.

The missionaries are cheered by the evidences of spiritual growth in some of their converts. There is another candidate waiting for baptism. Could our stay have been prolonged, we might have had the pleasure of witnessing his immersion in the sea. W. M.

Notes from Tunis.

MR. ARTHUR V. LILEY (10, Rue de la Madressa, Es-Slimania) writes:—"Notwithstanding the ungrateful soil on which we are working, we have cause to thank God for the many signs of encouragement and the doors of service open to us. My meetings have been very well attended, and a good number of Arabs have come to the house during the month; my voice has been much tried, because of so much speaking and reading. The same old arguments have been brought up, the same questions put, and alas! the same scorn shown for the Gospel. Recently a young student has visited me several times; he listened with great attention, and seemed much impressed as I sought to show him his state by nature; but directly I mentioned Jesus as the Son of God, a terrible spirit of opposition was aroused in him."

Writing from Sousse, Miss Cox says: "If Christians at home united heartily with those abroad in persevering intercession, God's own Word would, must prevail, and instead of the twos and threes (and some even of these sadly weak and fearing) abandoning the crescent for the Cross, and leaving the ranks of Islam to join the army of the blood-bought-ones, we should see hundreds, ay thousands, blessedly saved from amongst the 170,000,000 of them (and these ever-increasing) scattered throughout Europe, Asia, and Africa. Though the work is hard, and has shown, up to the present time, comparatively few results, yet the people are extremely interesting and intelligent; and when truly converted they make noble Christians. Thoughtful, educated men, full of the Spirit of God, have here a field of labour for heart and mind."

On the Tree.

"See if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow?" (Lam. i. 12.)

He died for me;
His sacred heart He broke,
For my base sins,
Submitted to the stroke
Of God's just wrath—for me.

Into His soul
The iron entered now
At God's veiled face;
The death-dew on His brow
Has settled there—for me.

The tender hands,
Outstretched to bless, pierced through
With cruel nails;
His kingly brow wreathed, too,
With crown of thorns—for me.

He was reviled,
Insulted (He who left
The hosts above
In anguished awe bereft),
When He came down—for me.

He died the death,
Which sinners die, in woe
Upon the tree.
Accursed, He bore the blow
To shield it all—from me.

He died for me:
His anguish rends my soul;
How could He face
God's wrath, whose billows roll
Above Him? All—for me.

Lord, grant that I may never weave
Thorns for Thy brow divine;
Grant me that I no more may grieve
The heart that broke for mine.
Humbly I kiss Thy pierced feet,
Thy wounded hands embrace,
Adoring Thee for love so sweet
That dared such suffering to face
For me, Lord—even me.

Mildmay Conference.

JUNE 23, 24, AND 25.

THIS year we propose to return to our accustomed date, at the close of June, for our annual gathering, which last year was altered on account of the anticipated Coronation ceremonies of King Edward VII.

Now that the distractions of a great war are ended, we have more leisure for considering our home needs, and especially the need of our people for the pure Gospel of the Grace of God; and the needs of the great world for the healing balm of the same glad tidings which God designed for "all people."

We long for a great work of revival at home, and for a wider and a deeper compassion for those who are "ignorant and out of the way" in the vaster regions and more densely peopled lands afar off; for greater zeal and enterprise in missions to Jew and Gentile.

Let us, therefore, come together to meditate upon His great love, "who loved us and gave Himself for us," until our hearts burn within us to be sharers in His love and yearnings for a perishing world; acknowledging His Lordship over us, and seeking to know His will for us individually as "God's fellow-workers."

Polwarth, James E. Mathieson, Harry C. Nisbet, A. R. Pennefather, J. H. Tritton, E. Trotter, R. C. Hartdyke, W. H. Dawson—Trustees; J. F. Morton—Superintendent.

SUBJECT.

Tuesday, June 23, Christ. "The Lord's servant" (Isa. xlii. 19). What are His claims upon His followers?

Wednesday, June 24, True Discipleship. "As the servants of Christ" (Eph. vi. 6). How should it be manifested?

Thursday, June 25, Equipment for Service. "Furnished completely unto every good work" (2 Tim. iii. 17, R.V.). How can this be secured?

The Wickliffe Preachers.

SINCE the death of Mr. John Kensit, the organization of the Wickliffe Preachers has been considerably extended, and we learn from Mr. J. A. Kensit that the staff has been doubled, making a total of thirty workers. Several extension schemes are under consideration, among them the founding of a training home as a memorial to the late Mr. Kensit, where preachers shall be thoroughly equipped for their work.

Already over sixty Protestant and Gospel services are being held every week, and it is proposed to station agents in every county for sustained and permanent work amongst the people.

Convention in Liverpool.

THE convention held in Liverpool a few days ago proved to be a time of rich blessing. Rev. C. Musgrave Brown (vicar of St. Clements) presided, and at the opening meeting remarked that the purpose of the Convention was to emphasize the subjective side of Christianity, by reminding God's people of their privileges; urging them to seek a richer experience of Divine things; and pointing out some of the hindrances which prevent believers enjoying a full salvation. Speaking on the subject of "The Risen Life of Christ," Rev. John Brash said that while too much stress cannot be laid upon Christ crucified, yet one must not stop there. The living Christ must be the chief attraction to the believer, and the Christ-life must be lived. In the course of an address on "The Restraining Love of God," Rev. W. Darlow Sargeant spoke of the constant controversy between the will of God and that of man. Jesus had to constrain his disciples to get into the ship. Jehovah had to compel Moses to go to Pharaoh. The fear of man is a great hindrance to full surrender, hence Jehovah has often to use the rod.

"Joy, the Believers' Strength," was the theme of an inspiring address by Rev. George C. Grubb. The foundation of true joy was shown to be the forgiveness of sin: there can be no joy to the evil conscience. On the missionary day, Rev. John Wilkins spoke at some length on the Word and Work of God among the Jews, and was followed with close attention

The Scripture Union.

MOST of our readers are probably acquainted with the good work done by the Scripture Union in all parts of the world. This Union aims at getting children and young people to read the Bible regularly and systematically.

Drs. L. E. Hertslet and H. E. Keith Murray have succeeded in starting a Zulu branch of this Union in South Africa. It is hoped that there will shortly be in working order some thirty or forty native branches on the stations of the missionary societies working in Natal and Zululand.

Some thousands of the natives are now able to read and most of these possess a New Testament. In order to read the prescribed portions of the Scripture Union it will be necessary for them to obtain the whole Bible. It seems that this will be difficult for many of the younger people to do, as the price (2s. 6d.) is to them somewhat prohibitive.

There are hundreds of children and young people in the various mission stations and schools who would probably be glad to join this Reading Union if they could obtain Bibles.

It is therefore proposed to start a Bible-buying fund in order to help these would-be readers. Where advisable, half of the cost of the Bible could be paid out of this fund, the other half being paid by the intending member.

This matter has only to be mentioned, we feel sure, to secure the help of all lovers of God's Word who may wish to promote the regular and systematic reading of the Bible among the Zulus. One pound will supply half the cost of sixteen Bibles. Mrs. E. L. Newcombe, Gordon Memorial, Umsinga, Natal, is the general secretary for Zulu branches.

Nepal and the Tibetan Frontier.

WE are just at the end of our three and a half months' preaching tour, during which time we have had a truly wonderful season of blessing. Now we suddenly find ourselves without a home to go to! We had taken our headquarters on a ten years' lease, but neglected to have the lease registered. Taking advantage of this omission, the landlord has now given us notice to quit.

It is most difficult to find another place in this out-of-the-way part of the world, near the frontiers of Nepal and Tibet; but whilst crying to God to come to our aid we heard of (and have now inspected) property consisting of a well-furnished house, another large building which would make an excellent church, and forty acres of land, which can be bought for Rs. 4,000 (£266 13s. 4d.), a remarkably low price. It is splendidly situated for the work, nearer Nepal, and well placed for work among the Tibetans (which Mr. C. T. Wright carries on).

With the exception of a lonely tea-planter and a native schoolmaster nine miles away, there are no Christians in the district. Five miles off live the European and American Hindus, disciples of Swami-Vivekananda; so, excepting the planter, the only Europeans in the district are those who sympathize with and encourage heathenism. We urgently ask friends to come to our help at this time of trial. A. S. PAYNTER (Jai Bhai).

Berinag, Almora, India.

Blessing in India.—We in Travancore were greatly blessed by the ministry of Rev. T. Walker, of Tinnevelly, who visited us again this year and conducted special services. Great numbers of persons heard stirring Gospel messages from this earnest and faithful servant of God, who is a man "mighty in the Scriptures." Numbers of men and women have been converted who now openly acknowledge the Lord Jesus as their Saviour and King. Large meetings were held at Karipuzha, Kottarakarai, Tiruvalla, and Kottayam. A convention held at Maramannu was on so great a scale that on an average of 20,000 persons assembled daily. At the close of seven days more than 30,000 persons were present, when the presence and power of God were felt in a remarkable manner, and many souls are then believed to have entered the Kingdom of God. W. MATTHEWS.

The Late Mr. W. Holmes.

IN our obituary columns we recently announced the passing to his rest of one of the oldest Christian workers in the metropolis. Mr. WILLIAM HOLMES, who had reached the age of eighty-two, was widely known and esteemed as a Christian worker of exceptional ability and varied gifts.

Born in London, he came of a well-known Nonconformist family. From his early youth he was a member of Paddington Chapel; but it was to the Revival of 1860, in connection with services in the ever-memorable Stafford Rooms, Titchborne Street, that he owed his deepest spiritual impressions. At the invitation of Mr. John Eason he attended these gatherings, and, while listening to the Gospel, he was convicted of sin, afterwards finding peace in his own home. From this time he threw himself zealously into the work of the Y.M.C.A. at this centre, and, in the years that followed, he was the means of leading numbers of young men and others to Christ, exercising remarkable tact, faith, and perseverance.

On the death of Mr. Henry Hull, secretary, Mr. Holmes was asked to take the oversight of the work pro tem. till a successor was appointed. This he did with readiness and joy, and his labours were increasingly owned and prospered of God in this connection. When the Evangelistic Mission was founded by his son-in-law (Mr. C. Russell Hurditch) a few years later, he identified himself with the movement, becoming one of its most diligent workers.

From that time till weakness compelled him to resign these activities, he was a strong supporter of the Mission, greatly beloved by its friends and adherents. He frequently took the services at Kilburn Hall, ever anxious to win souls and help on his fellow Christians in the knowledge and love of God. Throughout this time, however, he kept in sympathetic touch with Paddington Chapel, for many years filling the office of deacon. Two of his sons are office bearers in the church. It was to this church that eighty-two years ago William Holmes was taken as an infant to be christened. He remembered Paddington in the days of its eloquent preacher, James Stratten, when Elizabeth Barrett, afterwards Mrs. Browning, with her father, was a frequent worshipper.

In his capacity as a valuer of stationery and fancy businesses, he was much respected by commercial men with whom he came in contact. His religion was a real force in his life, and in all things he was controlled and guided by the Spirit of God. His utterances were always marked with deep reverence and simple piety, and he has left an influence which must of necessity make its mark upon those who knew him well, many of whom have cause to thank God for his zealous and consistent testimony to the saving power of the Gospel. He was a diligent student of the Scriptures, and his well-marked Bible indicates the value he ever set on the Word, the inspiration of which he held so tenaciously.

A loving tribute was paid by his eldest son, Rev. R. S. Holmes, at the funeral service at Paddington Chapel, who thus spoke of his devotion to the church in troublous times: "That the conduct of the church had then fallen largely into his hands was the result of his tact, courage, and personal piety; and riper and better days set in. He often visited them in later years, and his bright, genial face and pleasant ways made him always a welcomed visitor. There never was a more responsive hearer of spiritual things, and as a boy, he (the speaker) used to wonder, when he saw his father's face shine with almost unearthly glory. How fresh his sympathy; how real his religion; he was always delighted and ready to speak of his Lord; he indeed lived with God. It was a grand old race to which he belonged, men who feared God, and had no other fear." One daughter and three sons are left to cherish the memory of a devoted and saintly parent. Mr. Holmes was interred at West Hampstead Cemetery, where rest the remains of his beloved wife and two children.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

WOOLWICH.

DURING the past week Rev. Dr. HENRY and Mr. T. ARMON JONES have conducted a mission at the Baptist Tabernacle, Woolwich. Both from the temperance and evangelistic points of view there were many signs of encouragement. On Lord's Day week there were twenty decisions for Christ. During the week earnest addresses were given by Dr. Henry. On Friday last Mr. ROBERT SCOTT, who presided, reminded his hearers that one of the great liquor orators in America said, "We are bound to win. We have the drink people on our side and the gold on our side; and don't you forget it." To which Frances Willard replied, "We are bound to win. We have the sober people on our side, we have God on our side; and don't you forget it." After strongly condemning official patronage of the drink traffic, Mr. Scott dwelt on the prodigious social changes that would follow on the general adoption of abstinence principles. "Let this appalling problem of strong drink, under which our nation is declining, be solved, and almost every other social problem—such as this housing of our honest, industrious, working people, old-age pensions, and other pressing questions—will solve themselves." Dr. Henry subsequently gave an address founded on 1 Sam. xv.

On Sabbath evening last Dr. Henry spoke on "The Dynamite of Temperance Reform." He dealt with four chief sources of power: the Bible, a total abstinence book; the precious blood of Christ; prevailing intercessory prayer; and a Spirit-filled life. Deep impressions were made and over twenty persons confessed Christ. There were also a good number of temperance pledges secured.

At the final meeting, held on Monday last, Mr. E. PASCOE WILLIAMS presided, and (after Rev. JOHN WILSON had led in prayer) expressed his satisfaction that in this mission the Gospel had been put to the front.

Dr. Henry then gave his popular lecture on "Public-houses in America," and his vivid descriptions and striking facts were well received by a typical audience of warm-hearted Woolwich folk. Throughout the meetings Mr. Armon Jones delighted the audiences by his singing.

The Church in Smyrna.

REV. DR. XENOPHON P. MOSCHOU.

THE story of the Greek Evangelical Mission of Smyrna is one of faithful witness for the truth amid circumstances of the most trying nature, and of progress from very small beginnings. The name of the late Rev. Dr. Constantine is cherished in Asia Minor as that of a leader in the preaching of the Gospel to the people. Twenty years ago he founded the Union with but three members at Smyrna, though thirteen believers cast in their lot with the young cause at Magnesia, having been gathered together by means of a previous effort made through the American Mission. Three new churches or stations have been added to these two. Of the five, three are situated in the region of the Seven Churches of the Revelation — at Smyrna, Magnesia, and Thyatira. The remaining two—Ordoo and Semen—are at a considerable distance to the north-east, on and near the Black Sea, in the ancient province of Pontus.

During the two decades that have passed, 466 additional members have joined themselves to the original sixteen. Several of these have now fallen asleep in the Lord, and a few have been removed by other causes; but it is matter for heartfelt praise to God that He has been pleased to raise up and strengthen this little body of believers, to testify among the Greeks in Asia Minor, and the neighbouring islands, to the absolute authority of Scripture in all matters of faith and practice, and to the all-sufficiency of Jesus Christ as Saviour.

At each of the centres the Gospel is preached faithfully from week to week, in the customary church meetings; taught in day and Sunday schools; and studied in gatherings similar to our Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s, as well as in children's meetings and Bible-classes. In addition, the church members are regularly exhorted and encouraged to make use of their opportunities for speaking of the Saviour to those with whom they come into contact through business and other connections.

Though Gospel truth was so early preached in that district, aggressive Evangelical effort must now be carried on there under enormous difficulties. Ignorance of Divine things combines with gross superstition on one hand, and with openly expressed infidelity on the other. Strenuous opposition is persistently offered by the priests of the Greek Church, to which nearly all the professing Christians belong. National pride frowns on anything that looks as if imported from foreign lands. Politically, the established form of religion is regarded as a bond of national union, and unrelenting persecution is waged against any who dare to profess simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The sifting and winnowing are of the severest order; and the power of God in the heart is alone sufficient to overcome such barriers.

Out of their penury the members have contributed liberally to the support of the work. Their gifts in 1901 amounted to nearly £273, and last year £40 more. To estimate what this means, it must be remembered that in only a few cases do the personal incomes of the members exceed £50; while in others (especially in the region of Pontus) the earnings reach only a mere fraction of that sum. The American Mission, under whose auspices the foundations were partly laid, still stretches out a helping hand in the form of a yearly grant; and the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society also shows a practical and friendly interest.

This is outpost and aggressive work; and in order that the banner of the Cross may be effectively carried forward into districts where the Saviour's name is hardly known, the poor brethren of the churches of Asia are placing the facts of the case before believers in Great Britain. They ask their fellow-Christians to take this dry and parched field to their hearts. Help is specially wanted for enlarging the spheres of labour around centres already occupied, and to make it possible to enter other doors that are now standing open. The itinerating work could be made much more aggressive; the establishment of a publication department would, it is believed, be welcomed by the Greek community; a temperance café would be very useful among the young men of Smyrna; and the day-schools at Ordoo and Magnesia could be enlarged with excellent results. A sum of £400 per annum is very much wanted for the next three years; with £500 for the pressing needs of Smyrna itself. The Mission Sunday-school calls for rebuilding, being in a tumble-down condition. It is very desirable also to provide for one of the young men during two years of theological training.

As our readers are already aware, Rev. Dr. XENOPHON P. MOSCHOU is at present paying a visit to this country, during which he hopes to be able to enlist on behalf of the Smyrna Union such sympathy as will provide for its more pressing needs. He is himself a native of Salonika (the Thessalonica of the New Testament), and the son of a priest in the Orthodox Greek Church. His conversion is an instance of the working of the Holy Spirit through the written Word of God. The New Testament was used as a text-book for the study of ancient Greek in the school he attended; and the passages which young Moschou committed to memory in class opened up to him the way of salvation.

REV. DR. MOSCHOU.

Knowing nothing of the distinction between Evangelical Christianity and the forms of the Greek Church, and never having heard any Gospel preaching or teaching, he yet entered into living union with the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour in his fourteenth year. In his spiritual lowliness this young believer remained for eight years in outward connection with the Greek Church, because he knew no better; though from the time of his conversion he was, of course, separated in heart, and to some extent also in practice. He could not talk of the saints or the Virgin Mary, pray to them, or kiss the pictures as his neighbours did; and he stopped singing in the church choir, of which before he had been a member.

For four years he bore testimony for Christ in the school at Salonika, and for four more at the University of Athens; nor was it without effect, for one school-fellow who learned about the Saviour in this way, and who traces his conversion to that time, is now a preacher of the Gospel at Joannina.

In his twenty-second year, Mr. Moschou was present, in Athens, at a discussion between an Evangelical and a Greek Churchman, when he had his attention drawn for the first time to the fact that nowhere in the Bible is the ministry of the Christian Church spoken of as a priesthood. To his well-trained mind it was at once apparent that transubstantiation must go with the priesthood—"no priest, no sacrifice"—but in order to settle the matter finally in his own mind, he set himself to study the matter in the national library, and then spent four days in his own room meditating on the subject, with prayer and fasting. As the outcome, he saw quite clearly that he must take his place among Evangelicals; and without delay placed himself in communication with Dr. Kalopothakes, who was minister of the congregation connected with the American Mission.

Dr. Moschou has many friends in this country, having studied theology for two years in Edinburgh, with a view to the ministry of the Gospel. Soon after his return to Athens, he acted as interpreter to the late Dr. Somerville on a visit paid during one of his evangelistic tours. A year and a half was spent in missionary work at Salonika, in company with Rev. Dr. Thornton R. Sampson. The suspicion with which the motives of Evangelical converts were regarded then led Dr. Moschou to go to Athens, where he could earn his living, and preach the Gospel without remuneration. For five years the meetings went on, Dr. Baedeker being among a number of visitors who regarded them with deep satisfaction.

After a time, however, he came to the conclusion that he ought to spend his whole time in Gospel work; and, his maintenance being provided, he began work at Piræus. In 1892, while he was being used of God there, Dr. Constantine died at Smyrna, and Dr. Moschou was invited to undertake the charge of the vacant pastorate.

While in Athens, Dr. Moschou began trying to do something with his pen for the enlightenment of his fellow-countrymen. He published a commentary on the Epistle to the Galatians; conducted a weekly periodical for one year, which formed a volume of "Christian Meditations"; translated Rev. Andrew Murray's book, "Abide in Christ," and a few tracts. In Smyrna, he translated Rev. F. B. Meyer's "Christian Living," and a prize essay on the Sabbath; wrote a pamphlet on "Sanctification" (the Christ Life), and a booklet on being filled with the Spirit. He has translated a little book with three beautiful and helpful stories, and Rev. G. H. Macgregor's "The Quiet Hour," which is soon to appear. He wants to do more of that kind of work if the means are forthcoming, for he believes the printed page can reach many more than the voice of the preacher.

Dr. Moschou is well accredited to the British churches; and an influential reference committee is supporting him in his appeal.

Hypnotic Poisons.—An influential medical journal gives prominence to a serious protest made by Dr. Tisard against the rapidly increasing use of medicaments taken to induce sleep. During the past few years many such drugs have been added to the list, and at present upwards of fifty are commonly advertised, most of which are dangerous—if in no other way, from the cumulative effect of repeated small doses. The growing tendency to fall back upon these "hypnotic poisons," as they have been termed by the scientists, is a sad symptom of the hurry and worry, and pressure of modern life, and also of the unworthy excitement to which so many people yield themselves. The true and only remedy for the daily burden of anxiety and keen struggle is to be found, however, not in the use of soporifics and stimulants, but in the cultivation of quiet faith in God, and in dwelling upon His promises. "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest" (Exod. xxxiii. 14). "I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of a good courage" (Josh. i. 5, 6). "I will show thee what thou shalt do" (1 Sam. xvi. 3).

The May Meetings.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

AN excellent spirit pervaded the annual meeting of the Trinitarian Bible Society, held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday of last week. This special department of labour for God goes forward with unabated vigour, and the outlook was never brighter or more promising. In submitting the seventy-second report, Rev. Dr. E. W. Bullinger called attention to the fact that while the Society's primary purpose is the distribution of the Word of God, it is also an active agency for the emphasizing of Christian evidences and advocacy of the claims of the Bible.

During the past year the circulation of the Scriptures had been 4,396 Bibles, 14,784 New Testaments, and 75,176 Gospels or other separate books, in all 94,356 volumes, of which fully two-thirds were in foreign tongues. The income for the twelve months had been £3,890, and the expenditure £2,427, the balance carried forward being larger than usual on account of the receipt of legacies.

NEW TRANSLATIONS CALLED FOR.

It was noted with special satisfaction that a new edition of the Society's Hebrew version of the New Testament brought the circulation of it up to 290,000 copies. Signal proofs continue to be given of its usefulness, while indications increase of an ever-widening field being prepared. The translation of the New Testament into the Basque languages is now complete, and for the first time since the Reformation this European people have been provided with the Gospel message in their own tongue. Arrangements have been completed for the preparation of a Kurdish Version, called for by American and German missionaries in Kurdestan. Representations having been made that the present version provided for the Kabyle tribes in North Africa, it has been determined to issue, by way of experiment, one Gospel of a new translation.

Tidings of the most interesting character were received regarding the scattering of the seed of the Word in Brittany, Spain, Italy, South Africa, and Haiti, as well as in other lands, and among emigrants and others in the ports of the United Kingdom. Free grants of copies of the sacred volume are readily made to Christian workers in localities where the Society is unable to undertake regular work.

With warm and hearty words the chairman (Mr. Harry Curtis Nisbet) sounded out the note of gratitude to God for the progress of which the committee were privileged to tell; and at the same time pressed on the personal attention of members the serious responsibility to take advantage of the openings for expansion with which they are now faced.

The value of a clear testimony to the authenticity, integrity, and supremacy of the Word of God was pointed out by Mr. James Inskip (Bristol). The time is one of special danger to the rising generation, because of the prevalence of concession and compromise; but the Society insists that the Bible is able to accomplish His purpose without amendment or apology. Rev. Theodore A. Howard (Toxteth, Liverpool) followed with a vigorous address showing that the Bible is of more importance than any Society, being, as it is, the Word of the Lord, which liveth and abideth for ever.

Passing to the missionary aspect of the work, Rev. John E. Hazelton (Marylebone), showed that it is the high privilege of Christian people to hold forth the Word of Life, depending upon the Holy Spirit to use it effectually in the hearts of readers and hearers. From practical experience gained among seamen and others belonging to many nations, Mr. Stephen Burrowes (Naples) bore witness to the direct fruit-bearing of Bible distribution as a means of seeking lost souls for the Redeemer.

Among others who took part in the proceedings were Rev. T. George and Rev. James Smith.

The Baptist Union.

THE chief event of Tuesday was the opening of the Baptist Church House. The building is a handsome one, centrally situated in Southampton Row, Holborn, and is likely to prove a gathering point for Baptists from all parts of the country, and an important centre for the work of the Baptist Union. The throng of people who passed through the House, and afterwards inconveniently crowded King's Hall, bore witness to the interest taken in the event.

FOREIGN MISSION WORK.

Missionary work occupies a very important place in the Union meetings. The missionary soiree at King's Hall was a crowded gathering. The secretary, Mr. A. H. Baynes, referred to the annual report as a record of most encouraging work. In India, two new large fields had been opened. In China, there was a great spirit of hearing among those who had formerly been slow to welcome the missionary. In Africa, there had been great blessing attending work on the Congo. From Monsembi came news of an awakening. People were asking for a meeting every night; the Christian Endeavour numbered 100 members; many had been baptized; and some who were formerly cannibals were sitting at the Lord's table. At Wathen, 151 had been added to the church; and between forty and fifty outstations were manned and supported by native Christians. In the West Indies, all the churches were now free of the parent society and were supporting a missionary society of their own.

A STORY OF PROGRESS.

The speech of Rev. W. E. Blomfield, of Coventry, dealt particularly with the history of the Baptist missionary work in the three provinces of Shantung, Shansi, and Shensi, in China. It was barely forty years since the work began, and in spite of difficulties they had now a church membership of nearly 5,000 (which had almost doubled itself in the last ten years), six stations, 3,000 scholars in Sunday-schools, a missionary training college, 120 evangelists and colporteurs, three medical dispensaries, and a number of zenana visitors. Such a record constituted the finest piece of Christian apologetics. For the further advancement of the work, the supreme need is a missionary church. To many the work of missions was an optional extra, or a hobby for fanatics. We need to make the missionary cause as broad as the Church. Pastors must take the lead and insist that the Church exists to bring the world to Christ. Rev. R. Spurgeon, of Barisal, gave an interesting report of work in Backergunje, and Rev. H. T. Stonelake, of Monsembi, told of good work on the Upper Congo.

DR. PIERSON'S SERMON.

On Wednesday, Bloomsbury Chapel was crowded to hear Dr. Pierson's sermon. Taking for his text Rom. x. 8, 9, the Doctor gave an earnest and impassioned message on Christian missions. He spoke of the Gospel as being in the market; there is always and everywhere a demand for it. Our business is to stand in the emporium of the world, ring the Gospel bell, and become the market crier, saying, "To everyone that thirsteth, come ye." It is our business to remove the obstacle of ignorance, and make it impossible for any nation to say, "We did not know either God's demand or God's provision." Legalism, as another hindrance, was powerfully illustrated by the story of Chundra Lela, the Indian priestess, who, in search of peace, journeyed to great shrines, bathed in sacred waters, fasted, did pennance, endured privations, spent money lavishly, sat in the burning sun with fires burning round her, and on winter nights stood in cold water—all this until the Gospel delivered her from legalism. The message of missions was the Incarnation, which brings God down to man; and the Resurrection, which takes man up to God. These are the two pillars which support the temple of supernatural religion. A man who denies these has no right to preach, and has no Gospel worth preaching. The method of missions was simple, and required three things—a mouth to speak, an ear to hear, and a heart that believes, and becomes another mouth to speak, and so on, until the world is girdled by the Gospel message. Referring to the passion for souls as the motive for missions, the preacher pointed to Paul, who never reached a sublimer height than at the close of Rom. viii., when he said: "Who shall separate us?" And yet in chap. ix., with only one verse between, he says: "I could wish myself accursed for my brethren's sake."

Another missionary meeting was held on Wednesday evening in the Queen's Hall, and drew a magnificent crowd of young people.

MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

On Thursday night the annual public meeting of the Missionary Society was held in the Exeter Hall. Sir W. Mackworth Young, K.C.S.I., late Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab, presided, and bore important testimony to the work of the missionaries during the famine of 1897, and especially to the work of lady missionaries. Deep interest was created by Rev. Frank Harmon in his references to the great Boxer outbreak. He showed that there were many causes which led to it. Some were political. Irritation was not unnatural in the Chinese in view of the growing power of Russia in the North; of France in the South; the action of Germany when two Roman Catholic missionaries had been murdered; and the action of England in taking Wei-hai-wei, and especially in having forced the opium traffic upon the nation. To which must be added the moral condition of some of the parts of China where offences were common which would not be permitted in a Chinese city. In putting blame upon the missionaries it must be remembered that there is a great difference between Roman Catholic and Protestant missionaries. The speaker told of a Chinese official who told him that a Roman Catholic had been accused of a serious offence. After investigation he found the charge to be true, and arrested the man, but the Roman Catholic priest demanded his release. Such interference with the course of justice was frequent. Other speakers were Principal Gould, Rev. W. Perkins (W. M. S.), and Rev. C. H. Williams, of Kalka, North India.

On Thursday morning, at the Baptist Union Session, two important subjects were discussed. The first was that of the recent atrocities on the Congo, and was introduced in a capital speech by Dr. Clifford; and the second, "The Condition of our Ministry," on which Rev. J. G. Greenhough read a thoughtful and searching paper. On the former subject the resolution passed by the Assembly went a little further than that of the Baptist Missionary Committee, and urged "the British Government to use its influence to secure the enforcement of the terms and provisions of the Berlin Act, which, if carried out, would render impossible the recurrence of such atrocities." On the subject introduced by Mr. Greenhough it was evident that the Assembly was not agreed. The "modified Presbyterianism" which was in the minds of some of the leaders of the denomination was not welcome to many present.

Off to the West.—Under the auspices of Dr. Barnardo, a party of 133 young girl emigrants have left for Canada. This is the second party of emigrants for the current year, the first, which sailed in March, being composed of 317 boys. The Homes have now in all emigrated 14,107 young people, of whom, up to date, 98 per cent. have turned out perfectly satisfactory, and have been reported upon most favourably by government inspectors and other officials on "the other side." The girls travelled by special train to Liverpool, whence they sailed by the s.s. "Kensington" (Dominion Line), under the care of Mrs. A. B. Owen and Miss Davis.

Protecting Native Races.

BY the invitation of the President, the Duke of Westminster, the annual meeting of the Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee was held at Grosvenor House on Wednesday of last week. The large attendance indicated the increased interest with which the committee's endeavours are being followed, in preventing the demoralization of native races in various parts of the world. Dr. HARFORD presented the report, which opened with a cordial recognition of the Transvaal Liquor Licensing Ordinance, which came into force in November of last year, and which incorporated the stringent regulations proclaimed by Lord Milner.

THE OUTLOOK IN WEST AFRICA.

It is regretted that equally protective legislation has not been adopted in West Africa, where a native may procure as much liquor as he can afford to buy, and where alcohol is permitted to be adulterated with fusel oil. An attempt is being made to limit this adulteration to 0.5 per cent. This is, however, not considered satisfactory; but in reply to the committee's protests and requests for more stringent legislation, they are met with the reply that to secure effectual measures international co-operation is necessary.

This co-operation the committee are endeavouring to promote. But England must not be content to wait for the action of other European powers, and they point to Northern and Southern Nigeria, with Lagos, as a sphere under sole British control, in which at small additional cost legislation of a more restrictive, if not prohibitive character might be enforced. Gratification was expressed at the passing of the New Hebrides Bill, by the United States Senate last year. Reference was also made to the encouragement given to the committee in their efforts to defend the natives from the intrusion of alcohol in New Zealand, Barotsiland, and Assam.

WHAT NEW ZEALAND NEEDS.

The EARL OF STAMFORD (who presided) spoke of the loss sustained by the committee through the death of several of the strong advocates of its work—the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dean Farrar, Mr. Johnston, M.P., and Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P. He was glad to announce that the Bishop of London had consented to become chairman. Having spent some time in New Zealand, in close association with Sir George Grey, Lord Stamford spoke from personal knowledge of the question as it concerns that country. The regulations were good as regarded the supply of liquor to natives, but they were not properly carried out. The committee are now trying to strengthen the hands of the young Maori party who recognise the evils of the present situation. The European governments had already co-operated on the question of the white slave traffic, and the chairman felt convinced that when they understand each other better, they will more effectively co-operate on this drink question also.

A PLEA FOR PROHIBITION.

In the course of a vigorous and informing address, Rev. G. ARMSTRONG BENNETTS feared that there were difficulties ahead with regard to the Kaffir beer. The principle of drinking beer instead of spirits is not to be encouraged. We shall not build up a true government in this country by encouraging the drink traffic in distant parts of the Empire or at home. The speaker was thankful for the liquor ordinance of the Transvaal, and hoped the time was not far distant when such legislation would apply to all parts of the empire, and when prohibition will be enforced.

Concerning his recent visit to Germany, Dr. HARFORD announced that he had conferred with the German Committee. He had also had an interview with a leading official of the Foreign Office on the question of co-operation, and was assured that the authorities are perfectly ready to give favourable consideration to the German committee's representations.

A touching appeal on behalf of his native brethren was made by Bishop OLUWOLE. He pleaded that the introduction to West Africa of concentrated forms of alcohol, often containing quantities of fusel oil, was a grave abuse, and that the Government should seek to secure an international agreement to prohibit these forms of alcohol, and restrict the West African liquor trade. They in Lagos had hoped that their new Governor would prohibit liquor as he did in New Guinea. Unfortunately he has not done this, on the ground that he "had to find means for carrying on the Government." It was a scandal that they should have to depend for their revenue on the liquor traffic. They in Africa were desirous of growing more cotton for England than at present, but if that is to be the case, this traffic must be suppressed, for drink and labour cannot go together.

Prebendary H. E. Fox and the Bishop of SALISBURY having spoken in appreciative terms of the committee's work, Sir WILFRID LAWSON strongly condemned the practice of any government making money by means of the corruption of its subjects. He was thankful for the committee and its work, and expressed the conviction that every such meeting is a further step towards the day when the emancipation of our empire from the drink curse shall be procured.

The Railway Mission.

THE spirit of enthusiasm in the Lord's work that is so sedulously fostered by the Railway Mission at its many centres was strongly in evidence at the annual meeting held last week at Exeter Hall. Delegates from the metropolis and the provinces were present in large numbers, and full of fervour, and it was particularly encouraging to note that the heartiest responses of all were evoked when the speakers in the course of their addresses told of precious souls brought into the fold of Christ.

Mr. R. NIXON, the esteemed secretary, had a capital report to present. Eight new branches have been opened during the year. About a thousand meetings were held every week for railway men and their friends at the various branches. A large number of these gatherings were conducted during meal times in the mess-rooms connected with the goods, locomotive, and other departments.

Many workers are sending tidings of cheer. "One tells of a goods guard, for many years a drunkard, who made his wife and home wretched. He accepted Christ in his own home, and is now living for God, quite delivered from the chains of drink, seeking to win others for Christ. His wife, too, is saved, and they have a very happy home. A workman in the waggon shops, also a confirmed drunkard, and spoken of as 'hopeless' by his relations and friends, trusted Christ at one of the Sunday night meetings and has since been kept by the power of God. He has not had the least desire for drink since his conversion, and is one of our best workers.

"A goods porter was very much opposed to the mess-room meetings, and he even locked the door on the workers one morning when he saw them coming to the meeting. He was a horse racer and a gambler. He is to-day a humble follower of Christ, and a great help in the work. He has put up Gospel texts on the walls of the mess-room at his own expense, and is witnessing for God among his mates."

TENT EVANGELISM.

A special feature of the year's work was a Tent Campaign. Special services were held in the tent at Heaton, a large railway centre near Newcastle, for three weeks, with considerable success. The tent was then moved to Crewe, where meetings were held for a month, after which Wolverton was visited; here the Lord gave a rich outpouring of blessing, and quite a revival took place in that important railway centre, where 4,600 men are employed in the L. & N. W. R. Carriage Works. The time of the meetings was extended, and the tent remained at Wolverton for about seven weeks. During this period the names of over 200 persons were taken who professed to accept Christ. A branch of the mission was established at which a number of weekly meetings have since been held with good results. A betting man who used to stand outside the works gate said that his receipts dropped from £8 per week to thirty shillings.

A SCOTTISH REVIVAL.

The Society's agent in Scotland reports:—"The work at nearly all our sixty branches has been well maintained, and three new branches are established. At some of our branches I believe scores have professed conversion. At one branch, the workers were much distressed because of the smallness of the numbers attending the meetings. They put up bills and visited the homes, but it seemed to be all in vain. One Saturday night they met to wait on God about the matter, and for nearly three hours they cried to the Lord to break in on the terrible indifference that seemed to possess the people. Next night more than double the usual number were present. The following Sunday still more came, and soon the hall was packed, and within a few weeks about forty professed conversion."

IN OTHER LANDS.

In South Africa Mr. Fred Stakes has received a hearty welcome from the railway people, some of whom had been without any opportunity of attending a religious service for three years. Operations have also been maintained in India and in Japan, where one Company has been so influenced by Mr. Sakurai, one of the station-masters, on the temperance question, that they have changed their custom of giving wine-cups to the men as rewards. They recognise what a good thing the temperance work has been among the men, and now give them a certificate of merit every six months; when they have six of these they will give them a sum of money.

After an earnest appeal for support from Mr. S. GURNEY SHEPPARD, who dwelt more especially on the needs of the Convalescent Homes, the chairman, Mr. T. A. DENNY, referred to the prodigious growth of railway enterprise as a reason for extension. There are over half a million railway servants in this country alone. Happily, the Railway Mission, though young, moves rapidly ahead.

A "FAST TRAIN."

An earnest address was next given by Rev. JOHN WILSON, of Woolwich, who compared the Mission to a "fast train." The speaker wove into his speech many telling illustrations encouraging to Gospel workers, and moved all hearts as he depicted a newly-converted drunkard who, taking up his fiddle, found that "he could not play the old tunes; they had gone, and for the first time in his life he sang and played, 'Praise the Lord! Hallelujah.'" Mr. Wilson's concluding words were of solemn invitation to immediate decision.

Brief but striking testimonies followed from several delegates. One from York who "used to get well on for a pound a week and plenty to drink" as chairman at a public-house meeting, gave the story of his conversion. A New Cross man spoke of the Lord Jesus Christ as "the best Friend, on the platform or in the guard's van." A G.E.R. employé told of blessing at Stratford; and a G.W.R. man from Swindon, "a converted drunkard, gambler, and blasphemer, and once the most miserable man on earth," portrayed the experiences which led him to realize the peace of God.

Greetings from many hundreds of railway men who have benefited by the Mission in South Africa, were brought by Mr. PRICE (general manager of Transvaal Railways), who said that the Society is a bond of comradeship. The cordial feelings manifested by friends in the home land are heartily reciprocated.

"THE POWER OF THE GOSPEL"

was the subject of the following address, given by Dr. HARRY GUINNESS, which formed a fitting conclusion to an inspiring meeting. Power is not in the train, but in the engine; the power of the Gospel is not in man, but in God. A man once said to Mr. D. L. Moody, "Your religion is all imagination." Mr. Moody replied, "Well, we want more of the 'imagination' that can grip a drunkard and lift him out of the gutter." No, it is not imagination; the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

THERE was a large attendance at Exeter Lower Hall on Tuesday of last week, when Lord Kinnaird presided at the annual meeting of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission. A short abstract of the report was read by Rev. A. R. Cavalier (secretary). The committee, he said, greatly deplored the fact that they had twenty-two workers less than at the beginning at 1902, when they had 157 European missionaries and assistants, 191 native Christian teachers and nurses, and 84 Bible-women, making a total of 432 workers. They had 64 schools and institutions, in which were 3,208 pupils, as well as 226 women and girls in orphanages. The missionaries and Bible-women have access to 9,728 zenanas and houses and 2,728 regular pupils under instruction. The Bible women also visit 1,012 villages. In the medical work they were greatly encouraged. In the society's hospitals at Lucknow, Patna, Benares, Ajodhya, and Jaunpur there were treated no fewer than 23,219 patients and 72,921 consultations were recorded. Mr. Cavalier briefly reviewed the work at each station, the advance made being most cheering.

The financial statement having been presented by Mr. Arthur H. Habershon (financial secretary), Lord Kinnaird deeply deplored the fact that they had been compelled to give up one station, but they could not go beyond their prospective income, and it might become necessary to relinquish another. They had the command to "go and preach," yet how could they go except they be sent?

Miss de Sélincourt gave a very interesting sketch of the work just commenced at the Lady Muir Memorial Home at Allahabad, for training Indian women and girls who desire to devote their lives to evangelistic endeavour. The buildings now erected will accommodate twelve girls, and were opened in November; but, when complete, there will be room for about thirty pupils. The first object of the school is to meet the need of spiritual preparation for spiritual work. Other schools might be giving splendid preparation in Bible study, but this of itself is not sufficient for true missionary work. The girls must be trained in a knowledge of the heathen religions of India, so that they may teach their sisters wisely, and thus lead them to Christ.

Rev. Canon Roberts (C.M.S.), who has for some time acted as hon. secretary of the Society in Western India, gave a most graphic account of the operations carried on by them there. In connection with the Beni-Israel work carried on by Miss Trott and Miss Campbell, they had two very prosperous schools. The Society is not, however, neglecting zenana visitation. In Bombay it is carried on in three languages; but it is somewhat imperfect, as there are only three ladies for it, one in each language. Of Miss Harvey's work at Nazik he spoke in the highest terms. Miss Harvey, he said, is thoroughly practical, and more than that, she is doggedly persevering. It was touching to see her tenderly nursing plague patients, and doing her utmost to bring them relief and to save life. Passing to Munmar, where the W. T. Paton Memorial building is erected, he told of a wonderful transformation. There is now a well-equipped station, with a most devoted band of missionaries; and after a visit he paid there last January he had no hesitation in writing home to Mr. Cavalier that the change was a moral wonder. He referred briefly to the work of Mrs. Sorabji at Poona, and also to that carried on by Bible women at Aurungabad, Jolna, Sholapur, and Ahmednugger. Concluding, Canon Roberts said: "When people at home criticize the work of a missionary society, ask them why people on the spot help the work? How it is that there is a local fund? Why an officer in India supports a Bible woman? How it is that men like Sir Andrew Wingate and Sir Andrew Fraser are not afraid of compromising their official positions by supporting it?" All the ladies sent out by the Society lived in the fear of God, with the one aim of winning souls for His Kingdom.

London Evangelistic Singers.

AT the fourth annual meeting of the London Evangelistic Singers' Union, held at Mildmay Conference Hall, on Monday week, an encouraging report was presented by the hon. secretary, Mr. H. Beaton, who showed that at many important services held in London during the past year choirs provided by the Union have taken part with much acceptance. In addition to large central gatherings, some hundreds of local meetings have been attended. The membership is now 395.

During the meeting, prayer was offered for Mr. Ira D. Sankey in his affliction, and loving sympathy for the esteemed singer found expression.

Mr. N. R. Hughman spoke from 2 Chron. xx., urging the necessity of "conversion, consecration, continuance, and courage." Colonel Morton added some wise and hearty words of counsel.

Not the least delightful part of the programme was the rendering of nearly a dozen pieces from "The Christian Choir" and "The Gospel Male Chorus Book" by the united choirs. The work is full of bright promise.

The National Refuges.

EXETER HALL presented a striking spectacle on the occasion of the annual festival of the National Refuges for Waifs and Strays held on Tuesday week. The building was densely crowded by an audience which followed with manifest delight the singing and physical exercises of the young folks from the Society's various institutions, who filled the platform.

The annual statement of Mr. Bristow Wallen, Secretary, told of continued progress. Over 900 boys and girls are now in the Society's Ships and Homes. The boys in the Homes on shore are trained in tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering, gardening, farming, baking, housework, and each Home has its instrumental band. The girls have to do all the household work in connection with their Homes, such as scrubbing and cleaning, washing clothes, making and mending their own garments, and knitting and darning. In addition, the children receive a sound education, under Government inspection.

During the last few years the committee have been alive to the necessity of more fully preparing the boys for the work of after days by which they propose to earn their living. The manual training which the lads receive during the time they are in the country Homes, in view of the necessity for attending school, is naturally limited. The committee therefore decided to give the most apt tailors and shoemakers a further period of two years' instruction under fully-qualified mechanics and instructors. A portion of the Society's headquarters in Shaftesbury Avenue is set apart as a Technical School for about forty boys.

Some characteristics of the Society's work are, the care taken in the religious training, the examinations in Scripture knowledge that are regularly conducted, and the commending of the children, on leaving, to the spiritual care of local ministers.

THE TRAINING SHIPS.

The Society's training ships, Arethusa and Chichester, are doing sterling work for poor boys between fourteen and sixteen years of age. The Arethusa is a large frigate moored at Greenhithe, and the Chichester, a brigantine of 120 tons, is her sea-going tender; 7,045 boys have been prepared for a seafaring life on these two vessels.

Since the establishment of the Society, sixty years ago, no fewer than 16,500 destitute children have been rescued and trained for useful work. In the Dominion of Canada there are to-day six hundred men who were once boys under its care. They are, for the most part, distributed in Ontario and Manitoba, and are engaged chiefly in agricultural work.

Addresses in advocacy of the work were given by Rev. Canon Hensley Henson and Rev. David Fyffe.

Christian "Commercials."

COMPETITION in the commercial world becomes keener each year, and so there is a danger of commercial men becoming so engrossed in business as to neglect spiritual life. It is well, therefore, that the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association maintains its operations effectively. During the past year 328 new members have been enrolled, making a total of about 2,000; and no fewer than 490 grants have been distributed from the Beneficent Fund to cases of distress. The Society also keeps up more than 220 libraries in hotels frequented by commercial men, and has Bibles and text-cards placed in the bedrooms.

The annual meetings were held last week at Exeter Hall, when Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith presided in the afternoon, and Mr. C. E. Tritton in the evening. Mr. Tritton gave some earnest words "as a business man to business men." Likening the report to a prospectus, he declared their undertaking to be sound, practical, business-like, and promising excellent "dividends," which would be applied in a religious sense. He urged his hearers not to resemble the "keep-myself-to-myself" men and women, but to rather imitate the example of Christ, who went about doing good.

Mr. Leonard Courtney, in the course of an interesting review of the year's work, told of visits he had made to branches, and of helpful meetings at large business centres. Addresses followed from Archdeacon Sinclair and Rev. J. G. Train.

City Policemen.

THE City of London Police Institute fills a useful place in its ministry to the spiritual and social needs of the guardians of order. Its first purpose (as Mr. H. Leng, hon. sec., states in the annual report) is to win the men for Christ.

The year's work has been full of encouragement. Not a few of the constables, in the course of their duty, manifest a Christian spirit which has fruitful effects. "The way God has used our saved men," says Mr. Leng, "calls forth our highest note of praise. Just a few cases. 'Your daughter stands at the top of the street; will you receive her back again?' was the short sentence preceding a very happy restoration scene between a Christian mother and her long-prayed-for wayward daughter."

Again: "In the ordinary course of duty, one of our men had to take a poor fellow to the hospital with a broken leg, and then convey the news to the wife, who was found to be in an advanced stage of consumption, and with a family of ten young children. Not only was the police officer able to give a little pecuniary assistance, but by grace he was used to convey spiritual consolation, and allowed to commit father, mother, and children to God in prayer."

On another occasion, Mr. Leng "received a letter telling of a motherless lad who had been arrested for watch stealing. A visit was paid to Brixton Gaol, the lad got into a home, and his father, who had fallen through drink, was invited to the Institute, where God healed his backslidings."

The annual meetings were held a few days ago at the Institute (19, Cheapside, E.C.) In the afternoon Alderman Sir George W. Truscott presided, and Rev. W. R. Mowll gave an encouraging address. The evening meeting, over which Mr. J. T. Mogridge presided, was largely devoted to testimonies from Christian men in the City force.

The Mother of the Japanese Sailors.—Captain C. Tamari, Japanese Naval Attaché, informs us that His Majesty the Emperor of Japan "has been graciously pleased to confer the Order of the Crown (Ho Kwansho) on Miss McLean, of the Japanese Christian Institute, in recognition of valuable services rendered by her to the detachments of several warships which have been constructed for the Japanese Government in this country during the last eight years, and to the crews of the squadron which came to British waters last year on the occasion of the coronation of King Edward and Queen Alexandra."

Christian Colportage.

IN the dissemination of the printed Word the Christian Colportage Association becomes increasingly active and useful as the days go by. Its agents are, indeed, evangelists, whose labours in visitation and personal dealing are greatly blessed. The Christian colporteur is no mere hawker, but a soul-winner.

At the annual meeting, held on Friday last at Exeter Hall, an encouraging report was presented. The sales of the year have amounted to 68,801 Bibles and Testaments, 476,331 books, 364,080 magazines, and 322,664 Scripture cards, of the total value of £16,516 9s. 11d. Besides this, nearly a million Gospel tracts were wisely distributed. This makes a total sale, during the twenty-nine years of the Association's work, of more than twenty millions of Bibles, Testaments, and books, and four millions of Scripture cards, with fourteen millions of tracts given away.

There are now 143 men at work, under the wise direction of Mr. H. D. Brown, the secretary. They visit more than 2,000 towns and villages, reaching all sorts of people, while in public-houses, at race-courses, in hop-gardens and barracks, at markets and fairs, these industrious missioners find a way to reach many with the "wonderful words of life."

Some striking incidents are given from the diaries of colporteurs:—

SALVATION OF AN INFIDEL ARTIST.

"An artist who was an infidel was converted through reading the book, 'Precious Truths for Everyone.' I spoke to him about his soul, but he was very indifferent, because he had read so many infidel books. He became very ill, and I was led to take him this book, "Precious Truths," which he read. Calling his sister, he told her that this book had shown him his lost condition, and asked her to pray to God that he might be saved. Ultimately he accepted Christ as his Saviour, and left a clear testimony behind that his end was peace."

"UNEXPECTED FRUIT."

"I saw two ladies to-day to whom I sold some books to take with them on their holidays, and we had knelt together asking that God's blessing might go with them. They told me that they had given the book, 'I Have Found a Ransom,' to a woman living in a cottage, not thinking at the time to go that way again. Later on they had again been in the neighbourhood, and had called at the cottage, when they found the woman overjoyed to see them, saying that she had been searching for years for what she had found in that book. As we had before asked God's blessing, we now knelt together and praised Him for the gracious answer."

A SLAVE OF STRONG DRINK.

"Calling at a house, a woman of good circumstances, whom I had visited once or twice previously, came to the door with one hand bound up and her face bruised. Entering into conversation, she told me that her besetting sin was strong drink. It had such a power over her that she could not pass a public-house without going in, and that was how she had got into her present condition. She knew she was doing wrong, but could not overcome it. I told her it was only by the grace of God that she could overcome it, 'His grace alone being sufficient for us.' I then endeavoured to point her to the 'Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world' (John i. 29). After a few words of prayer, she said she would trust in the Lord. I have seen her several times since, and I am thankful to say she is rejoicing in the Lord, proving that 'His grace is sufficient,' and she says now is the happiest time of her life."

The Chairman, in the course of a hearty speech of advocacy, urged Christian people to apply the lessons of the Association to their own lives, taking up with greater energy the work of distributing, if not actually selling, Christian literature.

Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich, followed with an earnest address from the standpoint of the home. There is a keen demand for reading, which is met by the colporteurs with supplies of pure and helpful books. Nothing of a "trashy" order is sold. As to the Gospel texts, what a force there is in them when the Holy Spirit rivets the words into the souls of the unconverted! "I know a man who tore a text in two and flung the pieces away in anger. The wind blew back one piece on which was the word 'Jesus.' Thinking 'Why is this word so curiously obtruded on me?' he went on to ask himself, 'Jesus! who is Jesus?' and 'What is Jesus to me?' From this he went on to reading the Bible, and ultimately found Jesus a reality." Mr. Middleton spoke in hearty terms of the colporteur, trudging mile after mile with his heavy pack, and doing his best for his Lord, despite many rebuffs.

Further earnest words were spoken by Mr. R. Thomson—who dwelt on the high importance of a wide circulation of the Word of God—and by other friends of the work. Earlier in the afternoon, and again in the evening, nearly a hundred of the colporteurs were present at meetings for praise and testimony, when the experiences that were related by them were rich in spiritual helpfulness.

South America's Millions.

AMONG the great mission fields of the world, that of South America, with its eight million heathen Indians, thirty-two million Spanish and Portuguese-speaking natives, as well as English settlers, is undoubtedly exercising the minds of Christians at home in a greater degree than ever before. The work of the South American Missionary Society has aroused considerable interest, and the annual meeting at Exeter Hall on Thursday was well attended.

The abstract from the report read by Rev. E. P. Cachemaile took account of many signs of progress. So rapid has been the growth in Paraguay that an increase of the Chaco Mission staff is urgently required. Encouraging results have appeared at Quepe and Cholchol, where provision is being made for the instruction of the youth of Araucania. The station at Tekenika has been maintained. Turning to the evangelistic work, much significance attaches to Rev. W. Case Morris' Evangelical Schools, which have a powerful influence on the educational methods of South American Republics. The schools and homes at Alberdi, Rosario, are full, and the missionaries have a good grip of the neighbourhood. Reference was made by the secretary to the approaching sale of Clifford's Inn causing the committee to seek a new home. It is felt that the Society should now possess a house of its own which will mean many developments, now impossible of accomplishment.

Bishop Stirling, who was in the chair, and who for some years superintended the mission stations, related many encouraging facts concerning the present developments of the work in many centres of commercial activity in South America. The persecution with which the pioneers were confronted has been lived down, and many of the strongest supporters at present are drawn from the ranks of Roman Catholics. The Chairman also spoke heartily of the labours of his successor, Bishop Every. Rev. F. C. Macdonald (Gateshead) referred to the interest with which the work is followed in Durham, and told the story of two pit lads, who had been led by Dr. Every (when curate of Bensham) to devote themselves to parish mission work, and by a course of training prepared themselves for the mission field, and sailed a few days ago for South America under the auspices of the Society.

Some of the difficulties experienced on the field were spoken of by Mr. Sidney Gedge, particularly that of translating the Bible into the Mapuche language. The Bishop of Down and Connor deplored the spiritual destitution that broods over South America, and told what is being done by the Irish auxiliaries to strengthen the Society's hands. Mr. W. Wilson, from Cholchol, reviewed the history of the Araucanian mission, and was able to speak with confidence of the way in which spiritual and educational needs of the Mapuches are being met.

Reformatory and Refuge.

THE past year has been an exceptionally busy one for the Reformatory and Refuge Union. The need for such a central body has never been felt so much since its establishment nearly fifty years ago. A summary of the work of the thirty agents of the Society shows that no fewer than 366 children have been placed in Homes or Schools, in addition to a number emigrated or placed in situations. The labours of the women missionaries have also proved fruitful in the task of rescuing their fallen sisters; 1,462 women have been assisted.

The usefulness of the Union is much furthered by the Conferences which it arranges from time to time. These gatherings, which might be described as "parliaments of philanthropy," have afforded valuable help and guidance to the Home Office, suggesting and planning new legislation. For example, the last Conference, held at York, urged the committal of young persons to reformatories for the full legal term of detention; separate trials for, and the effective supervision of, juvenile offenders; government registration and inspection of Children's Homes which appeal to the public for support; and the inspection of the laundries of charitable institutions.

The annual meeting held a few days ago at St. James' Hall was remarkable, as usual, for a large attendance of friends, who were delighted with the singing and musical drills of a well-filled platform of bright and skilfully-trained young people.

The speeches of Sir Albert de Rutzen and other friends bore earnest testimony to the value of the work; and Lord Belper, who presided, in the course of a sympathetic address on efforts for the reclamation of first offenders, said that an interesting experiment is being made at Borstal Prison, where a hundred lads, over sixteen years of age—too old for a reformatory, but yet so young as to warrant separation from the older and more hardened—receive special oversight with a view to their rescue from a criminal career.

Cage Lane Anniversary.

A LARGE number of friends assembled at Cage Lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, on Thursday last to participate in the anniversary celebrations. Mr. J. H. Lydall presided. The annual report was read by Mr. John Wood, and embodied many facts which called for praise to God. The various agencies connected with Cage Lane were shown to be in a healthy condition, and an aggressive evangelistic spirit marks its services. Cordial reference was made by Mr. Wood to the confidence which Mrs. Anderson enjoys in the work to which she devotes herself unsparingly. They had come together in the spirit of joy, desirous of giving thanks to God for what He had done for them, individually and as a body of workers, during the year. The speaker went on to offer some helpful thoughts on 1 Chron. xii. 40—"There was joy in Israel"—and pleaded with his hearers to be men and women whole-hearted for God.

Sir William Stirling was pleased to testify that the mission is taking deeper root and and bearing fruit. Some hearty and cheering words to the workers were listened to with close attention and much appreciated. The next speaker was Colonel Sage, who applied the truth underlying 2 Kings iv., giving an instructive exposition of the narrative. Rev. J. K. Quarterman having spoken, an impressive address was given by the Chairman. He emphasized the need for making the most of the opportunities for Christian service which come to us. In reviewing the past, Mr. Lydall said: "As you look back you feel God's hand has been with you here. Everyone who has a real interest in the mission can only feel that God has been wonderfully gracious in supporting and sustaining, guiding and controlling, this work." A word of exhortation by the chairman to any who had not surrendered themselves to Christ closed a happy and enthusiastic gathering.

Wesleyan Foreign Missions.

THE principal gathering in connection with the anniversary celebrations of the Wesleyan Missionary Society was held at Exeter Hall on Monday morning. The attendance was perhaps somewhat smaller than on many previous occasions, but the meeting was notable for the spirit of enthusiasm which marked the proceedings throughout, and the various speakers were listened to with the closest attention and appreciation.

It is gratifying to Wesleyan Methodists at home and their representatives in the field that throughout the Connexion there has been encouraging response to the appeal made at the annual meeting last year for renewed devotion and endeavour, and there are many evidences that a real missionary awakening is being experienced. The result is that more numerous offers have been made, lay and ministerial, for service on the mission field. Other tangible evidences at home of this awakening are to be seen in the revival of the missionary prayer meeting in many circuits, and a more vigorous working in many quarters of the existing missionary machinery and the experimental adoption of new methods. On the mission field itself there have been tokens of revived energy and of spiritual health and fruitfulness, such as must always be the outcome of increased prayer and zeal on the part of the Church at home.

In the missions under the immediate direction of the British Conference, which are situated in Europe, Ceylon, India, China, South Africa, West Africa, Honduras, and the Bahamas, there are now nearly 400 missionaries, over sixty thousand church members, 100,000 children and young people under instruction, and a total Christian community of about 200,000.

With so many evidences of the continued working of God in the hearts of those who compose and represent the Society, the reading of the annual report was an agreeable duty, and was performed by Rev. William Perkins. The salient features of the Society's work were noted, particular mention being made of the conventions conducted by the President of the Conference in different parts of the kingdom. In China an important forward step has been taken. In the province of Hunan the Society has organized and is carrying on a far-reaching movement. After being hidden from sight for some time, the missions in the Transvaal have reappeared with renewed life and vigour, and the large increase in the membership speaks eloquently for the faithfulness and stability of the native Church and its ministers. In India and Ceylon the work has been maintained with similar devotion, and the increase of 1600 members in the two countries is distinctly encouraging. The home income is over £7,285 more than last year, a result that has been contributed to by every district but one in the kingdom.

Mr. Thomas Walker (Bolton), who presided, paid a touching tribute to the labours of some who had entered into rest during the year. Sympathetic mention was also made of the absence through illness of the widely-honoured and beloved veterans, Dr. Ebenezer Jenkins and Dr. Langham. Proceeding, the Chairman rejoiced that the Wesleyan is essentially a missionary church. Hundreds of letters have been received by the secretaries telling of advance and open doors on every hand. Such a call to the church at home should cause the responsibility to be realized more than ever before in the matter of giving the Gospel to the heathen.

In the course of an impressive address, Dr. J. Shaw Banks (President of Conference) expressed the gratitude of the Society to all other Evangelical organizations from whom sympathy had been received. Concerning the revival of the missionary spirit which is being manifested, he felt that its practical outcome is seen in the number of men who have been gained for the foreign field. He trusted that these will be men of spiritual force, pathfinders in the wilderness of the heathen world. The greatest need at present is, Dr. Banks urged, strengthening the forces at many of the stations, which must no longer be held by ones or twos.

From Pretoria, Rev. Henry W. Goodwin brought tidings of a spiritually healthy and thriving Christian community. At Johannesburg the circuit had so greatly extended that it had been found necessary to divide it into three. The story of the work here was full of incident, and the description of the spiritual awakening which has taken place was listened to with eager attention. When the late war broke out the missionaries adapted themselves to the circumstances, moving in and out among the troops and afterwards ministering to the prisoners. There are now thirty-three missionaries in the Transvaal, but many fields are still unoccupied.

Speaking as an outsider, Dr. Glover (Bristol) heartily congratulated the Society on what had been accomplished, and made a fervid exhortation on the ground that it is the part of the Free Churches to undertake that which requires sacrifice and faith. He argued that missionary work is the work of the Church. If the Church waits for the world to come, it will be disappointed; but if it goes forth to plead with the world to return to Christ, disappointment will never fill its heart or frustrate its efforts. Rev. Frederic Lamb spoke of the encouraging progress that has been made in Hyderabad, particularly among the despised outcasts of the pariah tribes. The fruit of patient labour of years is being seen, and one of the most hopeful features of the outlook in India's mission field is its Theological Institute at Medak, with its thirty sons of the soil in training for evangelistic careers.

South African Aid Society.

THE annual meeting of the South African Mission Aid Society was held on Wednesday last week at the Baptist Church House. Mr. George White, M.P., presided, and an encouraging statement was made as to the interest shown by the churches in the Society's undertakings. The treasurer, Mr. Goddard Clarke, specified pioneering in Rhodesia as a pressing need. The South African Union would commence work at once if assured of help. Vast numbers of natives in the "Compounds" along the Rand could be reached with the Gospel if missionaries could be provided.

Rev. George Yuille, president of the Baptist Union of Scotland, warmly commended the enterprise as one both of church extension and of foreign mission work. They saw in South Africa the beginnings of a great country, and the present was a unique opportunity for the work of Christian patriotism.

Rev. Hugh D. Brown, of Dublin, said that, now the war was over, it was their duty to rally together for the spread of the Gospel, so that Boer and Briton might meet beside the Cross of Christ. New colonies bring new responsibilities.

Dr. Clifford spoke of Africa as presenting great problems. God seems to have given Britain the privilege of taking a large part in solving those problems, which include the reconciliation and harmonious co-operation of two long-sundered races, Boer and Briton, and the establishment of justice and righteousness in the conditions of material toil, especially for the weakest and poorest of the land. Another problem was the proclamation of the great principle of liberty of conscience, and yet another was the enunciation and embodiment in their organized church life of the primitive and uncorrupted Gospel of Christ.

Billingsgate Medical Mission. — An important development of the Billingsgate Medical Mission took place on Tuesday of last week, when the new surgical and accident ward, which has recently been added, was opened by the Lord Mayor. This extension has been necessitated by the increasing number of cases brought to the mission needing immediate attention, and in connection with the ward there is a thoroughly equipped operating room. The number of patients treated last year was 7,437, and already over 3,000 cases have been dealt with this year. The mission does not aim at competing with outside hospitals, but rather co-operating with these institutions. The cost of this addition is about £400, and is practically defrayed; but a debt of £2,000 remains on the new mission premises.

The Children's Home.

WESLEY'S Chapel on Friday evening was the rallying point of Christian friends of many denominations anxious to show continued sympathy with the excellent work carried on under the superintendence of Dr. A. E. Gregory. Much of the interest of the anniversary of the Children's Home always centres in the attendance of a number of boys and girls from the institution; their presence and singing add much to the enjoyment of the proceedings, as well as make a more eloquent appeal than any words can frame.

The chair was taken by Mr. C. H. Bramp-ton, who in his opening remarks was able to announce that in spite of the numerous special calls upon the philanthropy of the Christian public, the needs of the orphans have not been forgotten. A steadily-increasing income indicates the deep hold the institution has upon the hearts and affections of Christians of many denominations. A fact that speaks well for the training given in the numerous institutions of the Home is the record of those who pass out into the world. Of these 95 per cent. are to-day doing well, and fulfilling the promise of their youth. The Chairman expressed the conviction that such a gratifying record was the best possible testimony to the great care taken by those who have charge of this young life.

In presenting the annual statement, Dr. A. E. Gregory had a pleasant task to perform. From every point of view the year has been one of advance. With an increase of £2,500 on the income compared with the previous year, the committee have been enabled to meet some of the growing needs of their undertaking and extend their borders. After allowing for the 138 children who have been placed in situations in this country, forty-one settled in Canada, five adopted, and ten who have died, the family has increased by 149, and now numbers no fewer than 1,400. As the Principal explained, these are drawn from all parts of the kingdom, and even from beyond the sea. Among the numerous homes that have been added during the year is one for the reception of boys in the East of London, where they can undergo the probation necessary before they are ready for joining the inmates of the institutions, for the surroundings from which some of the children are rescued are foul in the extreme. One or two instances related by Dr. Gregory were typical of only too many cases of almost daily occurrence, in which the sufferings of orphans, afflicted and ill-used children come to light. In addition to rescuing these helpless little ones, the workers are frequently able to elevate home life in the slums which are visited, and through their ministrations, in the power of the Holy Spirit, drunkards have been reclaimed, and many have been led to live for nobler ends.

A warm appreciation of the purpose of the Children's Home was given by the Earl of Portsmouth. His Lordship rejoiced that the work is on a spiritual basis, and that every other interest is made subservient to the highest welfare of the boys and girls. A nation is only strong in proportion as its individual members have strength of character, and this cannot be built up by any humanitarian or philosophical policy.

Rev. Dr. J. Shaw Banks, president of the Wesleyan Conference, added words of cordial sympathy. He contrasted the conditions of life from which most of the children are drawn with the surroundings of boys and girls of Christian parents. The purpose of the institution is to reduce the inequalities of the circumstances of child life. The church has been more true to the practical side of religion than to the doctrinal, and its influence is on the side of the poor, the oppressed and downtrodden. A hearty address by Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield followed. In his intercourse with the children he had been impressed with their (1) reverent devotion to the Word of God, (2) love of prayer, (3) and the holy joy with which the Sabbath is spent. Mr. Charles Heap gave an interesting address on "A Visit to the Canadian Branch."

How to become Great.

Hymn: Sacred Songs and Solos. No. 172.

THREE kings went out to battle against another. The dispute lay between the first and the fourth; the second and third were "drawn into it." That sort of thing often happens in schools and families too, but it is always unwise to get mixed up in other people's quarrels.

These kings went out with a great army of men and horses, as well as other animals necessary for food and burden; but instead of taking a direct journey, they occupied a week in going a long way round, until at last they found themselves in a place where there was no water, and all the supply they had brought with them was gone; so they were in a dreadful fix.

Then one of the kings thought of God, for he was a good man, though he had done a wrong thing in joining this expedition at all. Even boys and girls think of God when they are in any danger, especially if death seems not far off. But is it not a pity they do not more frequently ask God first to guide them. Then it would not so often be necessary to ask Him afterwards to deliver.

This applies especially to our young days when everything, like the springtime, looks bright and gay. Do you ever feel as if you did not want God then? But you will want him when the days grow dark and dull with trouble or with pain; and if you will want Him then, you must "acquaint yourselves with Him" (Job xxii. 21) in your strong and happy days. That is why Solomon says (Eccles. xii. 1) "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not; nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say I have no pleasure in them." Therefore let the Lord who "giveth us richly all things to enjoy" (1 Tim. vi. 17) be your Friend and Guide even from your earliest days.

But what about these three kings? If you will read 2 Kings iii. you will find more about the incident I have referred to. Jehoshaphat, who was a good king (though he often made mistakes), asked in his difficulty: "Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, that we may inquire of him?" And he received this reply, "Here is Elisha, the son of Shaphat, who poured water on the hands of Elijah." Not, "Elisha who had seen his Master ascend up to heaven," or who had done many wonderful works; but Elisha who had performed a very simple act at his master's bidding. It was that humble service which made him great, and reminds us of how Jesus washed His disciples' feet (John xiii. 5) to teach them thus to serve one another.

So the man who had not been too proud to pour out water for his master to wash with, was used by God to supply water for kings and their great armies. Dear young people, there is no knowing what great service God may some day call you to do if He finds you have been faithful in little things; but until He has proved you with these, He cannot trust you with greater. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much" (Luke xvi. 10). "His lord said unto Him, 'Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord'" (Matt. xxv. 23).

By all means have your ambitions to do great things by-and-by; but to fit you for these, you must be faithful first in your daily duties, your lessons, in obedience at home and at school, in conquering your temper, envy, jealousy, and any other evil habits with which Satan tempts you. Then, if you are spared, you will, like Elisha, win the respect of those around you, be of great use in the world, and, above all, be well pleasing in the sight of God.

"To My Father."

When upon life's restless sea
We are tossed in misery;
When we cannot see Thy face,
Pond'ring not Thy Sovereign grace;
Still, Thine eyes can pierce the cloud
Which in darkness does enshroud,
Thou wilt help us when we pray,
Thou wilt send the light of day.

Oh, Thou art a loving One!
When our work on earth is done
Thou wilt take us home to Thee;
Home—Thy glorious face to see;
So, when waves are rough and high,
We'll remember Thou art nigh;
Give us faith to look to Thee
When in dark perplexity.

The Story of Zacchæus (Luke xix. 1-10).

ZACCHÆUS was one of the fruits, as we must suppose, of the ministry of John the Baptist. That great revival under his faithful preaching had attracted to the banks of the Jordan many of the most hopeless characters in the land—men and women who were shunned by their fellow citizens (Luke vii. 29). It is hardly likely that a leading publican in the near vicinity of the place where John baptized should not have come under his influence. So when a revival breaks out it is ever the more abandoned and sin-stricken people who will be saved. I always have the greatest hopes of those whose case seems most desperate.

This view of Zacchæus is corroborated by his own statement in v. 8, which does not appear to mean that he was going henceforth to give them to the poor, but that he was in the habit of doing so. For some time he had been engaged in going over the list of people whom he had defrauded by rating them too highly, and extorting exorbitant payment of taxes. Either through an agent or personally he had been traversing the streets and lanes of Jericho, his hands filled with the fourfold restoration of which he speaks. His conscience had forced him to these acts of restitution, and already throughout Jericho many hearts had been made to sing for joy, and respect was already beginning to gather around him.

It is clear, however, that he was not satisfied. The heart of man needs not only to adjust itself with the claims of righteousness, but needs forgiveness, cleansing, love, and peace. It needs to know the love of God, to be at peace with God, to rest in the assurance that God is willing to enter into it and abide. The blessed Spirit of God had led Zacchæus to this, and so his heart was prepared for the Saviour, and was already disposed to welcome any further revelation which He might make of God. So, all over the world, God is carrying on preparatory processes in human hearts. Happy are they who co-operate with Him.

For long Zacchæus had meant to take the first opportunity of seeing Christ, and learning further from His blessed lips—so his heart was overjoyed when the rumour of the healing of blind Bartimæus spread through Jericho, and announced that Jesus was on His way. In his great desire, he was indifferent to questions of dignity. All other considerations were placed in the second place, if only he might see that face, and perhaps hear that voice, which he felt sure were those of a God-given messenger.

God knows where they are to be found who need Him. All through the world He is ever coming to the place where they are, looking up, calling their names, and saying to each, "Make haste and come down, I must abide in thy house to-day."

It is as true now as ever it was that the Lord Jesus goes to be the guest of those whom the world regards as sinners. He sees the precious among the vile, the wheat among the chaff, the spark of fire amid the grey ash. It may be that someone who reads these words has lately been putting right several wrong things in his life, and has reached a point where there seems nothing else to be done, and yet the heart is not at rest. Ah, the Lord Jesus is on His way to that very spot, where He can speak the word of love, and fill the heart with the sunshine of His Presence.

Notice the repeated emphasis on the word this day (5 and 9). God acts in the immediate present. If there is willingness to obey and yield, He comes; and when He comes He brings His own provision with Him. Let us make haste and receive Him. True joy is brought to the heart, where Jesus chooses to remain. F. B. M.

PAUL BEFORE FELIX (Acts xxiv. 10-16, 24-26).

GOLDEN TEXT. Psa. xxiii. 4.

JESUS "passing through the midst of them, went His way" (Luke iv. 3). So also did His servant Paul pass through the meshes of the snare laid for him, when he rode out of the city gates under guard of a Roman squadron. Agabus had prophesied truly, but no power could murder in Jerusalem the messenger whom the Lord had said should witness for Him at Rome.

Cæsarea, the official capital of Judæa, and headquarters of the Roman Governor, Felix. Paul had two days' rest in a guardroom, Herod's palace, while waiting his trial. How spent? (Col. iv. 3, 4; James i. 5). "Praying always" (Psa, xxxv. 1, 2, 11).

The COURT held in Herod's judgment hall.

The JUDGE. Governor Felix, originally a slave, now a viceroy under the Roman Emperor. A man of energy, wilfulness, avaricious (v. 26), cruel. Had been long in office, conversant with Jewish matters (v. 10). But a time-server (v. 27).

The PLAINTIFFS. Ananias and the officers of the Sanhedrim (xxiii. 1-3). Ananias proved afterwards guilty of many crimes, his house burnt in a sedition raised by his own son, himself slain by assassins, he who had connived at Paul (xxiii. 14). Verse 9 "assented."

The SPECIAL PLEADER. Flatters the judge. Makes three charges against the prisoner—sedition, heresy, sacrilege.

DEFENDANT. Paul the Apostle, his own advocate, pleaded not guilty, stated facts, challenged proof (vv. 19, 20). Expressed confidence in the experience of the judge, but no word of flattery to the man. Fearlessly proclaimed his creed, Christianity not heresy, but the fulfilment of Judaism. He worships God as he is revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ, and preaches the resurrection from the dead, as taught in the prophets.

RESULT. The court adjourned till Lysias should attend as witness (v. 22). The enemies disappointed.

Heresy, i.e. "choosing," "a sect;" a cutting loose from portions of the old faith, and forming a section. Martin Luther cut himself loose from the errors of Romanism, but kept to the Bible truths. Paul, from the traditions of the Jews, but not from the Scriptures, followed them into fuller teaching of Christ and the resurrection.

THE AUDIENCE AND THE PREACHER (vv. 24-27). An influential congregation, of corrupt life, unrighteous deeds in public and private. No control, yielding to sin, deadening conscience, forgetting the Judgment day. Drusilla, daughter of Herod Agrippa I. who killed James and apprehended Peter for the same end (xii. 1-4). A Jewess, who perished in the terrible eruption of Vesuvius.

PAUL THE PREACHER. A fearless, faithful witness for Christ. Pointed his arrows straight to the mark. 1. Right living towards God and man. 2. Resist temptation. 2. "Prepare to meet thy God." "Faith in Christ" (v. 24). "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified" (1 Cor. ii. 2).

LESSONS.

1. Can anyone on earth fix their time for accepting God's offer of Mercy? "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found" (Isa. lv. 6). "Willing in the day of His power." When you are older? Now is the time of acceptance (2 Cor. vi. 2). Are you sure of a long life? Would you give Jesus only the fag-end of it? He gave Himself for you (Gal. ii. 20). The pleasures of the world are snares set by the enemy of souls to keep you away from salvation.

2. Paul seized the opportunity to display his banner for truth even at his trial (Psa. lx. 4). His hope—Resurrection (Dan. xii. 2 with John v. 25). Faith in the Scriptures. They testify of Christ. (John v. 39). His walk before God and man. How? (Psa. xxxvii. 23-31). "I am not ashamed" (2 Tim. i. 12).

Ashamed of Jesus, that dear Friend
On whom my hopes of Heaven depend!

3. Felix and Drusilla had a chance to hear the Gospel call to reconcilliation with God (2 Cor. v. 20). By His word, through His "ambassador in the chain" (Eph. vi. 20). They were "dead in trespasses and sins" (Eph. ii. 1). Life offered (John v. 40). The habits of sin like grave clothes wound around them; they loved the pleasures of sin too well to give them up and obey the Lord's call (John xi. 44). "Dead while she liveth" (1 Tim. v. 6).

4. They knew the written law, but resisted the Spirit (2 Cor. iii. 6). The "devils also believe and tremble" (James ii. 19). Repentance is to turn to Jesus, believe on Him for the remission of sin and the gift of His Holy Spirit (Heb. ix. 12-15, 22; Rom. v. 10).

ENTHUSIASM FOR GOD.

It has been said that General Grant had a remarkable influence when in command of the soldiers of the American army. Though he was not in the habit of making speeches to the troops, his presence in the camp at once aroused a genuine enthusiasm. After the battle of the Wilderness, the General rode along the ranks of the veterans, and as soon as they knew he was there, though it was night-time, a mighty cheer was raised. The presence of the Lord should arouse enthusiasm in all His servants, and in times of danger we should be as bold as Paul in confessing His Name (v. 14).

A FAITHFUL PROCLAMATION.

The late Dr. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the United States Senate, was appointed to that position because of an address he delivered when but a young student of two-and-twenty. He was on an Ohio boat, and as fellow-passengers there were a number of representatives and senators. Mr. Milburn was asked to conduct a service, and in the course of his remarks he frankly criticised the conduct of the legislators on board the boat. The listeners did not resent the liberty, but between them presented the student with a purse of a hundred dollars; and further asked if he would care to fill the post of chaplain to the Congress. If to-day we boldly testify of the truth of salvation, we shall be able to influence others. Some, like the senators, will desire to hear us again; others, like Felix, will tremble because of their sins.

A FEARLESS CHRISTIANITY.

While Robert Moffat was in South Africa there was a chief, by name of Mosheu, who ably assisted the missionary in evangelizing the natives. On one occasion a Sunday-morning prayer-meeting was being held by the chief, when a party of marauders burst on them and made a furious attack. Mosheu arose and asked the intruders what they wanted. "Your cattle," came the reply, "and it is at your peril if you resist." "There are my cattle," said the chief, quietly, and resumed his place at the prayer-meeting. A hymn was sung, a chapter read, and then a prayer was offered. The ruffians were so amazed at the sight that they silently withdrew from the spot without touching a single article belonging to the people. As the South African natives were affected by the words of the Christian fellows, so Felix trembled as he heard the Apostle reason of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come (v. 25).

A Calumny Refuted!

THROUGH the benevolence of my helpers everywhere, I have already this year equipped and sent out to Canada 450 boys and girls, all of whom have reached the Dominion in safety, and been quickly distributed among the homes carefully selected for them, wherein they will still be supervised by my colleagues in Canada until they reach an age when they can stand alone.

My coffers are, as you know, daily being drained to their last penny for the food, the raiment, and the thousand and one requirements of the great family of nearly seven thousand boys and girls still dependent upon the Homes. Yet I must make room for the never-ceasing stream of destitute newcomers, and I dare not delay sending forth those of my flock who are able, thanks to your kind aid, to shift for themselves. In brief, I have now ready and waiting to go, and I want you to help me to emigrate them. Will you?

It will, by God's blessing, make their future! For, as I have often said, emigration saves the boys and girls—for they thereby leave the perils of their former lot behind them for ever. Emigration relieves our overcrowded cities and our congested labour markets here in England, and so lightens appreciably the terrible struggle for existence among the abject poor. Emigration supplies Canada and the Colonies with what they most require—honest, industrious and piously-trained youths and maidens, the best material for youthful citizens. Finally, emigration makes room in our homes for fresh admissions from the ranks of the homeless and needy, whom day and night we are seeking out and bringing in from the haunts of the destitute all over the kingdom to the average number of seventy fresh admissions each week.

Owing to the fact that our income is now at its lowest ebb, I cannot say "Go" to these eager and waiting groups. I must await the response which I hope and believe will follow this appeal before I finally select any of these 670 candidates. Think, my dear helpers, of these young people, eager and ready for the chance of their lifetime!

You already know how splendidly my emigrants have, by the grace of God, succeeded. Scarcely one failure among sixty children is scored against them; while the distinction gained by not a few has been as surprising as it is encouraging. What is far better, many of them are living the Christian life, and serving God in the new land of their adoption. Such success is surely worth labouring for!

A recent paragraph which appeared in the columns of a certain daily journal solemnly announced that a Government enquiry had just shown that "twenty per cent. of our emigrants were failures." This was the preposterous fabrication of some ignorant Canadian pressman, and was at once disproved by the following communication from the Dominion Government in answer to my cabled enquiry:

Give prompt contradiction to statement in English papers that 20 per cent. Barnardo boys failures. Reports of Department's Inspection show well placed and giving good satisfaction. Commissioner here from Winnipeg confirms this statement.

ALL BUT VERY TRIFLING PERCENTAGE

Mr. Preston, Commissioner of Emigration for Canada, further states that lads of the character of the Barnardo boys are heartily welcomed, and there is a great demand for them in all parts of Canada.

I quote this refutation simply to confirm the confidence of any friends who may have felt in the least degree shaken by such an aspersion. Out of evil cometh good; and it is good to know on reliable authority that our failures are a "very trifling percentage." Now,

SHALL THESE 670 LADS AND LASSES GO?

Although a gift of £10 will cover all the cost incurred for a single emigrant, any gift, however small, will be gratefully welcomed as forming part of the answer which I earnestly await to my enquiry: "MAY I SEND THEM?"

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

ABERDEEN. GLASGOW. BELFAST.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONERS.)

ABERDEEN.

THE closing days of this great campaign will long be remembered in Aberdeen for the unparalleled interest and enthusiasm displayed by the people in the work of the evangelists. The crowds seeking admission were simply overwhelming, and the scenes witnessed round the entrances were wholly without precedent in the annals of religious life in the city. On Monday afternoon the West U. F. Church, which seats about 1,200 people, was almost filled, and accordingly it was deemed advisable to transfer the afternoon service on Tuesday to the music-hall. As it turned out, it was well this precaution was taken, for when the hour of meeting arrived there was a gathering of 2,500 people, many of whom had come in from the surrounding districts. One hears on all sides abundant testimony to the benefit received, especially through the studies on "Prayer" and "The Holy Spirit." To some prayer has become a more real and practical thing than ever before; to others the Bible has become nothing less than a new book; while many have been led to a deep and earnest longing for a wholly-surrendered and Spirit-filled life.

TWO HOURS BEFORE THE TIME.

So eager were the people to be present at the Monday evening service that many were gathered round the doors two hours before the time. Dr. Torrey himself was shut out, and experienced the utmost difficulty in getting through the crowd. An overflow meeting was convened, but though 900 went in, it seemed to make no appreciable difference to the throng outside. At the larger gathering as well as at the overflow meeting a good number were led to decision.

Profiting by the experience of Monday night, it was arranged to hold two meetings on Tuesday evening—one for women at 6.30, and another for men at 8. The hall was, however, inadequate for the great concourse of women at the earlier service, some hundreds being shut out. The address was a most impressive one, and at the close many stood up to indicate their acceptance of Christ. Scarcely was the hall cleared, when the men streamed in, and in a few minutes the building was again filled. It was obvious at the very outset that a section of the audience had come prepared to disturb the meeting, but a stern rebuke administered by Dr. Torrey effectually put a stop to any attempt made in this direction.

The preacher took as his subject, for the second time during the month, "The Judgment to Come," and as the address proceeded a solemn awe fell over the vast gathering of men. Several came forward at the close and openly confessed Christ, but no one who was present and felt the power of the Holy Spirit through the preached Word can doubt that a greater harvest will yet be reaped.

THE GREATEST MOVEMENT SINCE 1874.

Perhaps it is yet too early to form a correct estimate of the work this great mission has accomplished in Aberdeen and neighbourhood; but those who are in a position to know declare it has been the greatest movement of the kind since the revival of 1874. The names of 900 persons have been handed in as having received blessing, exclusive of the young people dealt with at the special services for children, these numbering about 1,000. This, however, does not nearly represent the amount of work done. Many went away each night impressed and convicted.

An interesting function took place on Tuesday evening, when parting gifts were presented to Dr. and Mrs. Torrey, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Harkness, and Mr. Lowe. Mr. Gray C. Fraser, who presided, said it had fallen to him, as chairman of the committee, to bid them an affectionate, but, he hoped, only a temporary farewell. They came to Aberdeen strangers, but were going away as brethren dearly beloved. All the expectations that were entertained before they came had been more than fulfilled. If in the providence of God they were led to return to Aberdeen, there was no town in His Majesty's dominions that would give them a more cordial welcome.

Rev. James S. Stewart, Rutherford U. F. Church, said he had been deputed by his brother ministers, who had been profoundly interested in all the meetings, to return their warmest thanks for the extremely kind and generous services rendered to them at this time. From every section of the Christian church there had been but one voice of deep and heartfelt thankfulness for the messages delivered.

CONSERVING THE RESULTS.

Although Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander finished their labours in Aberdeen on April 28, the local committee decided, in view of the great interest existing, to continue the meetings for a short period longer. Accordingly services have been held each night since in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, and have been addressed by local ministers in turn. On Friday the meeting took the form of a thanksgiving and testimony service for those who had received blessing during the mission. There was about 500 persons present, and the gathering proved a most interesting and inspiring one. Rev. T. D. Watt, Powis Established Church, presided, and was supported by quite an array of other ministers who had taken a leading part in the mission. Some of the testimonies were exceedingly interesting.

One young woman stated she used to have a strong dislike to evangelistic meetings, and would not go near them. One night she was induced to go to the meeting in the Music Hall, was converted, and, since then, she had had a peace and joy she had never dreamed of before. A young man told how he came to the meeting one night without any purpose, but was led to give himself to Christ and confess Him before the close of the meeting. Next day, when he appeared in the workshop where he was employed he was subjected to a severe ordeal, but had received strength to stand it all. One man said to him, "I hear you have taken the pledge. "I have done better than that," was the reply, "I have taken Christ as my Saviour." Another young man, a student, testified that he had experienced a new power in his life since the mission began. For nearly an hour and a half men and women kept rising, gladly and humbly bearing testimony to a change of heart or new impulse given to what had formerly been but a cold and formal Christian life. It was resolved to start a weekly fellowship meeting for the converts of the mission. J. M.

WITH THE GLASGOW CONVERTS.

On their way from Aberdeen to Belfast, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander paid a visit to Glasgow on Friday; and advantage was taken of the opportunity to hold a meeting with young converts and other friends. The tickets had been carefully distributed in a limited form, but the City Hall was full.

A HEARTY INVITATION TO RETURN.

A telegram was read from Lord Overtoun, regretting that Lady Overtoun and he were not able to be present, but hoping that Dr. Torrey and his colleague would soon be back again. Mr. Oatts said he thought they would return if asked, and in response to his suggestion, there was a great show of hands by way of expressing the desire that they should come to Glasgow again.

Mr. Alexander, who was smilingly and lovingly greeted, said he was going to sing a new hymn which Mr. Harkness had set to music since they went to Aberdeen. In a few days it would be printed and copies would be sent to Mr. Oatts to send to all the young converts. The congregation joined in the chorus—

> Never lose sight of Jesus,
> Day and night He will lead you right,
> Never lose sight of Jesus.

Dr. Torrey's address, which followed, was based on 2 Peter iii. 18, "Grow in grace," and was put under the heading of seven rules which, if carried out, would lead every convert on to success, and not failure.

ADVICE TO YOUNG CONVERTS.

(1) Be sure you build on the right foundation. What do I mean by the right foundation? Two things. First: all hope of acceptance before God through the atoning work of Christ (Isa. liii. 6). Second: all attempt to overcome temptation to be made in Christ's resurrection power (Heb. vii. 25).

(2) Confess Christ publicly every fair opportunity you get (Matt. x. 32, 33). The more you confess the more joy you will have.

(3) Put away every sin out of your life (2 Tim. ii. 21). Purge yourselves. God doesn't demand ability, but cleanness. What is meant by sin? Here are seven rules by which to detect it and find it out. (a) Never do anything that leads you to disobey the Word of God (John xiv. 15). (b) Don't do anything you have any doubt about (Rom. xiv. 23). (c) Don't do anything that won't please God (1 John iii. 22). (d) Don't do anything that Jesus Christ wouldn't do if He were in your place (1 John ii. 6). (e) Don't do anything that you wouldn't like to be doing when He comes (Matt. xxiv. 44). (f) Don't do anything you can't do to the glory of God (1 Cor. x. 21). (g) Don't do anything that will hurt your influence for Christ.

(4) Surrender yourself absolutely to God (Rom. vi. 13). That is the secret of power in service. Success is impossible without absolute surrender.

(5) Feed on the Word of God every day (1 Pet. ii. 2). The soul needs food just the same as the body. Read the Bible at least fifteen minutes every day.

(6) Take plenty of time for prayer (Isa. xl. 31). Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication let your requests be made known unto God (Phil. iv. 6).

(7) Go to work and keep working for Christ with all your heart (Matt. xxv. 14-30), and get into fellowship with some body of believers.

At the close of the address the young converts of the March Mission were asked to stand up, and several hundreds did so. J. C.

OPENING IN BELFAST.

The remarkable blessing which followed the evangelists in Australia and elsewhere has stirred the hearts of God's people in Belfast, and their arrival was anticipated with a growing spirit of prayer and expectation. They received a right hearty welcome. A meeting for this purpose was held on Saturday evening last in the Ulster Hall, the largest in the city. With a large number of ministers and leading Christian workers they were entertained to tea in the minor hall, after which Dr. Torrey gave a brief address. At seven o'clock the large hall, to which admission was obtained by free ticket, was filled to overflowing, fully 2,000 being present, many of whom had come from considerable distances. The Right Hon. Thomas Sinclair, D.L., presided, and the Evangelical churches of the city were well represented on the platform. Under the leadership of Mr. Alexander, several hymns were sung, after which Rev. A. J. Wilson led the meeting in prayer. Addresses of welcome were delivered by the Chairman, the High Sheriff (Robert Anderson, Esq., J.P.), the veteran Dean of Connor (Dr. Seaver), Rev. Wesley Guard, Rev. James Cregan, Rev. Henry Montgomery, Pastor Gunn, Brigadier Cook (Salvation Army), and Mr. W. H. McLaughlin.

Touching references were made by several speakers to former times of refreshing, especially the revival of 1859, and the missions of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1874 and afterwards. Dr. Torrey, after a brief prayer, then addressed the meeting, gratefully acknowledging the warm welcome accorded to his colleague and himself. He took for the key-note of the mission the words of Psalm lxii. 5, "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him." If his hearers were looking to Mr. Alexander and himself, only disappointment would follow; but if their eyes were unto God, expectation would be transformed to realization. He gave strong testimony to the old Gospel as the only way of salvation, emphasizing the power of the Word of God, the cardinal truth of substitutive, the work of the Holy Ghost, the power of prayer, and the importance of personal effort in seeking souls. The address, breathing as it did a firm and humble trust in God, must have proved a welcome spiritual tonic to many of the audience.

The singing was greatly enjoyed. Mr. Alexander put himself at once into happy touch with the great meeting by his easy and genial manner. He has at his command a most efficient choir of several hundred voices, trained by Mr. Vance, and consisting largely of the long-established Y.M.C.A. Fellowship Choir.

Dr. Harry Guinness, who had kindly come to the city at the request of the committee, to assist in the mission, also received a cordial welcome, being well known in Belfast and greatly beloved.

On Lord's Day morning, at eight o'clock, despite unfavourable weather, there was again a very large gathering in the same hall, when Dr. Torrey gave an address on personal service.

At 3.30 p.m. there was a meeting for women only, many being unable to obtain admission; and an overflow, conducted by Dr. Guinness, was held in one of the Y.M.C.A. halls. The evening meeting at eight o'clock was exclusively for men, and the Ulster Hall was again crowded with an audience of fully 2,000. Several hymns were sung before the meeting proper commenced, while Mr. Alexander seemed to tune every tongue to sing. Dr. Torrey took for the subject of his address the need of a hiding-place for every man—(1) from the accusations of conscience, (2) from his appetites and passions, (3) from the power of the devil, and (4) from the wrath to come; finally pointing to the only Refuge as set forth in Isa. xxxii. 2. The address was searching and powerful; and though in response to the preacher's appeal, seconded by Mr. Alexander's solo, "Would you believe?" only a few indicated their decision to close with Christ, very deep and lasting impressions must have been made on many hearts. Dr. Torrey read a letter intimating the conversion of two persons at the morning meeting, and high hopes are entertained of a wide-spread work of grace in the city and neighbourhood.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Mr. George Clarke at Govan.

Mr. George Clarke, having finished his mission at Springburn, in the north end of the city, under the auspices of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, has transferred his services to Govan, where he is now at work, lifting up Christ, showing the folly of sin, and urging men to be reconciled to God. Govan is one of the great centres of the shipbuilding industry, and the burgh is densely populated with hard-working, well-to-do artisans. The opening meeting of the mission was held on Sabbath evening, April 19, and a congregation, numbering from 1,100 to 1,200 gathered. Mr. Clarke gave an earnest address on Christ's power to destroy the works of the devil, and a few at the close of his address, in response to his appeal, came out for Christ.

Night by night, as the mission has gone on, there has been manifest improvement. The Monday night meeting was thin, but the meetings thereafter grew. Wednesday night's meeting was very large, nearly a thousand people being present. Many of the ministers are present nightly, and their influence is helping to draw others out. A most encouraging state of things is found in the fact that, under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A., prayer-meetings have been held for several nights in succession, from ten o'clock till one in the morning. Such a spirit of prayer indicates the genuineness of the workers, and is a sure harbinger of blessing. The meetings are also being helped by an excellent choir that has been formed.

The hall is centrally situated, and, being easy of access, many, it is hoped, will find their way into it who never darken a church door.

One of Mr. Clarke's addresses was based on the incident of the man who fell among thieves on his way from Jerusalem to Jericho; and, taking the words "went down," he used them very suggestively in showing the deteriorating power of sin. His graphic description of how men go down from one stage to still a lower under the power of sin doubtless left impressions on the minds of many that will not soon fade.

A number of precious souls have voluntarily gone forward on different nights to be dealt with in the inquiry-room. One case was that of a backslider who had been converted under Mr. Clarke eighteen years ago, but who some years ago fell away into sin. He has now returned to the Saviour. Another case was that of a young man who had gone out to be spoken to. Some workers conversed with him, but could make no progress. It did not seem to them as if he were really anxious. Yet his heart was ill at ease. He hung about for a while, and a Christian worker of considerable experience chancing to speak to him, the lad broke down and wept. In the course of conversation the marks of true penitence showed themselves, and the gentleman had the joy of leading him to the fountain of blessing. J. C.

The Polytechnic, W.

Mr. J. B. Wookey has been conducting meetings at the Polytechnic, Regent Street, W., during April, with much acceptance, and his addresses have aroused deep spiritual interest in the hearts of the young men and women of that institution. The Gospel has been proclaimed with no uncertain sound, and God has blessed the messages of salvation to many lives. His earnest and powerful appeal to men only on Sunday last, on the subject of "Social Purity," will not readily be forgotten, and is likely to prove a real blessing to not a few young men. J. H. D.

Mr. W. H. Jude at New Southgate.

Mr. W. H. Jude, the Liverpool organist and preacher-musician, has been holding a most helpful series of song-services at the Baptist Church, New Southgate. Some years ago Mr. Jude gave up lucrative musical appointments to devote himself to distinctly religious work. God has wonderfully owned and blessed the sacrifice and service. Although it was his first visit to New Southgate, people were turned away, unable to gain admission. His addresses were interspersed with vocal and instrumental selections of his own composition, and the entire services were of a highly spiritual character. First and foremost Mr. Jude put the Gospel, always holding up the Atonement as man's only plea for salvation. He dealt with such subjects as "The Sabbath Rest," "Spiritual Enthusiasm," "Lives Nobly Spent," and "The Crowning Day." Many were led into a higher life by this ministry of Gospel song.

The May Meetings. The reports of another year's work for the Master, to which several pages of this issue are devoted, form an exceptionally interesting and inspiring record. What would the world be like without this grand army of devoted workers at home and abroad? We shudder to think of it. Those possessed of earth's good means, who are apt to regard the Christmas season as especially a time to loosen their purse-strings, may well select from these pages suitable channels through which to pour their gifts; for there is earnest Christian effort being put forth, not at Christmas only, but steadily, quietly, persistently, all the year round. Further reports will be given next week.

"Our Daily Bread." The chapters appointed by the Bible and Prayer Union (notes of which appear week by week in these columns) have now reached the Book of Psalms. Mr. Meyer's notes have proved so stimulating and helpful in the past, that we venture to suggest this as a suitable time for any of our readers who have not been in the habit of following them, to commence this consecutive study of the Word of God; and induce others to do the same.

Fellow-Workers with God. Dealing with 1 Cor. ix. 22, "That I might by all means save some," Rev. Dr. Gregg says that the Church of God can have a revival any day if she will only comply with the conditions upon which God has promised to grant it. The mission of Christians is, he remarks, self-evident, that of doing a work for Christ:—

> God will co-operate with us, but He will not take our place nor do that which we neglect to do. He will multiply the loaves and fishes, but He will not distribute them. The disciples must do that, for they can do that. He will raise Lazarus from the dead, but He will not roll away the stone from the sepulchre. The friends must do that, because they can do that. He will purchase redemption for men, and pay the great price for it, because He only can do that; but man must carry the offer of the purchased redemption to his fellow man, because this man is able to do. And this all the saved are commissioned to do.

And the very first requisite for successful Christian work, Dr. Gregg urges, is a start. That it is precisely the duty of the hour. It is what most Christians need, and what they need most.

Fine Preaching. With Mr. Charles Booth, the Bishop of Stepney is of opinion that a great forward step would be made in the effort to draw more working-people to places of worship, if, instead of great zeal in asking them, "How can we help you?" there were more zeal in asking, "How can you help us?" At the same time, the bishop thinks the attainment of a higher standard of preaching is absolutely necessary. Some sorts of preaching, he remarked, might fill a church, but would not do much good, and in illustration of what is required he told a striking anecdote:—

> One of my old parishioners in Leeds described the impression left on her mind by one of our most eloquent bishops: "Sir, but warn't it fine? But it were all to be consumed on the premises; it warn't to be carried away."

A Sermon to Preachers. Rev. Dr. Foster, of New York, urges forcibly a prime matter with the preacher, that of being interesting in the pulpit, and he strongly emphasizes the distinction between being interesting and simply attracting the attention. A sermon that does not produce a chord of holy emotion, stir a new purpose, give something on which the soul may feed and grow, has not, he says, any true interest, and is merely sensational. It is the duty and, in fact, the professional necessity of the pulpit to be interesting in this higher sense in the effort to catch the tired mind, and to hold it without conscious effort on the part of the listener. At the same time, the preaching must be largely doctrinal, and it is, of course, a question of the highest importance how to lend interest to this. "Every earnest minister knows that he must indoctrinate his people. . . . People must believe in the principles of religion if they are to have any true devotion to it." But above all, says Dr. Foster:—

> Get motion, the dramatic element, life into the discourse! Excite the natural interest of the mind, and let that lead where no forced attention would ever drive! This is the secret of "interesting" preaching, and the interest is true, upbuilding and helping, not sensation, which only weakens and corrupts.

The Sunday School. Fresh attention is being directed to the work and methods of the Sunday School in this the centenary year of the Sunday School Union. A writer in the Free Church Chronicle presses again the fact of the great gulf existing between the School and the Church; and advocates, as a remedy, a revolution in methods—particularly in the increased size of classes. It seems to us, however, that the very first thing needed is an inquiry into the qualities and qualifications of the teachers. The most delicate plants in our gardens are entrusted to the most skilled gardener; and delicate child life needs entrusting to the most spiritual, the most tactful, and the most competent of Christians. We are afraid, in view of the enormous number of lapsed Sunday School scholars, that the Church has not yet comprehended the real nature of her task in training the young. The very best men and women are needed for the Sunday School. The question of methods follows that of persons. The conditions of our national life make the Sunday School problem one of the most pressing questions of the hour.

The Torrey-Alexander Mission. Dr. J. M. Gray, of Boston, has responded to the invitation of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander to assist for a time in their work. Dr. Gray is well known as an earnest and acceptable preacher and soul-winner. He also conducts large Bible-classes (each with over 1,000 members) in New York, Providence, Boston, and Chicago. We trust that his visit to Great Britain will be richly blessed.

God's Greatest Church. A recent critic has asserted that the class of preachers who followed closely upon the lines of John Wesley in their faith and enthusiasm "is fast dying out of Methodism." It is to be hoped, however, that if such be the case the area of the decadence is but a limited one, for the local preachers and the itinerants were the great builders of the Wesleyan movement in its formative stage, and to-day, as then, preaching in the open air, which has aptly been termed "God's greatest Church," is perhaps one of the most important adjuncts of the regular ministry of the Word. The message which preachers of this class have to deliver generally has been "forged in the fires of their own religious experience;" they speak that which they do know, and the words often go straight home to the hearts of those to whom lettered theology would appeal in vain. The fields are white unto the harvest, and the labourers are few—too few to allow of any being dispensed with.

Master and Man. The spirit of Mr. Andrew Carnegie's address delivered a week ago at the Iron and Steel Institute was admirable, and the proposal contained in it is worthy of all consideration. Indeed, it is the only solution of the industrial question. So long as men are regarded as machines for the production of a certain amount of work, there must inevitably be recurring disturbances and strikes. The suppression of the humanities in the relation between master and man is at the bottom of much of the strife of our time. When, however, there is a living human bond between them, a new true and abiding element is introduced which works towards the common good. But let it be remembered this is the Christian idea; its genesis is in the Gospel of Christ. And it can never be successfully carried out apart from the Christian spirit.

"Unequally Yoked." The new moderator of the English Presbyterian Synod, in dealing, in his presidential address last week, with the pressing problem of the Church and social questions, voiced the feelings of a growing number of Christian people when he declared for war against "the criminality of the present Socialistic programme." So far as the social work of the Church is concerned, we believe the people of God were never more alive than now to the crying needs of men in their social life, as well as in their deeper life. And there has been a good deal of co-operation between Christians and non-Christians in efforts to remedy existing evils. But it is becoming increasingly clear that Christians will have to part company with others and do their work alone, for of late, in particular, much of the "social redemption" advocated has allied itself with Atheism and irreligion. That "horrible pit" of sin, which lies beneath the wrongs of society, is scouted by a vast number of reformers, and the grace of the Redeemer is lightly esteemed. The work of the Church is to deal with causes and to provide the one remedy for all ills. While others experiment with men, it is ours to offer to them a definite Gospel which alone can deliver from sin, and in this there can be no compromise.

For Public or Publican?

At a conference to be held at Westminster to-morrow (Friday) it is proposed to protest against the passing into law of the Licensing (Compensation for non-Renewal) Bill, on the ground of the following legal decisions:—

The Licensing Bench is a body interposed between the licensee and the public for the protection of the public (Lord Watson).

The Justices have an absolute discretion to determine in the interest of the public, whether a license ought to be granted (Lord Herschell).

Here we have clearly expressed a vital principle which is placed in peril by the president attitude of the Government. The annual application for the renewal of a license has, till now, been bona fide, inasmuch as the courts believed they had power to grant or refuse. Now it is proposed to turn the annual application into a farce by the creation of a life interest (or even more), subject only to such good conduct as keeps on the safe side of criminal conviction.

Charity and Drink.

The close connection between the drink traffic and the crime of the country has been so frequently emphasized by the judges that the fact has become commonplace; but the relation between the trade and the numbers of reformatories, idiot asylums, epileptic homes, and hospitals is frequently overlooked. It is, in fact, but faintly recognised by the general public how large a proportion of the vast sums expended upon charities of these kinds is laid out upon the victims of drink. Sir Andrew Clark, who for twenty years was senior physician at the London Hospital, once said that seven out of every ten patients were there "through the physical injury inflicted upon them by alcohol." Similar startling testimony comes from all the asylums; one physician stating that his alcoholic lunatics have risen to an average of 24½ per cent., and Mr. Allen, of the St. Pancras workhouse, asserting that out of 440 men in that institution 330 had come there through drink. A recent writer has well said:—

Two veritable rivers of gold are always flowing in this country, one from the pockets of the poorer classes into the pockets of the publicans, the other from the pockets of the charitable towards the disabled ones of the poorer classes, too many of them the victims of the drink traffic. It is like a bad dream, a paralysis of the nation's will.

The "Good Shepherd" Convents in England.

In the current number of the National Review Sir Godfrey Lushington, G.C.M.G., late Under-Secretary for Home Affairs, has an exhaustive and deeply-interesting paper, in which he emphasizes the English moral of the convent scandals at Nancy. It will be startling to most English readers to learn that the Order of the Good Shepherd has 221 houses, containing 48,000 inmates, in addition to 7,000 nuns, who are the managers. There are already establishments under their rule in England. Sir Godfrey says that the nuns who have been "suppressed" at Nancy may come over here; and he asks: "What is to prevent them renewing anywhere in these islands the disgraceful treatment of the poor inmates which resulted in the recent scandal and judgment?" At present such things can be done with impunity within the convent walls and barred doors if the Roman Catholic authorities simply omit to give notice of their intention to open a workshop! The moral is an obvious one, which has frequently been urged in these columns, but Sir Godfrey Lushington enforces it in a very striking manner.

International Good-Will.

It is a matter for deep thankfulness that the King's visit to France has evoked such widespread expressions of friendliness amongst the French people. The people themselves bear this country no ill will, and the best French newspapers generally adopt a respectful tone towards us. It is understood that M. Loubet is to visit London during the present summer. This is the first time a president of the French Republic has visited England in an official capacity. Our people will give him a royal reception, and this again would help friendly feeling. Both nations have the duty to seek the things that promote good-will. And amidst all that is human in this friendly intercourse, let us not forget to pray for both of the nations. By Him kings rule and nations are blessed.

Be Not Troubled.

A Meditation on John xiv. 1-27.

I.

Be not troubled, when Creation spreads its problematic frame,
And thy heart, in silent wonder, finds no answer whence it came!
God thy Father is Creator, He hath made all things that are,
World and atom, man and angel, bird and blossom, sun and star.
He controls the age-long drama on the stage of history,
Holds the key of secret chambers, and unlocks their mystery.
Dark the days of wrong's dominion, hopeless to the eye of sense,
But the dawn beyond the midnight waits upon His providence.
He the Judge that holds the balance in a strong impartial hand,
And before His bar of judgment no iniquity can stand.

II.

Be not troubled, neither fearful, when the conscience of thy sin
Loads thee with its crushing burden, kindling fires of hell within.
In the Christ who died for sinners, guilt is lost in endless gain:
Lo! the mercy-seat appearing through the veil that's rent in twain!
Throne of judgment by His passion changed into a throne of grace,
Twixt a holy God and sinners He becomes the meeting place.
Be not troubled when, within thee, sin's despotic empire still Binds with iron chains of habit and subdues the weakened will.
God has breathed in thee His Spirit, thy whole nature to renew,
Drive the tyrant from his stronghold, and work in to will and do.

III.

Be not troubled, neither fearful, as the gates of death draw nigh;
In the Father's house are mansions, many both in earth and sky.
Dying is but mounting upward, leaving lower rooms and cares,
And ascending to the higher, as by mystic spiral stairs.
Down below, the sin and sorrow, over all the serpent's trail—
Up above, the cloudless heavens, joys which never fade or fail.

IV.

Troubled doubts and fears all vanish when the faith is fixed on Him;
Blinded eyes, when He but touches, vision is no longer dim!
He the Way, the Truth, the Life, and Ladder Jacob saw by night,
Reaching from the stone at Bethel upward to the gates of light.
They who trust, obey, and follow shall at last lay burdens down,
Bid a long farewell to trouble, changing cross for starry crown.

Compensation— for the People.

MR. ARTHUR CHAMBERLAIN, the Chairman of the Birmingham Licensing Magistrates, says, in a special interview to the Daily News:—

"If there is to be 'compensation' on the part of the State, it is grossly unfair that the money should all go to the brewers, who make up their losses in one direction by the increased sale elsewhere, while the tenant of the house and the managers and servants—barmen and barmaids — get absolutely nothing. These people derive their whole livelihood from the trade, yet their tenure is practically unsecured, and the brewers never suggest compensation where dismissal has been caused by other considerations than dereliction of duty. In fact, the suggested compensation is to be and there is absolutely no provision on behalf of the people who sell the liquor. . . ."

"I see no reason why public-houses should be wantonly introduced into areas where there is no demand for them on the part of the householders, and where the immediate effect of the licence will be to depreciate property. Many men who are given to drink habitually fall before continuous temptation in an area where public-houses are numerous, who would shake themselves free, if this were possible by a single act, viz., migration to a district where drink was not so plentifully supplied. Why should we impose upon these families the continual presence of institutions which are a real danger to their happiness, and which they have migrated to avoid? . . ."

"I should be only too glad to have compensation discussed more thoroughly, and its moral claim fairly adjudicated. When that takes place, we shall see that the drink trade ought to be held liable in money for all the

and to the inebriates. This contention is unanswerable, and in any settlement of the compensation problem it will have to be dealt with. Consider what happens at present. A man is convicted by the magistrates for being drunk and disorderly. Probably he has injured either property, the police, or his family, and very possibly all of them together. Directly or indirectly, the absolutely innocent ratepayer—let us say, a shopkeeper or an artisan—has to pay for the damage. For purposes of correction and reformation the said ratepayer has to keep the inebriate in prison for a period, while the wife, who repeatedly comes before the Bench in order to urge that the husband be let off and allowed to remain as bread-winner, is left with the children either to starve or to become a further charge on the rates. The whole profit of this transaction has GONE TO THE BREWER.

The whole loss is borne by the community. Obviously, an order ought to be made out against the public-house which is proved responsible for the expenses incurred; or, failing the conviction of a particular house, the order should be debited to a general rate, to be levied on all the licences within the local area by the rating authority and on behalf of the Justices. The wife and family would thus be provided for out of the profits of the industry which brought them to misfortune, and brewers would discover that it did not pay them to keep open houses where intoxication was so directly encouraged and so certainly penalised. . . . At the present moment the ratepayers and taxpayers of this country are regularly called upon to defray costs incurred to the whole community by a private industry."

"Thy First Love."

(Rev. ii. 4.)

By Rev. Dr. BALGARNIE, Bishop Auckland.

I HAVE often thought of the man born blind, whom Jesus restored to sight; of the joy and rapture with which he first beheld the new heavens and the new earth; of the wonder and delight with which he gazed on the friendly faces around him; and, above all, of the love and gratitude with which he must have fixed his eyes upon Him who had wrought upon him this miracle of healing. And similar to this are the feelings of the young convert who beholds for the first time the true character and purpose of God our Father in Christ.

Up to that moment of conversion he had been blind. Sin and guilt and misery lay around him, and within him, but there was no eye to pity, no hand to help, no arm that was mighty enough to save. There was evidence of a great Creator, of resistless over-ruling power, the foreboding of an awful judgment day, and a God of consuming fire. But no pity, no love, was visible in the heavens above nor in the earth beneath; no Friend to whom he could resort for counsel; no Father to whom he could appeal for sympathy; no home he could look forward to with hope; he was wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked.

That was your case and mine. We were living then "without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world." Then suddenly the miracle of grace was wrought; our eyes were opened; and we beheld God in Christ, our reconciled Father and Friend. He had seen us a great way off; He had had compassion on us; He had come from heaven to meet us; He had fallen on our neck and embraced us; He had brought us into His banqueting house where His banner over us was Love. We had found in God a Father in Christ, and He was all our salvation and all our desire.

Then there sprang up in our hearts the over-rushing fulness of our "first love." The face of God, our Father in Christ, had been revealed to us, in its ineffable pity, tenderness, and love; our eyes were entranced by the beauty of His holiness, and our hearts were captivated by the warmth of our reception. We had found a long lost Father. He had forgiven our iniquities, and healed our diseases; He had redeemed our life from destruction, and crowned us with lovingkindness and tender mercy. So there sprang up in our hearts a love that transformed our entire being; that made us new creatures; that changed us from children of earth to citizens of heaven; from children of earthly parents to "the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty." "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us" (given to us by His Spirit) "that we should be called the sons of God!"

That was our "first love." Why has it not continued? The love and joy of those early days of the new life, those "days of heaven upon earth," why have we fallen away from them? God has not given us up, neither have we given up God, yet the fervour and exuberance of our "first love" to Him, and the sense of His great love to us, have gone like the flowers of Spring.

Chief among the causes of this spiritual declension is (1), The neglect of soul communion with God in Christ. Those who have been wise enough and happy enough to maintain the blessedness of their first love have been careful to set apart some portion of their time for sacred fellowship with God. They have kept in touch with heaven. They have been with Christ nightly on the holy mount. Not in prayer, not in Bible-reading, not in religious work or study, but in opening their minds and hearts to Christ; in prostrating their spirits under the radiance of His glory; in listening to Him only, until they have said, "Did not our hearts burn within us, as He talked with us by the way, and opened to us the Scriptures?" To neglect this daily tryst with Him, is a sure means of falling from our first love.

Another cause is (2) Having nothing to do for Christ. He is ever with His workers. "Go ye and teach . . . lo, I am with you alway." Idlers lose tokens of His presence and blessing. Their faith becomes weak, their hope grows dim, and their love fails as its object recedes. Back to Christ, and the "first works" is the remedy. It is important that we let no other loves intervene between us and Him.

Questions Answered.—IV.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

ONE correspondent asks if there are any historical, and adequate, and satisfactory PROOFS OF THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST. No fact is more abundantly attested. To doubt it, is to question all historical verity and evidence. Archbishop Whately's "Historic Doubts respecting Napoleon Bonaparte" is a triumphant reductio ad absurdum, applying the same methods of sceptical evasion to a well-known historic personage; and by the same fallacies and sophistries apparently disproving plain facts.

Christ's death was rendered certain by—(1) His crucifixion; (2) the spear-thrust; (3) the wrappings for the tomb (including even the head), which would have suffocated Him had He been yet alive. His resurrection was demonstrated as a reality—(1) By His numerous appearances to different individuals and companies (1 Cor. xv. 1-10); (2) by His eating and drinking with disciples (John xxi. 1-14; Luke xxiv. 36, 43); (3) by His illumining converse (Luke xxiv. 45, 50; Acts i. 3); (4) by the whole history of the Christian Church, inexplicable without it—as an anniversary of any event witnesses to the event, the very fact of an annual Easter celebration is a witness to the resurrection; (5) the conception of a resurrection—a rising to die no more—the exchange of a death-subject body for one that is deathless, is so unique as to be explicable only by the uniqueness of the fact itself.

A correspondent asks: "How can IDENTIFICATION WITH OUR LORD be consistent with His Divinity and Deity." We are made partakers of the Divine nature, but "in all things He has the pre-eminence" (Col. i. 18). He is Head over all things to the Church, which is His body. Even in the figure of the husband and wife (Eph. v.), the husband is still the head of the wife. Christ was and is "the first-born among many brethren" (Rom. viii. 29), and was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows (Heb. i. 9). He is not only clothed with Divinity, but Deity (1 Tim. vi. 16). Yet He has been pleased to identify Himself with us. Such identity does not, however, imply equality, but only a peculiarly close and intimate unity. Identity is a matter of relationship, not of exact sameness in everything. The husk and pulp of the banana are identified as belonging to one and the same fruit, but no one would maintain that the two are equal in value or in edible properties. Christ, in becoming identified with our humanity, in so far necessarily identified our humanity with His own Divinity. This is at once the mystery of grace and the riches of grace. Our humility is a false humility if it leads us to doubt the revelation of God's unspeakable love. It is our unworthiness which, in fact, constitutes the fulness of grace, and makes it the more wonderful. The lower we were by nature, the more God stooped to lift us up by grace.

The substitutionary work of Christ for sinners is always a stumbling-stone to doubters, and yet ILLUSTRATIONS OF VICARIOUS ATONEMENT are not wanting even among men. At a Petty Sessions Court in Ireland sentence was imposed on a lad for misdemeanour—"Thirty shillings or thirty days." His elder brother sold farm implements, got release, and took his brother out of the very sheriff's hand on way to gaol, and in fact at the very door of the prison.

A military officer, criticising, remarks on the atonement:—"It is all well enough; but if a culprit were ordered to receive a hundred lashes, no sparing, reduction, or transfer of the sentence would be allowed." Certainly not; but the two cases are not parallel. In an army there are fixed laws, and no executive can meddle with either legislative or judicial functions. God's empire is an absolute monarchy—all functions united in one head. The "Lord is our judge, law-giver (marg., statute-maker), and king" (Isa. xxxiii. 22).

Again, he who in human government administers the sentence is an inferior and subordinate, mechanically carrying out the commands of a superior. He has no room or right for judgment as to the moral ends and impression of the punishment, and therefore has no discretion in the matter. God is the one Supreme Head, with infinite wisdom and love to guide Him. He makes laws and affixes sanctions, and has power to pardon if He pleases. He can proclaim amnesty to offenders and fix its terms. He knows how to conserve all His own perfections and protect His government. What He desires is a moral impression on the universe; and He foresaw that the grace which provides for forgiveness through faith would make a deeper impression than the simple justice that executes the awful penalty on the transgressor. I knew a mother to inflict a castigation on herself instead of her boy, and it won him to obedience after many a correction laid on him had failed. A great general of modern times tried absolute forgiveness on a notorious offender whom all previous methods had failed to reform, and it was a magnanimous display of grace that softened and won him.

It remains for "the ages to come" to show the wisdom of God, as well as the power of God, in this great mystery of redemption. We, in criticising God's methods, are, to say no more, betraying our own folly and inadequacy. We are, to use the famous illustration of Bishop Butler, like the fly walking on the beam of a colossal engine, with our limited range of vision criticising the machinery as a whole, the major part of which is hidden from our view. The one thing to know is the fact that God for Christ's sake forgives guilty sinners. He will take care of His own vindication.

The Wiles of the Enemy.—Those that will turn truly to Christ must flee occasions, words, sights, and deeds exciting to sin. For when the fiend seeth one among a hundred who withstandeth his enticings, and turneth to God, he findeth a thousand frauds to beguile and trouble, and a thousand manner of temptations to cast him down from God's love to the love of the world. He beginneth by small enticings, and pursues to the greatest flame of wickedness. And he studieth thus busily to blow against us all manner of temptations and tribulations, by how much he seeth that by the mercy of God we are escaped out of his power. For he seeketh nothing so much as to separate a man from the holy and everlasting love of Jesus Christ, and to make him love failing things and uncleanness of this world.—John Wickliffe.

In the Rugged Hills.—The law of compensation runs through all God's distribution of gifts. In the animal world there is a wonderful harmony, often noted, between the creatures and the circumstances and conditions amid which they are placed. The same law rules in the providence of human life. One person's lot in life is hard, with peculiar obstacles, difficulties, and trials, but hidden in it there are compensations of some kind. One is reared in affluence and luxury; he never experiences want or self-denial, never has to struggle with obstacles or adverse circumstances. Another is reared in poverty, and has to suffer toil and privation. The latter seems to have scarcely an equal chance in life. But we all know where the compensation lies in this case. It is in such circumstances that noble manhood is grown, while too often the petted, pampered sons of luxury come to nothing. In the rugged hills of toil and hardship life's finest gold is found.—J. R. Miller.

SUNDAY, May 17. Job xli.

IN chapter xl. we have the chief wonder of the land, here of the water. There it was the hippopotamus, now the crocodile, or whale. None can put a rope through his nostril (1); or tame him to be their servant (4, 5); the strongest fear him (25); no weapon avails against him (27); and he is king over all the sons of pride (34). "Who then," asks Jehovah, "can stand before Me?" If the creature be such, what must not the Creator be! (10).

In the following sentence (11) God asserts His sovereign right to the whole creation. Whether Behemoth, Leviathan, or Job himself—all are His. Whatsoever exists under the whole heaven must own His supremacy; and can He not do as He will with His own? It is not necessary that God should give an account of any of His matters! "Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! A potsherd among the potsherds of the earth! Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou?"

We cannot account for God's dealings with us—why the life of this man is so happy and prosperous, and of that so sombre; and yet we can learn a little of the mystery of pain. In the case of Job, for instance, he had to be stripped of his religious self, and El Shaddai stripped him. The judgment of his flesh brought him to self-emptying and self-despair, that God might fill him with His Divine fulness. Being stripped and clothed again, a new lease of existence opened before him, in which he walked humbly with God. Shaddai has been explained as meaning the Pourer-forth. Oh, be willing to be emptied, that He may pour forth His Divine sufficiency, and that by it you may be made full (Col. ii. 10, R.V.).

MONDAY, May 18. Job xlii.

In complete surrender Job bowed before God, acknowledging that He could do everything. As to himself, he confessed his ignorance, and owned that he had talked glibly of things which he understood not. He had retorted on his would-be teachers that he knew as much as they did, but now he fell in the dust, confessing that he was of all sinners the chief. We are reminded of the confession of Isaiah, who, before a similar revelation of Jehovah, cried: "I am a man of unclean lips." How many words Job had spoken, of self-vindication, of sarcastic retort, of repeated appeals to God to leave him alone! They all come back on him now, and he realises how proud, peevish, and petulant they had been. He says, "I loathe my words" (6, marg. R.V.). Ah! how many of us will some day come to the same confession, as we are bidden to remember and review our words in the search-light of God's manifested presence (Matt. xii. 37).

When Job was right with God, and had taken his befitting place, God began to deal with his adversaries. He took his part against those who hated him, and vindicated him with marvellous directness and completeness; so much so, that it was only by his intercession that they were relieved of the judgment which threatened to fall on them.

Thus Job was vindicated, but he was not delivered until after he had prayed for his friends. It was to a suffering outcast that they came, and it was as a suffering outcast that he interceded for them. But as soon as he had prayed, God turned the shadow of death into the morning. As soon as we cease to vindicate ourselves, and set our hearts towards others, we find ourselves vindicated, delivered, and crowned with blessing and honour. Job obtained the double portion of the firstborn, and we are to be joint-heirs with Christ.

TUESDAY, May 19. The Prefatory. Psalm i.

The Tree and the Chaff.

The Psalter begins with Blessed, and ends with Hallelujah. Lord, make each year of my life, and each day, to begin with a Morning Beatitude and end with an Evening Hallelujah! May each event which I experience be set to music, so that for me also, as for David, Autobiography may become a Psalter.

This Psalm stands well as a preface to the entire collection, because it celebrates the life of contemplation, filled with meditation on the Divine law, in contrast with the worldly life, which lays itself open to influences of evil. Every commentator has noticed the gradation of the first verse from walking to standing, from standing to sitting; and from the counsel of the wicked to the seat of the scornful. If we are resolute in our determination, we shall not be entangled in the churning whirlpool of evil, which catches indolent and indifferent souls, and sucks them with ever-increasing velocity into its vortex.

We must cultivate meditation. David sat before the Lord. As the cows or the deer will chew the cud while returning from the pasture-lands, where they may have caught up their meal in haste, so the devout soul goes over what it has read or been taught, until the truth is incorporated into its very texture. In a sense, it is more important to meditate than to pray, because meditation will lead to prayer.

Compare the rooted tree, fed from the rivers, that becomes a veritable tree of life, yielding its fruit every month, and that passes through the regular course of foliage and fruitage, with the empty chaff, which cannot reproduce itself, and is carried round and round in a useless and endless whirl by forces outside of it. If you are in Christ, God knows each step of the way you take, and waits to gather much fruit for His glory.

WEDNESDAY, May 20. Psalm ii.

The Song of the Messiah.

In this (as in cx.) Jehovah's Messiah-King is introduced, and the whole Psalm is characterized by unusual sublimity and dramatic symmetry.

FIRST, we are introduced to the mutterings of the nations' rage. The petty earth-kings come together for conference, they are full of passion, they ventilate their schemes. (Compare Acts iv. 25, 26).

NEXT, our thought is turned from earth to the heavens—from nations, peoples, and kings, to Jehovah beholding their fury. In spite of all that they can say or do, His decree standeth fast. Yet He has set His King on His holy hill. This prediction was never realized in all its meaning until the Lord Jesus went up on high, leading captivity captive, and sat down at the right hand of the Majesty of Heaven.

THIRDLY, the Son is introduced, bringing with Him the very words of His Father's decree. It is remarkable that the Apostle refers to this text, as fulfilled at the Resurrection. Then Jesus became the First-born from among the dead, and we were begotten unto a living hope (Acts xiii. 33).

LASTLY, the chorus, as in the old Greek plays, urges kings and judges to be wise, to change their plans and lay aside their schemes, to become reconciled to the Son, and put their trust in Him. To persist in rebellion is to court destruction. He must either be the chief corner-stone, or the stone of stumbling and rock of offence. No blessedness is possible except through taking refuge in Him.

THURSDAY, May 21. Psalm iii.

Night and Morning.

This is the first of many Psalms—and these among the most beautiful—in which the troubled soul sings its way out of its sorrow, depression, or midnight darkness, into repose and peace. In this Psalm, the opposition of man is compared in vv. 1-4 to the gathering shadows of the night, and God's deliverance to the breaking daylight in vv. 5-8.

The occasion is generally supposed to have been the time of Absalom's rebellion, when the people "increased after" the beautiful but undutiful son, who well-nigh broke his father's heart. But amid all the grief and tumult of those hours, his soul was holding fellowship with his unseen but ever-present Defender and Friend. Even in that dark hour, he dared to believe that God was near him as his shield, his glory, and the lifter-up of his head. He had only to cry, and he heard the answering voice. (Note the present tense, answereth.)

A friend of mine has a little Marconi instrument, which will enable him to speak to a friend, similarly provided, from Clapham Common to Hampstead Heath across the hubbub of London. Thus a holy soul can speak with God, and hear His reply through a storm. Then falls blessed sleep, the sleep of perfect childlike trust, with the enclosure of God's mighty care.

The morning comes with new vigour. The soul awakes safe and well, with a confident assurance of deliverance. Already God has smitten the foe and broken the teeth of the wicked. Although it would seem as if David's sin had exposed him deservedly to all the disaster that befell him, yet to his penitence had come victory and blessing without stint. Deal with us thus, O Lord, we beseech thee, for the sake of Jesus Christ!

FRIDAY, May 22. Psalm iv.

Evensong.

1, 2.—Here again are distress and opposition gathering like the wolves in the evening about the hunted soul. The sons of men are full of envy, misrepresentation, and deceit, as they surround and hem in the sufferer, who had given the enemy good reason to blaspheme.

3, 4.—But the sweet consciousness of God's presence curtains the singer. He knows that he is one whom God favours (marg.), and that God has set him apart for Himself. Oh, what a word is this—"set apart by God for God." It is as though the soul may be as a garden in which He walks now, as He used to do at eventide in Eden; as though God needed companionship, and found it in the heart which is turned towards His own. But if that be so, how specially careful we should be not to grieve our Heavenly Guest and Lover. We must stand in awe of sin, and of anything that would grieve His Holy Spirit. We must also have still times, when we commune with our own heart, and throw wide its portals for His entering love. And this may specially be the case at night.

> When in the night I sleepless lie,
> My soul with heavenly thoughts supply.

"Good day," said a stranger to an old man, who sat on a bench in the sunshine. "Thank you, kindly," was the reply, "but all days are good to me, because God sends them, and I always have Him." The world may have the gifts of God, but the believer has Himself.

SATURDAY, May 23. Psalm v.

Matins.

There is no time for fellowship with God comparable to the early morning. To begin the day without looking into His face, and hearing a word from His mouth, is to incur disaster. Each of us should be able to say, "In the morning shalt Thou hear my voice." Can it be that God listens to hear our voice amid all those who address Him, but in vain. The conductor of a great orchestra will miss even the piccolo. We must learn to order our prayer. It is a mistake and a wrong to come to God without due consideration of the object of our coming, and the best manner of presenting it. We should learn to marshal our arguments, which are little else than the enumeration of His own most precious promises. If we were entering a royal presence, we should order our petitions; how much more in His!

(4-7).—The heart which would hold fellowship with God must be holy and humble. It must not take pleasure in wickedness, must turn away from the workers of iniquity and such as are cruel and crafty. Only in His fear—a holy fear of grieving Him—may we worship toward His holy temple.

(7-12).—The soul can find no reliance in men; they cannot be trusted, their words are as the stench of corruption, and their fate is assured; but in God there is abundant and very present help. He will make His way plain; His defence will be sure; with His favour, as with a shield, He will compass us about. Will you not place yourself within that shield as you go forth to this new day?

Other Lands.

From Sousse.

AN open-air medical consultation fits well into a Tunisian landscape. On the occasion of our visit to the missionaries at Sousse, we drove one day with Dr. and Mrs. Churcher and several other friends to a village some seven miles off. As we came in, the town-crier informed the inhabitants that the doctor had arrived to give medicine freely in such and such a place.

We alighted in a graveyard surrounding the tomb of a Marabout. No sooner had the medicine chest of drawers and bags been placed against its walls than men and boys began to flock in. About forty tickets were distributed; then the people were bidden to form a circle. As the doctor, followed by Mr. Webb and Miss Cox, sat down in their midst, speaking of the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, the ring thickened considerably, with boys and donkeys. Now and then one saw a camel stepping heavily along the road, the driver pausing to cast a curious glance on the group.

When the consultation began, Mrs. Churcher and Mrs. Webb put themselves in readiness to distribute the medicines. Cases requiring special attention were bidden to come to the Medical Mission at Sousse. While on the other side of the tomb kind hands were preparing a tea for the workers, after picnic fashion, Miss Cox formed around her an auditory of the men who had been dealt with, explaining to them the Way of Life, until it was time to turn our faces homeward.

We drove away with a large following. A noisy group of boys, excited by the unusual sight of a young lady on a cycle, ran round Miss Emerson, who spun along with a calmness and dignity worthy of a future missionary.

There are certainly no means so sure of attracting people to listen to the Gospel as a medical mission. Three days in a week Dr. Churcher receives patients at his house; one and sometimes two days are given to visiting villages.

To show how dense the Mohammedan is in his conception of truth, it may be told here, that while the doctor once spoke to them about the sin of lying, one man exclaimed: "It is just like your fee. You used to ask half a franc from us, and now we have to pay a franc." Owing to very low funds, it had been found necessary to raise the fee. This shuts out the poorest, and consequently, those most in need of medical help; but differences in price cannot be introduced. Through the same lack of funds, the Berachah, a little hospital where the more serious cases from a distance used to be kept and nursed, has had to be shut up for the present—we hope not for long.

Before the consultation begins, men and women are spoken to separately; then, while they are waiting, Mr. and Mrs. Webb, Mrs. Churcher, and Miss Cox form little groups around them, to whom they unfold God's plan of salvation, while the other ladies attend to the dispensary. I watched one and another patient gesticulating and pleading for something. One especially looked so miserable that I felt moved with pity. Miss Hodges, whom I asked for the cause of his tears, replied, apparently untouched, "He says he has no money to pay the medicine bottle with." "But do you not give your medicine free?" "Yes, but we cannot afford to lose the bottles; the money is returned when they are brought back. He is able to pay it, though he swears by Allah and his prophet to the contrary!" After some more delay and some more protestations, the needed coppers were accordingly produced.

It is a sad fact that the great bulk of these people suffer from the foulest of diseases, probably owing to the loose marriage system. Where is the Arab woman with her refining and purifying influence? Christianity will make such no doubt. For the present, woman is nothing but a chattel, a drudge, an article for sale. Her husband can divorce her as soon as he gets tired of her, and buy another wife. She may be sold by her family to several men in succession, without having a word to say in the matter. We heard of a man who, within two years, had divorced as many as fifteen wives. Thus the sacred name of marriage is degraded to lending respectability to prostitution. It is evident that the woman, stripped of every right, does not make social life what it ought to be. None better than a doctor can say what lies behind the scenes of veiled womanhood and ostentatious religion.

Not long ago, the missionaries had the joy of baptizing a soldier at the completion of his military service. Another soldier, who for some time past had given evidences of a changed life, has ceased to visit them. It is believed that the fear of his superiors is keeping him back. Sousse has a large garrison, and much good work could be done among the men were it not for the hostile attitude of the military authorities. Soldiers listening to the Gospel at the door of the Bible depôt, were seen to be kicked by passing officers. Yet this only makes some the more eager to come.

The mission staff consists of Dr. and Mrs. Churcher, Mr. and Mrs. Webb, Miss Cox (who has the reputation of a splendid Arabic scholar), the Misses Hodges, Johnston, Bagster, Turner. They have an efficient helper in Mr. Smeggia, a converted business-man of Jewish nationality, who speaks French and Arabic equally well. As a boy he used to attend Rev. C. F. W. Flad's school at Tunis, which is in connection with the London Jews' Society, and it was there the first foundations of his present consistent life and bold testimony for Christ were laid.

While at Tunis, we visited this school, which has existed for over thirty years, and is attended by a good number of children. The two prominent features are Bible-study and needlework. An hour and a half is devoted daily to the latter. It proves a great attraction on the part of parents, who like their daughters to have deft fingers. The girls are taught by German ladies, and the boys by Frenchmen. Their knowledge of Scripture surprised us. To a question of my husband, a girl rose up and repeated clearly, distinctly, as if she perfectly understood what she was saying, the ninth chapter of Hebrews, beginning with the eleventh verse, "But Christ being come a High Priest," &c. We heard afterwards that she was a believer, and suffering persecution in her family. When her father noticed her love for the Bible he had it burned, though he had previously paid for it. She then wrote out at school texts on pieces of paper, which she carried in her pocket and read when not watched. One day, however, when found out and scolded, she freely confessed that she believed in Jesus and loved to read about Him.

Mr. Flad, who is at the same time the pastor of the English Church at Tunis, was born in Abyssinia, of missionary parents who passed through the horrors of the Abyssinian war when he was but a baby. They were set free on Easter Sunday, April 12, 1868. This year Easter fell on the same date and day. In the management of the school he is ably assisted by his sister. They both love their work, and would like to have it rather extended than decreased; but the Society at home is obliged to demand the strictest economy, as sufficient funds are not forthcoming. W. M.

Mr. Carnegie and the Negro Problem.—Mr. Carnegie has given the trustees of the Tuskegee Institute the sum of 600,000dols. towards an endowment fund. The gift is without any reservation, except that suitable provision shall be made for the wants of Mr. Booker Washington, the coloured principal of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, and his family during Mr. Washington's or his wife's life. Mr. Carnegie says that he wishes that a great and good man should be entirely free from pecuniary cares, in order that he may be free to devote himself to his great mission. He is satisfied that the serious race problem in the South is to be solved only through Mr. Washington's policy of education.

From Death to Life.

PANDITA RAMABAI'S PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

The following is a letter recently written by Pandita Ramabai to a correspondent, who, in enclosing a donation, added, "I ask your prayers on my behalf, that I may know that I have passed from death unto life":—

'DEAR FRIEND,—Your note of Feb. 6, containing your generous gift in aid of this Mission, was received in due time, and I thank you very much for it. The Lord bless and reward you. . . . I was touched with your request for prayers, and deeply sympathize with you. I do pray the Lord may show you His glory, and you may have the desired experience. I am led to write and tell you something about my own experience in this special line.

"Years ago, although I had been baptized and was a Christian, yet I did not know anything about the glorious experience of having passed out of death into life. One day, while thinking about it, I was in great distress of mind, and thought I could not believe that I am really saved unless I felt it. Then the Holy Spirit took hold of me and convicted me of my sin of unbelief. It was nothing short of unbelief on my part which kept me in the 'valley of the shadow of death.'

"The Holy Spirit showed me that I had to do nothing and to feel nothing, but take God at His word and believe. My feelings have nothing to do with my passing 'from death unto life.' 'He believed God who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were . . . He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what He had promised, He was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness' (Rom. iv. 17, 20, 22). Now I am in a better position than Abraham. I have the inspired and written Word of God to depend upon—'God hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son' (Heb. i. 1, 2).

"Now let us see what the Eternal Son of God has to say about this matter. 'Verily, verily, I SAY unto you, he that heareth My Word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, HATH everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation—BUT IS PASSED FROM DEATH UNTO LIFE' (John v. 24).

"We have simply to put our faith in these clear words of our Lord, and do nothing else. Our feelings have nothing to do with our passing 'from death unto life.' The Lord Jesus KNOWS what He says, and it is all true, for He is 'the Word of God.' 'He that cometh from heaven is above all. And what He hath seen and heard, that He testifieth . . . He that hath received His testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true. For He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God. . . . HE THAT BELIEVETH ON THE SON HATH EVERLASTING LIFE' (John iii. 31, 33, 36).

"This is what the Holy Spirit taught me, and helped me to believe, and brought me out of darkness. I repented of my sin of unbelief, asked God for Christ's sake to forgive me, and then thanked and praised Him for bringing me out of death into life.

"I did not want to tire you with a long letter, but the Spirit led me to give my testimony, and tell you what the Lord has done for me. I rejoice in Him for His love and unspeakable mercy to me. 'Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift.'—Believe me, yours very sincerely in the joyous service of Christ,

Mrs. Amanda Smith.—Old friends of Mrs. Amanda Smith may be interested in hearing that the Coloured Orphanage she established some years ago in North Harvey, Illinois, holds its ground, and shelters twenty-two children, besides maintaining some for whom she has found homes. Her frame-house badly needs painting to preserve it, and a fence is required round the garden; also furniture is wanted for the school. As of old, Mrs. T. Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin, will be glad to take charge of any money which may be entrusted to her for this purpose.

Gibraltar Prisons.

By Mr. CHARLES COOK.

SCARCELY three hours' sail from Tangier and its barbarism, and at Gibraltar you are once more in the midst of civilization, and beneath the protection of the English flag. Before leaving Morocco I obtained permission for Dr. Roberts to visit the sick and dying in the chief prison. Alas! several of the poor creatures had passed away before he arrived. Mr. Elson was also to be allowed in, to feed the wasted, famished prisoners. I was able to leave supplies for them for a couple of months, and intend sending more later on.

In the civil prison of Gibraltar I was glad to find only one Protestant prisoner; and considering there are at least 6,000 Britishers on the Rock, this stands out conspicuously against Roman Catholicism which, as Dr. Robertson, of Venice, proves, furnishes so many criminals. "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy" should be read by every one in England: it is a remarkable book, and is calculated to awaken England to the awful responsibility she incurs by dallying with Rome.

The prisons on the Rock are in good order, and the governors humane men, treating the criminals with kindness and forbearance, so different to the treatment on the African coast. The military prisoners are now permitted to wear their military clothes—which is a step in advance, and a recent reform—and are not treated as ordinary criminals. They have a gymnasium and a school, and appeared more cheerful and bright than one expected.

Some 10,000 Spanish workmen come into Gibraltar every day to labour in the dockyards, &c.; and it was a great pleasure to me to be able to meet the streams of men while returning to Spain in the evening, and to offer them copies of illustrated Gospels, which in every case were accepted with grateful thanks.

Whilst thus occupied, with Mr. Holmes, on one occasion, the officers of the Civil Guard rode down to ask for copies for themselves, which they seemed pleased to possess. I was enabled to conduct a series of Gospel services whilst delayed by storms; and in the Wesleyan Chapel, and the South Barracks, enthusiastic meetings were held. A large number of the Lancaster Fusiliers, and at least a dozen sailors from the battleships in the harbour, confessed Christ in the meetings.

At the farewell meeting over a dozen more came out boldly for Christ, and altogether, I think, I wrote about fifty letters to those who had publicly accepted Jesus.

The Advance of Romanism.

MR. WM. ANSELL writes to the Birmingham Daily Mail: I wonder if the ratepayers of Birmingham, and Nonconformist ratepayers in particular, realize the importance of the principle involved in the proceedings at the meeting of the new Education Committee, 29th inst., when it was decided to make a grant of local public money to Roman Catholic pupil teacher centres.

Under the Act these pupil teacher centres will become establishments for the production of a new type of official, who, if I may coin a new phrase, may be termed a species of lay-priest.

Let those who object to the establishment of a Catholic University in Ireland make careful note, that here is the same thing being done under their very noses with their own money. These pupil teachers will go out into the schools of the country, charged with, and trained for, the specific duty of teaching Catholic doctrines to the children of England at the public expense. The case is made worse by the fact that the centre at Whittall Street is residential, which no doubt ensures the absolute purity of the Catholic atmosphere. It is not a pleasant prospect for Protestant England, but it is one of the consequences of the new Act; and many of those who voted for the proposal yesterday must have been smitten by serious qualms of conscience. The question is, How long will the people of Birmingham stand this sort of thing?

Work among French Priests.

THE work among French priests in recent years has been accompanied by many encouragements, also by peculiar anxieties. The experiences of the priest, in a general way, are not such as conduce to a serious view of life, or the development of spiritual consistency. It is always a chance whether men who escape from Rome turn to Evangelical truth or the baldest rationalism. What they have seen of "religion" has implanted disgust for everything that goes under the name; and so, without discriminating between the Faith of Christ and a set of empty forms and ceremonies, many lose their way, and wander in the mazes of doubt and despair—sometimes under the designation of Agnosticism, at others under that of Free Thought.

We have observed with great sorrow signs of mischievous errors in the writings of the Abbé Bourrier, who, after making a fair start on leaving the Church of Rome, is now throwing over all doctrines of an Evangelical type. The co-editor of his paper, Le Chrétien Français, Abbé Vidalot, in a recent number, dispenses with all teaching regarding sin and salvation, and grandiloquently argues for the "laicising" of death, so as to understand it as "the return of the thinking and conscious individual to the great ALL, which thus becomes increased and improved!" These views have no affinity with Christian doctrine. They belong to Buddhism.

In the midst of these discouraging circumstances, we note with great satisfaction the progress of the work of the Œuvre des Prêtres, of which Professor L. J. Bertrand was so long the honoured and trusted director. Working under a committee which includes some of the most highly-esteemed Gospel preachers of France, and enjoying the confidence of all who know it in this country, the Society has met with great encouragement. It deserves the cordial support of the Christian community.

The present director, Abbé Corneloup, was formerly a distinguished priest. He may be addressed at 45, Rue Victor Hugo, Courbevoie, Seine, France. The hon. secretary for England is Mr. W. F. Hathaway, Pewsey, Wiltshire.

The Barotse Mission.

IN a recent issue of the Daily Chronicle a statement was made to the effect that the Barotse Mission had been virtually broken up through sickness, and other causes, which excited feelings of great sorrow in many hearts. We rejoice to say that the disquieting report was without foundation, and that, though the workers have had their sorrows and disappointments, they have not come upon any such troublous times.

Some time ago we reported that Pastor Coillard's health was causing anxiety; and apparently the fact of this beloved missionary being at the Cape, seeking medical attention, has been misconstrued. Miss J. F. Mackintosh, hon. sec. of the Mission in England, writes to us: "M. Coillard's health and eyesight have been unsatisfactory, and he has been to the Cape for medical advice. The reports we receive are most cheering; a voyage to Europe is not considered necessary, and the pastor is going to Basutoland for a short tour, before returning to Barotseland, when he will find reinforcements awaiting him!"

The Racing Stables Mission.—It is not generally known that on the Continent there are racing centres where the trainers and lads are almost exclusively English. Boys are sent out for a five or six years' apprenticeship. In their leisure time they are left to themselves, and only too often resort to surroundings of dissipation and vice. Some three years ago a few Christian men were led to inaugurate a movement at Chantilly (the French Newmarket), which has now resulted in the formation of the Racing Stables Mission to English lads in home and foreign racing stables. The results are distinctly encouraging, and it is earnestly hoped that the work will commend itself to an ever-widening circle of friends. Reports from the Secretary, 26, Paternoster Square, E.C.

Simon Peter.

OUTLINES FOR BIBLE READINGS.

By REV. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

I.—HIS CONVERSION.

BIOGRAPHY is very prominent in the New Testament, and is of great value for study. It enables us to see human nature as it is in itself and what it becomes by Divine grace. Simon Peter's life is of particular interest—personally: as a striking revelation of human character and Divine transformation; officially and in relation to the Church: because of his prominent position. Always named first (Matt. x. 2). Had special and important sphere of labour (Gal. ii. 7).

I.—HIS EARLY ASSOCIATIONS.

1. His name, Simon (John i. 42). His father, John (John i. 42 and xxi. 15; Matt. xvi. 17, R.V.). His brother, Andrew (Mark i. 16, John i. 40). His wife and wife's mother are referred to (Mark i. 30, 1 Cor. ix. 5).

2. His home influences — probably brought up among those "who waited for the consolation of Israel" (see John i. 41 for expectation; c.f. Luke ii. 25, 38; xxiv. 21). Lived at Bethsaida, on coast of Lake of Galilee, and by trade a fisherman (John i. 44; Mark i. 16).

II.—HIS EARLY CHARACTER.

(See Dr. Elder Cumming's He Chose Twelve.)

1. Impulsive. 2. Hot-tempered (drawing sword in Gethsemane, John xviii. 10). Blend of courage and cowardice (Gal. ii. 12). 4. Bargainer (Matt. xix. 27, "What shall we have?") 5. Boastful (Mark xiv. 29). 6. Self-confident (Luke xxii. 33; John xiii. 37). 7. Possibly swearer (Oaths at the Denial, as recurrence of former habit. Mark xiv. 71). N.B.—Yet many think these were not necessarily profane oaths, but solemn asseverations. In either case the guilt is the same.

III.—HIS CONVERSION.

Study John i. 41, f., and note the stages.

1. The preceding influences: (a) General—Messianic expectation; (b) Special—Preaching of the Baptist.

2. The human instrument: (a) His brother. Andrew; (b) The two methods—testimony and influence. He taught and brought. Note here the two elements of Christian service, preaching and persuasion.

3. The Divine power: (a) Penetration—"Jesus beheld"; (b) Perception—"He said, "Thou art . . ." These impressed Simon with the Divine knowledge of Jesus.

4. The Divine claim: The new name given implied the claim of authority. (Cf. O.T. changes of names, Abram and others.) Like change of name at marriage, it meant a new position under a new authority.

5. The Divine reminder: "Thou shalt be called 'Rock'" was a clear reminder at once of his need, and of the assured supply. He needed firmness, strength, stability, and these elements should certainly be his ("Thou shalt be called"), and should come to him in contact with Christ and in discipleship.

Note the close and necessary connection between conversion and character. Christ at once linked Simon's initial coming with his subsequent experiences. Conversion is intended to lead to consecration, and therefore to character, without any hiatus or gap (Rom. xii. 1, 2).

6. The immediate outcome. Prompt acceptance by Simon of the new relation and the commencement of the life of discipleship.

CONCLUSION.

(1) Note the Divine selection from Psa. lxv. 4, and consider the four stages of every true life.

(2) Ponder the Divine action. Here grace commences work on a soul, revealing the man to himself and the Saviour to the man.

(3) Consider the Human Response. Trust and surrender. This the one gateway to discipleship. Only a scholar at first, but all else comes.

(4) Dwell on the Human Possibilities. What grace can do as seen in Simon Peter. Process was long and painful, but result was certain. Note carefully all the usages of the names "Simon" and "Peter" in the New Testament. (1) The old name is occasionally seen after the new was given. Collect, study, and see force of the instances where "Simon" is used by our Lord. Very significant and suggestive. See especially Matt. xvi. 17 and Luke xxii. 31. (2) But the new name gradually and surely makes its way: "Thou art Peter" (Matt. xvi. 18). "I tell thee, Peter" (Luke xxii. 34). "Go and tell . . . Peter" (Mark xvi. 7). (3) And after Pentecost only three instances of "Simon." The old had become transformed, hallowed, beautified by the grace of God.

DUBLIN MISSION HOMES & SCHOOLS.

THESE Institutions, which were commenced some fifty years ago by the late Mrs. Smyly in connection with the Irish Church Missions, and were supported mainly through her devotion and influence during her lifetime, have now reached the second year in which the responsibility for their management and maintenance has devolved upon others.

The Seven Homes have continued to shelter a family numbering from 500 to 600 boys and girls, and the Ragged Schools have been daily attended by some 400 of the poorest city children, who get breakfast and dinner at the Schools. There are always more than a thousand children under their care and teaching, the greater number of whom would be lost to the Protestant Church if the Mission Homes and Schools were not maintained. Every year a goodly number of boys and girls are sent out to service or business, scripturally taught and trained to be useful. The cost of carrying on this work, as it has been done in the past, amounts to £1,000 a month, or £12,000 a year; and nearly all this has to be obtained in voluntary contributions or bequests. The financial year which has just closed has not been so satisfactory as could be desired, inasmuch as three of the Homes, viz., the Elliott Home, the Coombe Boys' Home, and the Spiddal Orphanage, received less than their expenses by a sum of £520 inclusive. It is earnestly hoped that this need has only to be known to be supplied, as the respective committees, while most grateful for the generous support they have received, cannot but feel some anxiety at so large a deficit in one year.

Communications should be addressed to the MISSES SMYLY, 102, Lower Baggott Street, Dublin, who will be glad to give the fullest information respecting the work.

The May Meetings.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

THE fact that the British and Foreign Bible Society is now in its centenary year lent a deep and peculiar interest to the anniversary celebrated at Exeter Hall on Wednesday of last week. The report submitted by Rev. J. H. Ritson was full of evidence that the spirit which actuated the founders of the Society is shared by their successors, while the work has far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of early days.

The issues had been over 5,943,700 copies of Scripture, complete or in parts, a total which surpasses earlier records by 870,000 copies. Out of every hundred copies issued, sixteen were Bibles, twenty-five were New Testaments, and fifty-nine were Scripture portions, chiefly Gospels or Psalters. Of these, the 850 colporteurs abroad (returns incomplete) sold the record number of 1,890,000 copies. Over 650 native Christian Bible-women in the East were supported in connection with nearly fifty different missionary organizations.

Translations or revisions are in progress of over one hundred different versions. The list of these now includes names of 370 distinct forms of speech. To print these languages, over fifty different sets of characters are required. Eight new names—Fioti, Kikuyu, Shambàla, Karanga, Nogogu, Laevo, Baffin's Land Eskimo, and Madurese — have been added during the year.

The income had been £233,138; while the outlay was £254,209, leaving on the year's working a deficit of £21,071; the deficits of the four previous years having amounted to £38,000.

A new agency has been established at Johannesburg, to supply Scriptures in the Orange River Colony, the Transvaal, Rhodesia, and regions beyond. Annam, closed to the English representatives of the Society in 1889, has been re-opened to a French colporteur. Promising pioneer work has been done in a new agency for the Republics of the Andes.

HINDRANCES AND PERSECUTION.

In spite of the great and open door, there are many adversaries. Restrictions and prohibitions in Moslem countries like Persia and Turkey are familiar; but it is melancholy to find the Modern Greek Testament a forbidden book in Greece. Licences are still refused to colporteurs throughout Upper and Lower Austria and the Tyrol. The reports tell of Bible-burning in Baden, Franconia, Danzig, Cologne, Spain, and the Argentine. Public bonfires of the Scriptures occurred in Carniola, Pernambuco, Peru, and Fiji—all under the unhappy inspiration of Rome, the only Church which bans the open Bible.

A different tale comes from Russia, where, besides encouraging outside efforts, the Orthodox Church adopts similar methods to popularize the Scriptures throughout the dominions of the Czar.

When congratulating the members on the position which the Society has reached, the Chairman (the Marquis of Northampton) found special cause for personal satisfaction in the fact that as much as £10,000 had been spent on grants of Scriptures at home. It was a source of great pleasure that now the Revised Version had been brought within the reach of the poorest. Turning to financial affairs, he assured the members that every possible effort had been made to economise; but, notwithstanding all, a deficit was found inevitable: and the Committee could now only come to the Christian public and ask them to decide whether the work was to go forward—as calls for versions and colporteurs come from all quarters of the earth—or whether the sad step must be faced of retrenchment.

Replying to those who thought that the missionary societies might undertake the colportage, leaving translation and publication to the Bible Society, he explained that there were many considerations which made this impossible or impracticable. When we have prayed that God's Kingdom on this earth should be extended, and when we know that our prayers are being answered, it cannot be the time to decrease the work.

PROGRESS IN THE CENTURY.

As the mover of a resolution expressing gratitude to God for the past, and praying for a keener and more general sense of responsibility for the circulation of the Scriptures throughout the world, the Bishop of Ripon drew a vivid picture of the changed conditions which prevailed at the close, as compared with the beginning, of the centennial period. If anything would encourage Christian people to faith and hope, it ought to be observation of the difference between Christian and heathen nations. Christian influence now dominates one-third of the people of the world, whereas a century ago that could only be said of one-fifth. The change in missionary enthusiasm had, however, been very much greater. Seven societies had become 280, and 170 missionaries 9,000, with 44,000 native helpers.

There is a sense in which he trusted we should always be dissatisfied with the ideals of our times. Disappointment with our achievements will open the way to lofty ideals; but it is very dangerous when a Christian church falls into a despondent mood. It is hope that conquers the world, as the handmaid of faith. It is in the power of a living faith that we ought to approach every Christian duty, because if hope has dwindled the vision of faith will grow dim also.

If the churches of God are not missionary, they are not true churches. He could pardon a great deal in the enthusiasm which makes mistakes. Much had been said and written about overlapping; and though Christian divisions were to be deplored, while things remain as they are he believed the individualistic form of zeal was of immense value as a provocative to good works, and this might not be an unwholesome rivalry. With regard to the perplexities of the heathen about the divisions of the Church, the Bible Society is building up a great embankment against the questions that must arise in the minds of inquirers. These men and women are quite able to appreciate the essential union gathering round the Book in which all believe.

THE OUTLOOK IN CHINA.

Illustrating the progress of the Gospel in China, Rev. G. H. Bondfield (the Society's agent for that empire) declared that on every hand there were grounds for thanksgiving to God. The country is open as never before, in the sense that the missionary has already practically possessed the land. He may be found with his helpers on the remotest borders, north, west, and south. Every new station opened, every fresh convert won for Christ, is an additional point from which the Bible Society immediately commences operations, for no Christian home or church can exist without the Book. The educated classes are now stretching out their hands for the Bible and other Western literature, while among the common people there is an ever-growing readiness to listen to and read about the things of God. Even the Boxer movement had been used to afford additional opportunity for the Gospel.

Warm, fraternal greetings were presented by Sir Samuel Chisholm, Bart., LL.D., on behalf of the National Bible Society of Scotland, accompanied by the prayer that the present year may be crowned with yet more abundant tokens of the Divine blessing. He thought that the Society might feel an emotion akin to pride, as well as fervent gratitude to God, in looking back, looking around, and looking forward. Through dark days and bright, it had pursued the upward tenor of its way, and never before had it occupied a more commanding position. There was also the firm assurance for days to come. The world is yet far from being won for Christ; but the Society sees in this a call to go forward. Difficulties are not discouragements, but incitements. The Society rests in the Christian willingness of Christian men and women. Experience of the Bible abundantly justifies the faith which looks for the coming Kingdom.

As an old missionary, Bishop Ridley expressed the feelings of reverence with which he regarded not only the contents, but the outward form of the Book; and illustrated from his own experience the closeness with which Mohammedans and others watch Christians in this respect. The Bible is a cheap missionary, which may be trusted from the beginning.

The Ragged School Union.

PRACTICAL proof of the deep hold the Ragged School Union has upon the hearts and sympathies of the Christian public was to be found at the Queen's Hall on Monday evening. The occasion was the annual festival — always a gathering of unique interest—and the beautiful auditorium was crowded in every part. The many-sided and diversified operations of the Union are well known, and appeal to all who are anxious to better the lives of children who are reared in poverty or destitution. Some idea of the extent of the influence of the Union may be gathered from the fact that it comprises 155 schools, with 4,028 voluntary teachers, in touch with 100,000 souls. Over 5,000 enjoy a fortnight's holiday, and 48,000 a day's outing in the summer, while nearly 6,000 cripples, under 1,000 unpaid visitors, are the subjects of kindly and helpful ministeries.

Previous to the commencement of the meeting, and at different stages in the proceedings, some hundreds of neatly-attired cripple children, occupying the platform, entertained the audience with sacred selections and action songs, which were pleasingly rendered. Another feature of the occasion was a parade of those who had earned "faithful service" prizes, Lady Margaret Compton distributing 566 such trophies.

The President, the Marquis of Northampton, occupied the chair, and in his remarks acknowledged with thankfulness, "We have had twelve months of blessing and encouragement, and we are here to-night to say to ourselves as well as to the outside public that the Ragged School Union with its work is alive and hearty." While not attempting to give an outline of the ramifications of the Society, the President referred to some of the most important recent developments. As regards the work among drift children, those who are carrying it on are unanimous that it must be extended until its operations touch every part of London. With reference to the Sunday-schools, his lordship reminded his hearers that these centres of religious influence, more than any other, are becoming instrumental in bringing about what all desire to see—a really Christian nation.

A hearty word of greeting was brought by Sir Samuel Chisholm, who drew from his own unique experience in Glasgow many cheering and encouraging facts for those who are seeking to help the children. He emphasized the possibilities of child-life, as being one of the greatest incentives to the work of rescuing the young from the snares and perils with which our towns and cities are charged.

Addresses appreciative of the work of the Ragged School Union were also given by Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., and Mr. J. E. K. Studd (Regent Street Polytechnic), and a hearty send-off was given to a party of emigrants leaving for Canada.

Church Missionary Society.

THE key-note of the Church Missionary Society's anniversary, celebrated on Tuesday of last week at Exeter Hall, was one of devout thankfulness to God for signal mercies vouchsafed to the British Empire, and to the Society during the past year. Although another meeting had been arranged simultaneously at St. James's Hall, the attendance was so large that it was found necessary to open the Exeter Lower Hall for an overflow gathering. The appearance in the chair of the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (Dr. Randall Davidson) in his first year of office, was regarded with much satisfaction, as indicating the high place which the Society occupies in the regard of the leaders of the Church of England; and as betokening the confirmation of former friendly relations under new circumstances, in the advancement of missionary interests at home and abroad.

When presenting the report, Prebendary H. E. Fox called attention to some features of the advance made during the past few years:—

THE RATE OF INCREASE.

(1) The staff of missionaries has doubled in India and Ceylon in the past fourteen years; in Japan, in ten years; in West Africa, in nine years; in East Africa and Uganda, in eight years; in the Mohammedan lands of the East, in eight years; in China, in seven years. (2) In 1887 the Society sent out the first twenty-two unmarried women as missionaries; now there are 364 such. The increase in the medical missionaries has been from 16 to 61. (3) Adult baptisms, which numbered 2,600 in 1887, rose to 9,500 in 1902, or a daily average of twenty-six. The number of stations is now 580, with 1,328 European missionaries, 378 native clergy, 7,673 native lay teachers. The native adherents and catechumens number 301,096, of whom 81,553 are communicants. The ordinations of natives had been 38, and 67 missionaries had gone out from home. The income for the year had been £341,000, but the expenditure had been £9,000 more, and there was still a deficit on the funds of £35,000.

The pioneer missionaries in both the Eastern and the Central Soudan are confronted by the difficulties that always beset evangelistic work where Mohammedanism is dominant. The West African mission field is much troubled by schism in the Church, by polygamy and other moral evils, and by the pernicious influence of the liquor traffic, which is only increased by the new facilities for transport consequent on the opening of railways to the interior. The outlook in China gives frequent cause for concern. The removal of wise and upright viceroys, and the appointment to high office of men who sympathized with the Boxers, are signs that evil counsels have not ceased to influence the Pekin Government; while the newly-manifested desire for Western education appears to be continually foiled by the bigoted conservatism that resists all reform. Another serious cause of anxiety is the spiritual condition of the Native churches. There are Christians in all the mission fields, as true and as exemplary as any in the most godly circles at home; but they are a minority, just as they are among ourselves. An earnest appeal was made for a discriminating perception of inevitable shortcomings, and for constant prayer that the nucleus in every land of true spiritual religion may be continually strengthened and enlarged.

THE OPENING OF HAUSALAND.

After referring with deep feeling to the responsibility which his archdiocese lays on him for the extension of the Church abroad as well as at home, the CHAIRMAN said it was a humbling fact that the Church of Christ should be still engaged in the elementary task of the first telling of the message to those who knew it not before. Recalling the fact that Africa was in the forefront of the thoughts of those who formed the Society, the Archbishop took the western part of that continent as typical of the opportunities placed before the Church.

The issues at stake in Hausaland seemed to be even greater than in Uganda, with all its splendid history. It is almost the only part of the world in which Islam is still a menacing force, complicating beyond measure the other difficulties with which missionaries have to contend. Faithful men dream of the day when the missions of that country will stretch out their hands across Africa to Khartoum. At this very time, when new opportunities are being given to us, it seems to many that God has specially chosen to show by scientific men how the difficulties of living there may be overcome.

Voicing the feelings of the Committee, Sir JOHN H. KENNAWAY, Bart., M.P., president, said the Society was in a state of perplexity, but not of despair. Sixteen years ago it had been determined to refuse no suitable candidate who should come forward, but to accept every such man and woman, even if there were not funds in the treasury for their support. That policy had been challenged again and again, but had been as often reaffirmed, and had been justified by the results. It was not intended to depart from the practice, but to go forward believing that when God provided the missionary He would send the means. Perplexity arose also from another cause. Half the world has not heard; and of those who have heard, scarce one in a thousand realizes any obligation to go forth and tell others of Christ. News of the most cheering and encouraging character had just been received from Uganda.

A CALL TO GO FORWARD.

After responding gratefully to a warm welcome extended to him on personal grounds, and in memory of his father, the BISHOP OF WINCHESTER (Dr. Ryle) felt led to express to the committee the wish of all that they should go forward, assuring them that the members of the Society are not dismayed by the state of affairs. The eye of spiritual discernment must see that England has been set apart to do a great work for her Lord in carrying the message of the Cross to the nations. Truly, the voice of God may be heard: "There is the work to which thou art set. If thou hast the will, then the power is committed into thy hand. Go forth and do that for which thou, England, hast been set apart, bearing the Word of God on thy lips and in thy hand; and go forth in the might of thy Redeemer."

India was represented by Rev. C. G. MYLREA, who spoke hopefully on the outlook of Christian work in our great Eastern Dependency. Real progress is being made. Christianity is a living force; and the late census makes most strikingly apparent that it is increasing by leaps and bounds. He felt, however, that more important than this were certain intangible proofs of progress. There is growing in the Church a deeper spiritual tone as the doctrines of the Gospel are sinking into the consciences and hearts of individuals. A higher standard of morality is making itself felt. Even native journals have been found expressing approval of what missionaries are doing to break down caste; and leading men have made no secret of their sympathy with efforts to carry the Gospel behind the purdah, and to ameliorate the condition of women.

Among the people themselves there was a wide-spread presentiment that a great change is at hand; and when missionaries speak of the coming again of our Lord Jesus Christ, Hindus and Mohammedans alike say that the coming of a Sinless One is in their own books.

The marvels of grace which have been wrought in Japan during the last quarter of a century were described by Rev. W. ANDREWS, as he had witnessed them in the diocese of Hokkaido. Striking answers had been received to definite prayers for workers. Touching references were also made to the restoration of backsliders.

A closing resolution was moved by Mr. AUSTIN TAYLOR, M.P., and seconded by Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE, in which occasion was taken from the centenary of the British and Foreign Bible Society to affirm the importance of maintaining the integrity of Holy Scripture as God's Word written, and as the supreme rule of faith for all mankind; and, moreover, that the success and stability of every mission, as of the whole Church itself, must depend on knowledge of, faith in, and obedience to, the Word of God.

Native Labour in South Africa.

AT a meeting held a few days ago, under the auspices of the Aborigines' Protection Society and the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, Sir JOHN E. GORST, M.P. (chairman), explained that the object in view was to strengthen the hands of the British and Transvaal Governments by a clear declaration of those principles with regard to the question of slavery which had so long been maintained by them, and for which in the past so many sacrifices have been made. The doctrine that it was the duty of the civilized states to induce natives to be industrious was a perfectly sound one; but it was not a doctrine that should be pushed too far.

He held that such doctrine should have two limitations: (1) That the industries to which they were put should be useful and beneficial to the natives; (2) That our inducement to them should not develop into compulsion. The doctrine was not a new one, for it had been adopted by Spain in her colonies, where was developed; and natives were practically exterminated.

The number of natives in the Transvaal was not enough to meet the demands of labour for the mines, and in a recent despatch Lord Milner supported that view. It was computed that at present there were in the Transvaal 80,000 native labourers; but their labour was required for other work besides developing gold mines. Many were occupied in cultivating their own lands, others were on British farms. The army of occupation and the police created a great demand for native labour in looking after their wants; while the repatriation of the colonists, repairing the damages of the war to the railways, bridges, roads, telegraphs, &c., public works, and new industries needed much native assistance.

The High Commissioner (Sir GODFREY LAGDEN) had pointed out that there were now as many native labourers working in the Transvaal—though not in the gold mines—as there were before the war, if not more. There was, therefore, no ground for saying that the natives of the Transvaal were idle. The most urgent danger was that natives might be brought into the Transvaal from other parts of Africa. This from one part of the world to another was full of serious danger, owing to the possible development of slavery. Nothing showed more clearly how important it was to a country not rashly to divest itself of its native labour, than the action of the Natal Government, which had passed a law prohibiting recruiting agents from sending native labourers beyond the colony. This might with great advantage be imitated elsewhere. If the gold was not extracted for twenty years, it would still be there to be got out in the future; while if they divested the land of its labourers, the land would go to waste, instead of producing cotton, sugar, and other necessaries.

Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON, as president of the Anti-Slavery Society, made it clear that in no sense was the movement animated by party spirit. They desired that all industries should flourish and prosper—mining as well as agriculture. They should see that men who did not want to work in the mines should not be forced to do so.

Lord OVERTOUN pleaded on behalf of the natives of Nyassaland, that they should not be enticed to the South. Labourers in that land were even now becoming scarcer, and the development of the country would be greatly delayed if recruiting were permitted there.

Mr. W. CROOKS, M.P., denounced the attempt to introduce slavery—calling it something else—under the British flag. The cultivation of the land must be of more importance to the Empire than any number of diamonds or ounces of gold, and if they could not be got out of the ground without departing from the cherished principles of British rule, let them stop in.

Lord's Day Rest.

THE meeting of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association brought together, on Tuesday of last week, at the Holborn Restaurant, a large gathering of those who deplore the growing tendency to use the Sabbath for pleasure and business. The annual report—presented by Mr. CHARLES HILL, secretary—brought vividly home the number of points at which this Christian privilege is assailed. The most hopeful sign of the times is a growing recognition that the decline in public worship is largely due to neglect of the duties and blessings of the Sabbath Day.

Among other efforts for the improvement of present conditions, a representative conferred (by invitation) with the Licensing Committee of the London County Council on the subject of Sunday concerts, when the objections to the concerts were stated, and the Council supplied with information. The president had called the attention of the House of Commons to the subject of Sunday labour in the Post Office; while the late president (Mr. Richard Bell) spoke in the House of Commons against the long hours (including Sunday) of railway servants, and carried a resolution by 151 votes against 144 in favour of reduced hours of labour.

A NATIONAL MOVEMENT ANTICIPATED.

Satisfaction was expressed at the fact that, on the Midland Railway the engines sent out on Sunday were 50 per cent. less in 1901 than in 1900, and 50 per cent. less in 1902 than in 1901. Proposals to establish bands or concerts at Hastings, Edinburgh, Spalding, Rochester, Rhyl, Abergele, and other places; to run trams and omnibuses at Hove, Portslade, and Cardiff; to open the museums and galleries at Glasgow; to open the public library at Camberwell; to use the town hall at Fulham for concerts—all on the Lord's Day—have been defeated; and a scheme for holding a conference, with a view to the inauguration of a national movement for the defence of the Lord's Day is being prepared.

For many years a practical part has been taken in efforts to promote Sabbath observance in other countries, by correspondence, financial help, and the translation of papers. These are bearing fruit, and Sunday labour on railways, shops, the post office, and in other departments have been greatly lessened as the result. Our colonies have sought co-operation, and important help has been given to friends in Johannesburg to resist Sunday labour in the mines. In Australia the Lord's Day Act is vigorously enforced to protect the amusement industry against Sunday labour.

The treasurer (Mr. J. HALFORD) showed that the income during the year had been £813 19s. 9d.; but the expenditure had amounted to £968 10s. 2d. There had been a serious deficiency in the item of bequests, though the subscriptions and donations had risen slightly. Numerous opportunities for furthering the work have had to be passed over for lack of adequate funds.

DECADENCE IN SCOTLAND.

When urging from the chair the deep importance of the subject, as well as the far-reaching nature of the interests involved, Sir MARK J. MACTAGGART STEWART (president) declared that such matters had claimed much of his attention during the whole of his thinking life, and he felt that a crisis had come in the history of the country. There was a more general departure from the old paths. Even in Scotland the laxity of observance was most depressing. In country districts the state of affairs might be better, but in large centres an utter disregard was shown by a large proportion of the population to the claims of the Sabbath. The key to the situation and the only hope for the future was to be found in personal influence and individual example. Along these lines, Christian people are faced by great privilege and duty, the recognition and discharge of which will alone be effective in the moulding of public opinion.

In an earnest address, Archdeacon SINCLAIR expressed the gratitude felt by many of the clergy to this Association for undertaking the great public duty of bringing to a focus the sympathies of those who value this Divine institution—whether the motives by which they are actuated be those of religion, of health, or of State. The speaker expressed the warmest approval of all that was being done to oppose catering for amusement, providing excursions, engaging in trade, and using the Post Office on the day which God has set aside for rest and worship. Sunday had been called a Puritan invention or institution, but it was a mis-statement of those who closed their eyes to facts. It was greatly to be deplored that some of the clergy had not only abandoned for themselves the sanctity of the Lord's Day, but were actively disseminating such harmful views.

The other speakers included Revs. T. Eynon Davies, E. A. Stuart, and Arthur Hall, and Mr. J. F. Allen, who evoked the fullest sympathy as they illustrated from different points of view the necessity as well as the obligation to respect the Day of Rest.

Among London's Millions.

AS the Metropolis extends with great rapidity, and slumdom multiplies even in suburbs which but a few years since were pleasantly rural, the work of the London City Mission becomes increasingly precious to those who view with concern the indifference manifested by the masses.

During the past year, energetic efforts have again been put forth to win the people for Christ. At the annual meeting, held on Thursday morning last at Exeter Hall, when Mr. FRANK A. BEVAN presided, Rev. T. S. HUTCHINSON (secretary) gave some account of the operations. His report spoke first of the difficulties and temptations of the great city. The vast population increases at the rate of 100,000 per annum, but, as we know, the great majority remain untouched by church agencies.

WOMEN-DRINKERS AND GAMBLERS.

Drunkenness prevails to a terrible extent. A missionary testifies: "It is greatly on the increase in my district among married women, and even among young women, some of them not more than fifteen years of age, who work in factories. I know of cases where married women sit all day in a public-house. The husband, when he leaves work, instead of going home to tea, joins his 'missus' at her favourite public-house, and has beer and bread and cheese. As many as a dozen young women may be frequently seen in an advanced state of drunkenness." As to gambling, "The working men, and many of their wives and children, are badly smitten with the betting and gambling fever. Like an epidemic or plague it seems to have laid hold of people of both sexes and of all ages. The result, both material and moral, is deplorable. Work is neglected, wages are squandered, want is entailed, and discontent, dishonesty, deceit, crime, and even suicide are caused thereby."

HOW GOD SAVES.

On the other hand, the splendid work of the missionaries is fraught with encouragement. No fewer than 1,483 drunkards have been hopefully reformed. One missionary, narrating typical instances, says:—"Mrs. A., a brewer's widow, was almost a wreck. On being induced to become a teetotaler and an attendant at our meetings, she soon became anxious about her soul, and before she left the neighbourhood she found peace. . . . Mrs. B. had been addicted to drink for sixteen years. She was a terror to her husband. . . . Both were induced to sign the pledge, and God graciously led the wife to a knowledge of Himself. Referring to the wonderful difference in her, her husband said that he could hardly have believed such a change possible. She has become an active worker for Christ. Mrs. C. was mainly responsible for her family being reduced in circumstances, and I shall not soon forget how, after a prayer-meeting one night, she and her husband were led to seek the Lord. After signing the pledge, she was completely broken down as she confessed her sins to God. The family has now been set up again, and it has been pleasing to hear the husband speak of his wife as 'a trophy of Divine grace.'"

HONEST, BUT HUNGRY.

Much has been done to alleviate distress by means of a special fund. A worker who has had large experience in this matter says:—"I have seen big, burly men with tears trickling down their faces, women sobbing with well-nigh broken hearts, and children crying bitterly from the pangs of hunger. The furniture which once made the home look snug and comfortable has in many cases been parted with, and there has been no fire in the grate, or food in the cupboard. This state of things has been brought about through no lack of energy, through no wrongdoing on the part of many of these sufferers, but through lack of employment. I am not attempting to champion the cause of those who continually paraded our streets. They may or may not be real. I write of cases I can vouch for, of men who walked miles every day without a penny in their pockets to buy food. They returned home in the evening, footsore and weary, to greet their wives and children with the same woeful news, 'No success.'" Coal and bread tickets were distributed among the most needy.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.

The most important part of the Society's work is the house-to-house visitation. The number of visits paid during the year was more than a million and a half. No fewer than 705 families were induced to commence family prayer; nearly seven thousand children were sent to Sunday-school; ninety-seven unmarried couples were induced to marry; and the proprietors of twenty-nine shops were led to close their establishments on the Lord's Day. Summing up the whole operations, the figures assume enormous proportions. Nearly five million copies of tracts were distributed; more than a million conversations held on spiritual topics with persons in public-houses, factories, &c.; about 700,000 readings from the Bible given in visitation; and almost forty thousand Gospel meetings held in cottages and mission rooms. A missionary who has had much blessing in his work states that in one week alone, when they had a special season of prayer and self-denial, he had the happiness of seeing thirty-five people seeking peace. Another writes:—"During the year thirty of my people have become members of the Church of Christ, and about thirty more are ready to join."

The Chairman, who followed, pointed to the Daily News census and to Mr. Charles Booth's recently-issued book, as clearly teaching the lesson that we must with greater faith and energy take the Gospel to the people, since the people will not come to the Gospel. Much has been accomplished through the missionaries' labours, but multitudes are leading lives that are practically heathen, and to win them with the message of Christ's love is the high aim of the London City Mission.

SHUTTING THE DOOR ON RELIGION.

Rev. ROBERT CATTERALL, vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury, found a chief reason for widespread indifferentism and materialism prevalent among all classes in the reading of literature calculated to induce unbelief (much of which is spread broadcast), and in the abounding publications of an obscene character. The London City Mission, in its efforts to change the state of affairs, goes straight to the point, knowing one object only—the salvation of men. In pursuance of that aim, there is nothing so fruitful as house-to-house visitation, despite the opposition met with, which is well illustrated by the Bishop of London's story of a visit which he paid some time ago in the slums. A little shock-headed girl opened the door about three inches, in answer to Dr. Ingram's knock, and peered out. "What is it, Sal?" asked a strident voice within. "Its religion, muvver!" "Then shut the door!"

Subsequent speakers included Mr. A. CAMERON CORBETT, M.P., who spoke on the importance of effecting a great reduction of drink licences, and also emphasized the undenominational character of the Mission, which is the servant of all the churches.

PRINCIPAL EMERITUS OF NOTTINGHAM CONGREGATIONAL INSTITUTE.

JOHN BROWN PATON was born at Loudoun, in Scotland, in 1830; his second Christian name was given him in honour of his uncle, Dr. Morton Brown, well known a generation ago as a Congregational minister at Cheltenham. His training for the Congregational ministry was obtained at Spring Hill College, where he was one of the most brilliant of a remarkable set of students, Dr. Dale being among them.

In scholarship he came forth into the ministry a well-equipped man, and one might have expected him to take rank among the great philosophical theologians of a peculiarly restless and unsettled period in regard to Christian faith. Or, with his love of history and wide reading, he might have given the churches some works on the origins of Christianity and the history of the Church that would have been a pillar of fire in the night of unbelief. He might have stepped into the place of his dearly loved friend, Robert Alfred Vaughan; and carried on to completion the work which that great scholar, charming writer, and saintly man left unfinished—indeed, had only just mapped out and begun.

But Dr. Paton has a versatile, discursive nature, and delights in the world of to-day and the world of action; while books crowd and choke his library, his eye is caught by the motion and colour of the moving scene outside. Nothing can stir, but he hears and feels it. Hence he has been a man of affairs rather than a recluse.

His first charge was as pastor of a new church, the Wicker Congregational Church, Sheffield, the very name of the place indicating a change of nomenclature and thought then beginning to pass over "Independent" churches which he has done a good deal to promote. Everyone of the older places in the town was an "Independent chapel." Standing in a new and growing part of the town, and officered by active men, the new church had a prosperous time under the care of its first pastor; its Sunday school was almost phenomenal at that period for size and influence.

But Mr. Paton showed even thus early his unmistakable leaning to the kind of work that has commanded and absorbed his powers. His eyes were observant of the needs of new or overlooked classes of the people, and he had the city missionary spirit. He thought of the large number of Welsh iron-workers in the large works, who had no preacher in their own tongue; and also of the people who lived in the neighbourhood of an old disused chapel in the centre of the town—"a down-town church," as it would now be called—and attempted to do something for them. It was not a success with him; but the schemes passed into the hands of other men, who carried them through. Very likely the young minister's mind and hands were getting filled with yet another enterprise of larger dimensions.

Dr. Parker, then minister of Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, had conceived the idea of a college which should give a training for the ministry, shorter and more practical than was given at the older colleges, and had begun work, the new college being called "Cavendish College," after the place where the students were taught. Of this institution Mr. Paton became a tutor, and went to and fro between Sheffield and Manchester to fulfil his duties. Then came a change, and the institution was removed from Manchester to Nottingham. Mr. Paton resigned his first and only pastoral charge, which he had held for eight or nine years, and became the Principal of the Nottingham Congregational Institute. Its aims and methods have been thus set forth by its own Committee:—

> In his early ministry, Dr. Paton was disquieted at the lamentable proportion of untutored men in the ranks of the pastorate. He saw that, in many cases, ministerial service was inevitable, while the commonly approved training was impossible, and he set himself to devise a variety of preparation which should meet the abilities and circumstances of capable men whom the churches called to service, but the colleges left untrained. . . . The work of the Institute was at length acknowledged to be necessary, and good men were sent out without the classics, but with a working knowledge of the Bible, theology, and church history; and able to proclaim in clear, strong, and effective English the message of the Gospel. Their earnest, faithful labours in every part of the United Kingdom and in the Colonies demonstrated the worth of the Institute and the sagacity of its founder. . . . The students have surrendered themselves to the inspiration of his noble thoughts; and their ideal of Christian service has been expanded, exalted, and transfigured by the strenuousness, the intensity, the glow, and the holy passion of his burning words, and he deserves all the honour the Institute can give.

REV. DR. PATON.

If the success of a tutor's work may be gauged at all by the enthusiasm of his students for him, then Dr. Paton is undoubtedly a most successful man. The opinion of the College Committee is found in the quotation just given. While the work done was the giving a working knowledge of immediately practical subjects, it ought also to be said that whenever men presented themselves who had powers above the average, and could profit by a longer and higher training, they were sent on to some other college. Some of the foremost men in the Congregational ministry made a beginning at Nottingham and finished elsewhere.

The chair of a professor is often, though mistakenly, thought to be rather remote from actual life; Dr. Paton's, it will be seen, was close to it. Not only so, his social instincts impelled him to undertake many enterprises for the amelioration of the condition of the people. The college was the chief outlet for the spiritual yearnings of his soul; the Contemporary Review and the University Extension Scheme were the channels for his intellectual activity; and various social works gave scope to his desire to make the Church of Christ the great regenerator of society.

Current literature has felt the impact of his influence in many ways, but chiefly in the higher reviews—the Eclectic (which he once owned and edited), the British Quarterly, the London Quarterly, the Fortnightly, and the Contemporary. The last he saved from extinction, and for some time acted as its consulting editor. Its subsequent service to the cause of righteousness justifies its continuance; for unpopular but good causes have had an organ in the Contemporary, which has saved them from the ignominy and helplessness of silence; their voice has been heard in that, whereas a feebler journal would have received no attention. But here again Dr. Paton's social Christianity has been the efficient cause, and in Mr. Percy Bunting, the present editor, he has had a willing co-operator. So long as the present management lasts, social purity in all phases, justice to oppressed peoples, the interests of "them that have no helper," will be able to speak in its pages; and this liberty of speech is the breath of life to them.

The system of university lectures outside the universities, a system of which Dr. Paton and Professor James Stuart are the fathers, was a bold and novel attempt to bring the ancient seats of learning into direct contact with the people; with how much success it would not be easy to say. But it has been considerable. In Nottingham itself the lectures caused the erection of a noble building in which learning might have a home. The system was, indeed, university extension, and it enabled scholars to reach tradesmen, young women, artisans, colliers, and others. Perhaps its greatest success was at one time among the colliers of Northumberland, who stood the first in the examinations. These eager, resolute, hardy pitmen would walk miles to and from the places where the lectures were given, and then earnestly continue their work at home.

All that, alas! is changed now. According to a witness from the north who gave evidence before the Lords' Commission on Gambling, the men are to-day so intent on gambling, and so absorbed in the newspapers which first led them astray, and now pander to their bad tastes, that they cannot keep a centre for the lectures. This is one of the most lamentable instances of the deadly effects of gambling on the very flower of our working-men; and it shows also the inadequacy of mere intellectual means to save men.

"The Recreative Evening Schools Association" is the child of Dr. Paton's fertile brain. It aims at carrying forward in the evening the education of scholars who have left school, and is, wherever adopted and supported, a great instrument for guarding growing lads and lasses from the temptations of the streets and low places of amusement. It cost its author an enormous amount of labour with pen and voice; he also enlisted the services of Sir Walter Besant, who wrote an article in the Contemporary entitled, "From Thirteen to Seventeen," which produced a great impression. The London School Board adopted the idea under the name of Evening Continuation Schools. To this safeguard for the young,

Dr. Paton has added yet another by establishing the "National Home Reading Union." In expounding its aims, he said:—

We have bestowed on our children the power to read. But the gift may be a fatal gift unless we guide their reading. Trashy books and even immoral books are plentiful and seductive. But we must so purify the taste of our young people that they will not choose the unwholesome fare of inferior books.

This Union was to bring to the founder and his family a heavy loss. Dr. Paton's son William, a young man of twenty-seven, genial, attractive, devoted to Christian social service, who was acting as guide to a Home Reading holiday party at Barmouth in 1894, was drowned by the upsetting of a boat; no doubt he perished in trying to save others.

It would take a chapter to enumerate the schemes which Dr. Paton has devised to meet the needs of some submerged class, or soften some passing calamity, or remove some grave national danger. Some of them are adaptations, some suggestions caused by consultation with other men; but they all are a testimony to the open mind and willing hand that has planted them on English soil. One of the most notable, and perhaps one of the most promising of them, is the "Christian Union for Social Service," with its "Colony of Mercy" at Lingfield, in Surrey. This resembles the Salvation Army Settlement at Hadleigh, in Essex, being for the benefit of working-men and others who are out of work. It has been said that "General" Booth got his ideas of social service in connection with his spiritual work from Dr. Paton; indeed, that Dr. Paton pointedly called his attention to the need there was for him to minister to the temporal, as well as the eternal welfare of the masses. The genesis of good work, however, is not so important as the doing of it.

Amid these manifold projects, Dr. Paton has not forgotten the worth of prayer, but has been active in promoting a union among men of all the churches; in this sacred work the late Rev. Wm. Crosbie, his friend and pastor, took a profound interest, and laboured without ceasing. In 1897, Dr. Paton resigned the Principalship of his college, and was made Principal Emeritus. But he still works on, to the full limit of his strength. May God spare him to labour yet many years!

Salvation Army on the Continent.

ENGLISH Christians will be interested to know that the Lord has abundantly blessed us since we came to Paris. The "General" has united the three Latin countries of France, Italy, and Belgium, and has given to my dear wife and myself the command of this new territory.

It is a vast and difficult field of labour; but we are thankful to God for having given us the privilege to work amongst these nations, to try to rescue them from their bondage, and win them for Christ. I am glad also to share in the toils, hardship, and self-denial of such a devoted band of officers.

Quite a revival has broken out at our Rue Auber Corps at Paris. Many souls have sought salvation, and among them are some remarkable cases of conversion. In Belgium our work is progressing, and lately one of the worst women of Brussels was brought to our Rescue Home; she was soundly converted, and is now giving a beautiful testimony. I have just returned to Paris from a tour in Italy. We had everywhere good congregations, and the people listened with the greatest attention to the message of salvation. I trust that before long a Salvation Army Corps will be established in Rome. But, alas, fields are white, and the workers are few!

A Native Indian Missionary.

REV. JOHN LAZARUS.

A NATIVE of Madras, Rev. John Lazarus, B.A., was born in August, 1849, of Indian Christian parents, his father having been an honoured Tamil evangelist of the London Missionary Society for many years. In his boyhood he was a pupil of the London Mission Institution, Madras, and in course of time matriculated in the University of that city, ultimately attaining the degree of B.A. In early youth his heart was filled with the love of Christ; and, with much earnestness, he went through a full course of theological training for the Lord's work.

Thereafter, for fifteen years, he was a teacher and assistant missionary, seeking, with others, to bring the young Hindu students, who formed the great majority of the pupils, to the faith of Christ. Having, however, felt for a long time that he was now prepared, by the training the mission had given him, and his experience in evangelistic work, for a wider sphere of Christian duty, he sought for ordination to the ministry. This was granted by a Danish mission, which has also given him wide latitude to use his great talents and energies in such directions as may be revealed from time to time.

REV. JOHN LAZARUS.

Fully able as Mr. Lazarus is to sympathize with the thoughts and aspirations of his countrymen, he has been singularly blessed of God in the conversion of many of various castes, from the Brahmin down to the Pariah. Several bright young fellows of high caste have been led to decision by his preaching and private instruction. Mr. Lazarus is one of the most diligent bazaar preachers in his city; but he agrees with his brethren that these public, and, in a measure, desultory efforts by the wayside, need to be followed up by definite, personal teaching in some quiet room. This is the true Indian form of the "after-meeting," and he has proved its great utility.

INFLUENCE THROUGH THE PRESS.

In addition to this solid, steady, pastoral and evangelistic work, Mr. Lazarus has gained a high position as an author and journalist, and as a leader of the Indian Christian community. His talent has been shown in finding fit men to carry on what he has commenced, which is conspicuously the case with the Christian Patriot, an English weekly journal. He is convener of a movement in Madras, called "The Tamil Christian Congress," which aims at the awakening and deepening of spiritual life in the Native Church. He started the Native Christian Association, and the organization known as the Indian Ministers' Conference. As a journalist he has edited uninterruptedly for sixteen years a Tamil newspaper, the cheapest in all India, costing less than half a farthing, and which has attained a monthly circulation of 10,000 copies. It is an earnest advocate of Christian principles, and fitly called the "Messenger of Truth."

As an author, he has published several useful works, of which the chief are: An English translation of the standard Tamil Grammar, called the Nannul, an up-to-date Tamil Grammar, a Dictionary of 10,000 Tamil Proverbs, a Biblical and Theological Dictionary in Tamil, and a Commentary on the Ephesians, the first of a series intended for Tamil ministers and evangelists.

Mr. Lazarus is a Fellow of the Madras University, for which body he has acted as an examiner for about twenty years. The Madras Religious Tract and Christian Literary Societies have constituted him their consulting Tamil editor. In the Elephant Gate Poor Schools, superintended by Mrs. Lazarus, and attended by ninety-six girls and seventy-two boys, close attention is given to Christian instruction. Miss Bounsall, formerly of the London Mission at Coimbatore, who examined the classes last year, expressed her satisfaction at seeing so many daughters of Hindu parents learning at least the words and facts of Scripture. The learning is intelligent, for even the infant class could answer more or less in their own language. Separate Sunday-schools are held for girls in the morning and for boys in the afternoon, where the whole attention can be directed to spiritual things, sacred songs being picked up most readily.

For the benefit of the teachers and other helpers a Bible class has been formed, and has proved itself beneficial. Books from the Old and New Testaments are studied alternately, under the guidance of Mr. S. A. Thomas, evangelist. In her regular visitation of the homes, while the men are away at work, Mrs. Lazarus finds fruit from earlier work among young mothers who as girls attended the school.

Mr. Lazarus is now on a visit to Europe, partly to improve his health and knowledge, but chiefly to promote the cause of missions in India, by addressing meetings. He desires to avail himself of this opportunity of securing the sympathy and support of Christian friends for his wife's work, and get help towards the erection of a Women's Lecture Hall, the like of which does not exist in Madras, where Hindu women may gather together privately and comfortably, and hear popular addresses by Christian speakers of their own sex, on domestic, sanitary, and religious subjects, which, for the want of a suitable building, Mrs. Lazarus is now carrying on under very great disadvantages. With this object in view, Mr. Lazarus will be glad to address meetings on Indian topics, and otherwise make himself useful to the British public. He has arranged to spend May, July, and August in England. Address, "Homeleigh," 15, Aubert Park, Highbury, N.

At Calvary.

Not alone in sin and shame
To the Cross I turn—
Saved, forgiven, oft I come
Still to look and learn.

All life's problems dark and strange
There I seem to read;
There is balm at Calvary
For our sorest need.

Sin and failure, shattered hopes,
Agony untold,
All earth's sad and bitter growth
Round the Cross unfold.

Yet from out its darkness broke
Light for endless years;
Through its silence comes the voice
That has hushed our fears.

In the hour when all seemed lost,
All was really won;
Triumph of eternal life
In that death begun.

Thus I learn how deepest joys
Are through anguish born,
And in peace at Calvary,
Wait Thy Easter morn.

The Sunday-School Union.

In view of the Centenary celebrations of the Sunday-School Union, which take place in July next, the annual meeting at the City Temple, on Thursday evening, was an occasion of more than usual interest. To mark the historic event, a scheme on broad international lines has been conceived for giving an impetus to Sunday-school work. The scheme embraces a canvass for a million new scholars, and a movement to ensure the better spiritual and educational equipment of teachers.

For the first time in the annals of the Union, its presidency has been occupied by a minister; and in the annual report the Council place on record their grateful appreciation of the eminent services rendered by Rev. F. B. Meyer during his year of office. The national mission to the young is undoubtedly one of the events for which 1902 will be memorable. The outcome has awakened the deepest gratitude and the liveliest hope. Many of the churches have been reinforced with young life, while not a few of those who are called to teach in Sunday-schools received impulses to a fuller devotion to their work.

The Teachers' College continues to render valuable service to teachers by promoting both private and associated study, Biblical and educational. The Boys' Life Brigade continues to make good progress, the total number of companies enrolled now being 104. A sister organization has been founded, and promises to be equally useful. The number of little visitors to the Country Holiday Homes has been maintained; and not a few of these boys and girls have heard the voice of God.

SERVICE TO THE CHURCHES.

The proceedings on Thursday evening were presided over by Mr. F. F. Belsey, who struck a note of convincing optimism by announcing that Sunday-schools, so far as the Union was concerned, are not "going back," for the schools associated with the Union have gained during the year 3,489 teachers, and 52,000 scholars, while sixteen local unions have been enrolled. Statistics and figures prove the startling antithesis, that no society has done more for the churches, and for no society have the churches done so little. Among some of the directions in which the Union has benefited the churches, he mentioned the Free Church Council movement. It has been acknowledged that the Union is drawing together the Free Church Councils of this country in happy, united effort for mutual support and help. Mr. Belsey urged that the Centenary should be made the occasion of a demonstration of greater practical sympathy than ever before, to enable the Council to take advantage of many open doors.

Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas (incumbent of St. Paul's, Portman Square) rehearsed what he designated the articles of his belief in the Sunday School Union. He honoured the society because of its determination to put first things first, keeping the spiritual aspect of the work always to the forefront. Having emphasized the close association which should always exist between the church and the school, the speaker addressed himself to his fellow-teachers, in words of brotherly counsel, urging three things—(1) We must be definite in our purpose. We have to win the children for Christ, and build them up in Christ. (2) We should be thorough in our preparation (following the example of Christ in dealing with the woman of Samaria), by attracting the child's heart, arresting the mind, arousing the conscience, and assuring the soul. (3) We must also be earnest in prayer if our labours are to be fruitful in winning the young for Christ.

In a stirring and timely address, Rev. Percy Martin affirmed that, whatever developments the future may witness, the function of the Sunday-school teacher will remain the same. He felt he must place the work of the teacher above that of the minister in power and usefulness, because of it being of a more personal and intimate character.

The importance to be attached to the training of the child-life of the nation was emphasized by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, D.D. With many similes and illustrations he drove home this truth, that if the children are ignored, all will be wrong with the commonwealth; but if they are taught to love and fear their Maker, cherish His Word, and reverence the sanctuary, the civilization of the future will be safe.

The Church Army Comes of Age.

TWENTY-ONE years may reasonably be adjudged a sufficient period by which to test the purpose and methods of any organization. When in 1882 the Church Army was founded, many did not refrain from expressing the opinion, either that the ideal could not be realized, or that the need for such a society did not exist. Happily these objections were not universally endorsed, and the Church Army commenced a career that was destined to evoke the approval of most if not all of those who at first regarded the movement with some apprehension. But even its most sanguine supporters did not anticipate that the first twenty-one years would witness such development as was represented at the coming-of-age celebrations on Wednesday of last week.

Two meetings took place at St. James' Hall, and were largely attended. The varied operations of the Army were well represented on the platform. To the left of the speakers were numbers of mission nurses and rescue workers; while on the right were prison missionaries, workhouse visitors, van evangelists, and labour home managers from different parts of the country. With so strong a band of warm-hearted workers, facing an equally enthusiastic audience, it was not surprising that the proceedings should be of an animated description.

In the afternoon the Bishop of Peterborough presided, and cordially commended the work of the Army in all its undertakings. On attaining his majority a young man naturally expects a recognised position, accepts responsibility, and looks for possessions; and his Lordship pleaded that this might be the case with the organization, whose coming-of-age they were celebrating. The great feature of the Church Army is that it brings the message of Christ to the individual life, assuring men and women that none are beyond the reach of His salvation.

In a few words Mr. Edward Clifford (hon. evangelistic secretary) explained that the Church Army has 320 captains and 233 mission nurses. One of the brightest features of the year has been the conducting of 115 missions in prisons and barracks, and 300 in workhouses.

SOCIAL WORK.

Mr. Colin Campbell, who is the hon. social secretary, stated that the turnover in his department had been 11,000 more than in the previous year; exclusive of women's work, 70,000 cases were dealt with. The Church Army has Homes in operation in all parts of the Metropolis and provinces (as well as in Scotland and Ireland), for helping the helpless, hopeless, and homeless, entirely irrespective of creed. It is certified and registered by the Home Office as a Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society for every prison, and it is significant that in three successive years the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons have, in their annual report to Parliament, publicly thanked the Society for its work in connection with prisons and prisoners.

Several other departments of the Army's activity were represented. Captain Shepherd (Rochdale) and Captain Lloyd (Huddersfield) described their labours among working-men, giving some telling incidents of despairing fellows being reclaimed. In one district three of the most notable characters were led to Christ, and before leaving for London the evangelist had the joy of kneeling with them at the Communion table. What is being done by the mission nurses was told by several of the slum sisters. Nurse Thurwood spoke of much encouragement in Yorkshire; and Nurse Bridge, "mother" of the Labour Home at Shepherd's Bush, described in hopeful terms many cases dealt with at that centre. Captains Cullam and Hanson related some of their experiences in the prison mission work which were full of encouragement.

Rev. H. Halford-Adcock (chaplain of Holloway Prison), in the course of an impressive address, bore testimony to the functions of the Church Army. He did not believe in "the good old days," for they were poor days for the outlaws of society. Words of hearty appreciation were also uttered by Rev. C. B. Simpson (chaplain of Pentonville Prison). Hundreds of people were willing to earn their living, but unable to secure work. The Church Army comes to their help, and enables the chaplains to hold out to the penitent convict the hope that honest labour will await his release. The suggestion was made by Rev. J. W. Blakemore (chaplain of Chelmsford Prison) that factories should be built for the exclusive employment of ex-convicts, where they would be able to pursue the trades learnt in prison until they became competent workmen.

Weighty words of commendation were spoken by Mr. Ian Malcolm, M.P. He pointed out that the report shows no human being to be too outcast, no slum too pestilent, for the officers of the Church Army to regard it as outside their sphere. The regeneration of the race which Parliament longs for, the society daily and nightly strives to achieve. Mr. Winston Churchill, M.P., followed, and claimed for the organization unqualified support, since its operations touch the dust-bins, rubbish heaps, and cesspools of modern life. The Army is daily proving that men who have been the encumbrance of society may be made self-respecting citizens and the ornament and strength of the civilization they had shamed and embarrassed. The Dean of Worcester also spoke; and at another gathering in the evening Major Knox presided, and the speakers included Canon Scott Holland, Mr. Percy Alden, and Mr. Coulson Kernahan. Rev. Wilson Carlile made an appeal for further support in order that the existing work can be maintained and much-needed extensions undertaken.

The Mission to Coalies.

IN the old iron room where the first Mildmay Conference was held, a special meeting was arranged for coal-porters just nineteen years ago. Of the 150 who came to tea, many appeared on the scene just as they had left off work, with face, hands, and clothes coal begrimed. Sixty-five of these hard workers signed the pledge, and some yielded their hearts to the Saviour, after listening to the earnest words spoken by Rev. D. B. Hankin and by Christian coal-porters and others.

God having thus manifested His approval of the effort, another meeting was arranged six months after. This was also followed by other gatherings, until it was decided to organize the Coalies' Mission, and regular meetings were convened. The gatherings attracted the attention of several leading coal merchants, who gave the London City Mission a portion of the salary of a missionary who had been led by God to offer himself for this work. In the year 1890 the little Mission was adopted by the London City Mission, and since that time the work has steadily grown until now six missionaries visit the coal depôts, preaching and singing the Gospel. Once a year, over 1,000 persons interested in the coal trade assemble at Mildmay. Many once hopeless, helpless drunkards are now humble and faithful followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. A merchant recently said, "I can trust a coalie connected with this Mission to load my coals without the supervision of a wharf clerk, and that is one reason why I support it." Nearly forty tracts have been published specially for the men. One entitled "Trolley Men, Guard your Sundays" has caused many a "coalie" to see the folly and sin of desecrating God's day. Two more missionaries are urgently needed.

The annual festival which took place on Tuesday week proved, as usual, an occasion of much encouragement both to the missionaries and the Christian "coalies," while the unconverted were assuredly touched by the earnest words of testimony and exhortation.

Moravian Missions.

THE annual meeting of the London Association in aid of Moravian Missions was held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon. While the year has been one of exceptional anxiety financially, the dominant note of the report presented by Rev. W. Wetton Cox was one of praise to God for answered prayer. Details which have come to hand from various mission fields indicate that, not only in East Central Africa, with its twelve stations, its native agency, and its call for expansion—the result of only ten years' labour; in N. Queensland, where savages are being made saints and evangelists, as the Gospel wins its way, and stations are multiplied amongst the cannibal blacks; in far-off lone Alaska, where a climate of 100 degrees below freezing point and all that this involves proves no bar to the devoted heroism of the missionaries or hindrance to the progress of the work—but everywhere, as well as in these youngest fields, demands for extension and multiplied agencies tell of expanding life and growth.

South Africa stands out as a field in which notable progress has been made. The Eastern Province is described as "full of praise. Not only has an abundant harvest put an end to the famine and want caused by preceding bad years, but, above all, the Lord has blessed the spiritual work of our brethren, and given abundant proofs of His power in the hearts of Christians and heathen. From amongst the heathen 304 adults and fifteen children were baptized in the course of the year, whilst at its close 896 persons were under instruction as candidates for baptism."

Concerning the Western Province, the missionaries acknowledge that "God has held His protecting hand over our stations, and has suffered neither war nor plague to hurt them. As regards spiritual work, our brethren have been able to preach the Word unhindered; and many souls have heard the Lord's voice speaking to them in these troublous times, and have drawn near to Him."

Sir George Williams, who presided over the meeting, expressed admiration for the Society and its workers, who have laboured for so many years in distant parts of the earth,

ALWAYS IN THE FRONT OF THE BATTLE.

They were brave when young, and are brave still, making sacrifice and showing self-denial for the Kingdom's sake.

Protesting against the argument that the supporting of foreign missionary societies means sending money out of the country, Rev. F. S. Webster maintained that those who reason on such lines have not properly grasped the true proportion of things. The Master's words were, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring." The partial paralysis so evident in the Christian Church is one of the greatest hindrances to the progress of foreign missions. "What," asked Mr. Webster, "would be thought of a man who joined a firm, and refused to accept the responsibilities to which the firm were committed? If we belong to Christ, we must take upon ourselves the responsibility belonging to His Church, which is, 'Them also I must bring.' Christ is committed to the evangelization of the world, and we are committed with Him." There was no branch of the Christian Church more honoured of God than the Moravian Brethren. They had been honoured of God chiefly as the pioneer missionary church. Reference was made to the spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion which has pervaded the work of the missionaries, for there is no needy country on God's earth to which they are not prepared to go for their Master.

A vigorous plea for the Moravian Church was made by Rev. W. R. Mowll, on the ground that—(1) It seeks to have none but spiritual men for spiritual work. Too often men were accepted for Christian service without being examined as to their personal knowledge of, and dealing with, Jesus Christ. (2) It is Scriptural in its method. God's Word is firmly adhered to by the Moravian Brethren. (3) It is steadfast in doctrine and practice. The missionaries emphasize the essentials of the Christian faith, and countenance the use of no images or other accessories to worship. (4) Its work is distinctly Protestant in character.

For twenty-seven years Rev. E. J. Peck (C.M.S.) has laboured among the Eskimos, and his appeal on behalf of the inhabitants of the icy wastes was a pathetic utterance. In July he returns to his solitary post with a somewhat downcast heart. Leaving his wife and family in England, fourteen months must elapse before any tidings of them can reach him. But this is not all; his society is unable through lack of funds to grant more help. He besought prayerful sympathy, and trusted that his Moravian Brethren would be able to do something towards evangelizing the 4,000 miles of coast line in the Arctic region still untouched.

The closing address was given by Rev. J. H. Ritson, who dealt with the activities of the British and Foreign Bible Society in conjunction with the Moravian and sister missionary organizations.

London Jews' Society.

A LARGE audience assembled at Exeter Hall on Friday morning for the 95th anniversary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. The year has been one of expansion, and the review presented by Rev. W. T. Gidney was remarkable as demonstrating the encouraging sympathy shown towards the society in its desire to go to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

The means adopted by the Society to bring the Jews within the fold of Christ comprise the preaching of the Gospel in parish churches, mission halls, and in some lands even in Jewish synagogues; evangelistic efforts and colportage, house-to-house visitation, and the circulation of the Old and New Testaments in Hebrew, Yiddish, and other languages. In addition, there are extensive educational, medical, and industrial agencies, which prove useful in opening the door for direct missionary effort, by allaying prejudice and showing practical sympathy, as well as following up the work of the preacher and evangelist, and helping them to garner the results of their labours. The work among the young has been distinctly encouraging, no fewer than 1,865 children having been educated last year in the Christian faith. The medical mission in Palestine has been wonderfully blessed and owned of God, and it has its smaller counterparts in London and other English centres.

THE CLAIMS OF ISRAEL.

The scattered condition of the Jews in the Metropolis and other large cities in England prevents the parochial system being followed in every instance, and the Society, in addition to its own missionary centres in London, Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Bristol and Hull, at each of which extensive operations are being carried on, has sixteen stations on the Continent of Europe, ten in Asia, nine in Africa, and one in America.

The chair was occupied by Sir John H. Kennaway, M.P., who reiterated many causes for thankfulness to God, and reminded his hearers of the debt which the Gentile owes to the Jew, through whom we have been brought to know Jesus Christ as the Messiah and Anointed Saviour. Unfortunately, the Christian religion is associated in the Jewish mind with oppression and cruelty, which is accentuated by the terrible list of massacres in Roumania. Moreover, the Jew thinks the Christian is anxious to destroy his faith, and regards him with suspicion; but those who are seeking to evangelize Israel endeavour to fulfil and not to destroy, and to show that the New Testament is the complement of the Old. The Chairman, having referred to the devoted labours of Dr. d'Erf Wheeler in Palestine, spoke of the influx of aliens to this country. He regarded it as a serious question, and while it is not perhaps for us to say what shall be done with them, yet, finding them among us, it is incumbent upon us to help them to a knowledge of Jesus Christ.

The next speaker was the Bishop of London. His Lordship remarked that he had often been told he was mistaken in supporting the Society, as it did more harm than good, and produced friction among people who would otherwise be friendly. For an answer he turned to his Master's command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. Are we obeying that command if we neglect the hundred thousand sons of Abraham in our land, to say nothing of those in other parts of the world? We cannot begin at Jerusalem if we leave out of our missionary operations the race at our own doors. "It is not because I despise the Jews," continued the Bishop, "that I wish to see them Christians, but because I respect them. Often have I borne witness to their

NOBLE TRAITS OF CHARACTER.

They are more sober than those among whom they live; are thrifty, and have an extraordinary love for their children." As an instance of this, Dr. Ingram recalled a pathetic incident that occurred in the east of London. A Jewish boy in his parish was gradually declining in a consumption. He interested some friends in the case, and enabled the lad to go to Australia, in the hope of regaining health. On returning to this country he was but little improved, and eventually succumbed to the disease. Before six weeks had gone, the boy's father died of a broken heart. When we remember all the noble qualities which characterize the Jews, we long to give them what we believe to be the complement of their own religion. If we cease preaching to the Jews because of the glory of their religion, we show how little we think of the Incarnation and Resurrection of Jesus Christ. Every nation brought into the Church adds a glory; but no race will bring a fresher light and grander glory to the Christian Church than the scattered race.

Rev. S. T. Bachert, superintendent of the North of England mission, assured the friends of the Society that its operations are being carried on in the same spirit as prompted the pioneers of the movement. Its aim is the salvation of Israel and the glorification of Christ. The Society has done much, not only to allay persecution of the Jew, but also to remove the prejudice of the Jew toward Christianity. The speaker went on to describe what is being attempted in Liverpool, where, on medical days last year, some 6,770 Jews attended the mission hall. Of these over 3,000 were patients to be treated by the doctor, and no fewer than 500 Gospel addresses were given. Often the question is asked,

WHERE ARE YOUR CONVERTS?

He replied by asking, Where are they not? They are to be found among our clergy and Nonconformist ministers, at the Bar, on the Exchange, and in the medical profession.

An earnest and purposeful address was given by the Bishop of Honduras, who sought to kindle the enthusiasm of the meeting to a practical result. He declared that there must be no retrenchment in the Society's operations. We are living in times of great spiritual awakenings. It is seen in the revival of interest at home in evangelizing the Jews, as well as in the transformation that has taken place in Jerusalem in recent years. As an instance of the present feeling of the Jewish mind toward the Christian religion, the Bishop recalled a conversation he had with an influential Jew, when leaving New Orleans a few weeks ago. He asked: "Tell me honestly what intelligent Jews think to-day of Jesus Christ of Nazareth?" The answer was: "We are beginning to think that if Jesus of Nazareth was not the Messiah, no Messiah will come."

From the Society's sphere in Palestine Dr. P. C. E. d'Erf Wheeler brought tidings of progress and development. In that land of hallowed associations and sacred memories, no opportunity of proclaiming the Gospel of Christ is lost. Jerusalem, with its 40,000 Jews, is the centre of comprehensive and far-reaching endeavours, and the spiritual, educational, and medical agencies in the citadel of Judaism are being increasingly owned of God, to the enlightenment and salvation of His people Israel.

World-wide Bible Study.

THE INTERNATIONAL BIBLE-READING ASSOCIATION.

"NOTWITHSTANDING the persistent attacks upon the Bible which come from many quarters, it is a consolation to know that the Book of books is being read to-day in a systematic manner by an increasing number; and that, as a result, many of these are finding that there is more in its pages than they had supposed, and that in its inspired records there is still the message of Eternal Life."

This is the testimony of the I.B.R.A., which, with the close of 1902, completed its twenty-first year of activity, increasing its membership by 40,000, and thus attaining a total of 780,000.

"THESE TWENTY YEARS."

As Mr. CHARLES WATERS, the esteemed founder and secretary, points out in "These Twenty Years" (an instructive account of the rise and progress of the Association), it was at a meeting of a sub-committee of the Sunday-School Union, held on November 25, 1881, that it was resolved to form a union for the promotion of daily Bible-reading, and this, indeed, was the commencement of the organization which has come to exercise so wide an influence in leading many to systematic study of "the oracles of God."

The membership card prepared for 1882 was of sober appearance, having for its only ornament, a wood-cut of an open Bible, and the motto for the year, "Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe." That prayer was fitting for the commencement of a new work, and has had abundant fulfilment.

Anticipations were not too sanguine at first; the initial order for cards was 5,000 only, but the stock was exhausted within two months. Thus encouraged, it was resolved by the committee to extend the operations. Branches were formed, the first "Circular Letter" was issued, and by the end of the year 11,000 cards had been circulated. Still, the rate of progress was enhanced year by year. In 1886, the issue of the monthly "Hints" was adopted, and the enrolment rose to 110,000. In 1890, there commenced a succession of yearly increases of 50,000. To-day the Association girdles the globe, embracing Bible-readers who are resident in more than sixty different countries, and whose thoughts, according to its plan, are directed day by day to the same portion of Scripture.

THE BIBLE A DAILY COMPANION.

One object sought to be achieved by the I.B.R.A. is the more constant use of God's Word as a daily companion and guide. Doubtless many have at times felt the necessity of close study, and have resolved to give more frequent attention to the Bible; but for lack of some systematic plan have not reaped the benefit they desired, and have lapsed into the former habit of infrequent study. To such the I.B.R.A. has been most valuable.

The plan of study is topical rather than consecutive. The Bible verses forming the International Lesson for the following Lord's Day become the subject for study and meditation during the week. The lesson itself is read usually on Monday, and is thus before the mind, while on the other days selections are read from different parts of the Scriptures, which illustrate, explain, or enforce the teaching of the main subject. The plan thus prompts to reflection, and, by bringing Scripture to bear upon Scripture, often brings fresh light upon the passages studied.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The hold which the Association has secured upon its members was manifested by the splendid audience which, despite a fierce tempest, rallied on Tuesday evening last week, in the City Temple.

Lord RADSTOCK presided. After Rev. CAREY BONNER had read a portion of Scripture, Mr. WATERS said that during the past year "a new member was added every thirteen minutes of the day and night, and that if they could be gathered in one place it would require sixteen City Temples to hold them." Not only, however, have numbers been added to the roll, but, by God's grace, many have been brought into His kingdom. A typical instance of blessing was adduced in a letter lately received from a servant girl, who wrote: "I only became a member at the beginning of this year, and I am thankful for it. Everyone says what a different girl I am. It is through reading the Bible that I have been led to God."

Proceeding, Mr. Waters said that, viewing the work as a whole, our thoughts widen and go out from the devoted district secretaries to the members, uniting forty denominations, and in many languages studying the precious Word of God. In a final word of appeal, he urged his hearers to "Hold to the Book, and pray: 'Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law.'"

Lord RADSTOCK, who followed, described himself as "a Bible-reader for fifty years." The one thing precious above all other things is the Word of God. "I cannot begin the battle of life day by day unless I have fed my soul on this Book. It is not merely that it is a book of transcendent interest, but that it is the expression of God's thoughts. Studying it, we learn of infinite grace, wisdom, love, and power. The Bible is more precious than all possessions." The speaker quoted Psalm i., and spoke of the blessedness of the man "whose delight is in the law of the Lord." Herein is the secret of true success, "Whatsoever he doeth shall prosper"—for he is in touch with the Infinite. His Lordship urged the study of the Psalms in sequence. There are chequered experiences recorded, but the dominant note is praise, culminating in the great final pæan of victory, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

Among other speakers was Mr. A. B. FIELD, vice-president of the Victoria Sunday-School Union, who brought a message of greeting from Australian members, and spoke words of earnest exhortation. Madame ANNIE RYALL sang with much acceptance, and the veteran, Mr. ALBERT MIDLANE, recited some appropriate verses, entitled, "The Light of Every Land," written by himself for the occasion, one stanza of which ran;—

Shall not we the Book extol,
And value more than gold,
Where mysteries deep, and love divine,
In matchless words are told?

Keswick Convention.—Persons desirous of attending the next Keswick Convention will be glad to hear that "The Key to Keswick," prepared annually by Mr. J. T. Budd (23, Pembroke Crescent, Hove, Brighton), is now ready. A large amount of information is compressed into a small compass in the "Key," which shows the list of railway companies affording facilities to be greatly increased. Copies may be had for threepence in stamps, sent to the compiler, at the above address.

Salvation Army Social Work.

ONE of the most picturesque meetings of the season was held on Tuesday of last week, under the auspices of the Women's Social Department of the Salvation Army. Advantage was taken of the opportunity to commission publicly about forty young women who have just completed their course of instruction in the International Training Institute; and to dedicate six officers who go to Switzerland for evangelistic work, also two for rescue work in the West Indies. A display was made of needlework made in the Industrial Homes. Detachments of nurses, and other classes of officers in costume, impressed the audience regarding those parts of the work which are mainly done out of sight. Others were distinguished by various badges; while some of the little ones from the Children's Home won all hearts.

The proceedings opened with a song of praise, in which Commissioner HOWARD led; followed by the chorus, "All I have I am bringing to Thee," sung by the officers on their knees; and prayer led by Commissioner HIGGINS (from India). Mrs. Colonel DEAN sang another of the Army's songs.

Recalling the foundation of the first of the rescue homes in the East End nineteen years ago, Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH said, in the course of a pleasant, bright speech, that the work is progressing satisfactorily in the forty-seven homes for women scattered up and down the country. Taken as a whole, there is great reason to rejoice. The homes are all full, and they are being increasingly appreciated by the responsible people in the towns to which they belong.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR EXTENSION.

New efforts in contemplation include the opening next month of a rescue home in Birmingham. The present home in Manchester having been full ever since it was first opened, it has been found necessary to add another house as a receiving home. A home of rest for officers whose health is run down, and to be conducted on vegetarian principles, is to be opened at Loughton on May 23. More extensions are called for in different directions, including a rescue home in Belfast, a promise to provide which has been given, though the way has not yet been opened up.

A group of West African women appeared on the platform; a few days before they had been rescued from very trying circumstances. They had been for some years in a company that were exhibited at various theatres on the Continent. On arrival in this country, they determined to seek the help of the Army. Their rights had now been vindicated, and arrangements were being made for sending them home to Sierra Leone.

The cadets had their commissions handed to them by Commissioner COX, each learning then for the first time the destination to which she had been allocated. The only difficulty, Mrs. Bramwell Booth explained, had been that the vacancies to be filled up far outnumbered the persons available. Their spiritual training had included a thorough grounding in the Scriptures, that the Bible might be to them a refuge in the hour of need or trouble. On the practical side, everything had been done to fit them to show to the poor and helpless what a Christian home ought to be. There was no thought of insisting on the Salvation Army work alone, but a deep pathos came into Mrs. Booth's voice as she pleaded for all to take a practical interest in outcast, suffering, and wronged women, wherever they may be found. Sanctified human love and sympathy have often proved themselves to be the real forces that will touch hearts impervious to all else. Any in doubt as to whether they were in the line of duty, were urged to consider very prayerfully how they stood with regard to this work. The announcement that Mrs. Bramwell Booth's eldest daughter, Katherine, is, at her own desire, about to enter the International Training Home, with a view to active service, was received as an excellent augury for the future of the Army.

Light at Eventide.

THE Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society has a notable record. For no fewer than ninety-six years this Christian organization has sought to avert misery and bring light in the life's eventide of many a weary child of God. Through its beneficent operations no fewer than 7,480 "pilgrims" have received life pensions, amounting in the aggregate to £330,500.

Within the bounds of Scriptural truth, the Society is undenominational, members of many sections of the Christian church being upon the pension lists. As to spiritual qualifications, "A true pilgrim is and must be a new creature. There is no pilgrimage to the heavenly country unless a man is born again and taught of God."

The life pensions are regular and permanent aids to those who have borne the burden and heat of the day. The nomination of qualified subscribers is alone needed in proposing a candidate; each case is considered on its merits. Upon approval the five-guinea pension commences, and as soon as the funds permit, the pensioners are advanced to the seven-guinea pension, in rotation. Once a year, ten of the oldest pensioners are raised to the ten-guinea pension.

A second department of work is the maintenance of four homes, in which 178 recipients have peaceful and comfortable dwellings until called to enter "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." There are in all 1,616 pensioners, living in all parts of the kingdom, and the total annual sum expended in pensions is £12,152.

EXPRESSIONS OF GRATITUDE.

Among the new pensioners of the year have been those who, with dwindling strength, have struggled hard to maintain themselves, only to find one door after another closed against them. One (who has been well known for years as an assiduous tract-distributor) writes:—"I feel quite unable to express my feelings to your Society for the way in which it has done so much for me and my poor helpless wife; through it I have the blessed comfort of knowing that I have something in store. The last remittance came in my utmost need; if I could have seen heaven opened, and such a gift drop on me, it would not have been otherwise than it was, for I had not one penny in my house."

W. B., a faithful preacher in Lancashire, aged seventy, has recently been placed upon the books, after many years of ministry, combined with daily business. His life has been a useful and eventful one, and its later years are being made easier by the Society's help. In narrating the story of his conversion, he says, "Like the sun from a dark cloud, peace broke into my troubled soul, and all was joy."

J. H., in Northamptonshire, writes: "I am now half-way through my eightieth year; I have been brought down by affliction to the gates of death for the past two years, and am deeply sensible that my physical and mental powers are getting weaker; my strength faileth me; but the Lord has mercifully upheld me."

R. A. F., a widow, aged seventy-two, lives in Suffolk, sharing her dwelling with an invalid daughter, who for twenty-one years has been confined to her bed from spinal affection. The pension has enabled this little home to be kept together. The daughter writes: "My dear mother wishes me to express her warm gratitude for the regular assistance received from the Society, which is such a comfort and help in her declining days."

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

At the annual meeting, held last week at the Mansion House, Sir Robert Anderson occupied the chair. Mr. JOHN E. HAZELTON, secretary, briefly reviewed the operations of the year; after which the Chairman made a telling appeal for the deserving Christian poor, who but for timely help are doomed by the poor law to the workhouse, and association with the undeserving. There are old saints of God needing to be supplied with daily bread. Promiscuous charity is an evil; it means in the vast majority of cases merely a gift to a professional beggar. With this Society, however, there is a wise discrimination which assures the relief of the really deserving.

The next speaker, the BISHOP OF SODOR AND MAN, said that the Society realizes the words of the Apostle Paul, "Let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."

In supporting this Society we help the very "cream of the poor," whose lives witness that they have received the grace of God. In view, too, of its Evangelical character, it enlists our sympathy, for, as the Lord Chancellor said a short time ago in the House of Lords: "The people of England are indissolubly wedded to the principles of the Reformation."

Among other speakers was General Sir WILLIAM STIRLING, who reminded his hearers that the Christian pilgrim, straitened in means, is, at the same time, by reason of his faith, at continual war with the world, and has the strongest claims upon the help of fellow-believers.

Christian Literature at Work.

HAVING the one object in view of proclaiming the Gospel of the grace of God, at home and abroad, by means of the Press, the Religious Tract Society had a splendid tale of progress to tell at its annual meeting, held at Exeter Hall, last Friday evening. The report submitted by Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND showed that during the twelve months 724 new publications had been sent forth, 168 of which were tracts; and that the Society has published Christian literature, or helped others to do so, in 250 languages or dialects. The books, tracts, &c., sent out from the central depôt totalled 29,481,210, of which 14,034,350 were tracts. With an issue of 49,481,210 from foreign depôts, the figures since the formation of the Society are brought up to the enormous total of 3,540,196,440. The missionary income for the general purposes had been £19,501, with £1,474 for the centenary fund.

Missionary agencies in city, town, village, and country district had been supplied with literature, which added much to the effectiveness of their work. Individuals have been more than ever encouraged to undertake house-to-house distribution; and applications on behalf of such special classes as soldiers, sailors, fishermen, hop-pickers, and navvies have been warmly welcomed.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL WORK ABROAD.

Auxiliary tract and book societies in the foreign mission field have been aided by grants of money, printing paper, and publications, the committees in charge being representative of as many sections as possible of the Evangelical Church. Among prominent examples quoted were the Central China Tract Society at Hankow, the Japan Book and Tract Society, and the Calcutta Book and Tract Society. Where there were no such organizations the Society had continued to help individual missionaries along the same lines. Two of the most interesting events of the year had been an effort put forth at the Osaka Exhibition in Japan, and a distribution among Chinese students at the great triennial examination held at Changsha, the capital of the province of Hunan. Other countries stretching from Hudson's Bay Territory to New Guinea and Uganda had equally benefited. As an instance of what goes on it was mentiond that the list of languages and dialects in which the "Pilgrim's Progress" has been printed has risen to one hundred.

Prizes to the value of £1,308 had been presented to Board-school children who had passed thorough and searching examinations in Scripture knowledge; Christian workers in the British colonies—east, west, and south—had been helped to spread the Gospel by means of the printed page. Such momentous topics as Lord's Day Observance, the spread of Christian science, and theatre-going, received special attention.

In a survey of the needy state of the world, in a spiritual sense, when the Society was founded, Sir JOHN MCDOUGALL pointed out the discouragements which had to be faced. Sympathy and prayer were still more needed than anything else, on account of the vast multitude who never go to church, and who must be sought out with diligence if the Gospel is to be made known to them. Work of the most effective kind can be done by any who will go in a kindly, interested spirit among their fellows, and so win them to read the message of salvation.

Directing attention to the struggle that is being made by impure and unbelieving literature to gain the ear and credence of this nation, the BISHOP OF DERRY AND RAPHOE declared that such efforts as this were of the very highest importance. What is a tract? Not necessarily a good thing; but neither, as some think, something unsolid and woolly, with a little soft soap and sugar in it. If one does not suit every class, it may still meet the needs of some; and he had himself heard a dignitary of the Church say that he owed to the tracts of Bishop Ryle his leading into the light. A professor of theology had been sent to train young clergymen in Portugal, and the two books he found most suitable for his purpose were both publications of this Society. Spain and Portugal are countries at a stage when tracts may be found most useful, and it is well to put such publications into the hands of their people without delay.

GETTING THEIR MONEY'S WORTH.

The thanks of missionaries in all parts of China for help received were presented by Rev. ARTHUR BONSEY (Hankow), who quoted the words of an educated heathen Chinaman: "I know a good deal about what you are doing; and all I have to say is that you get your money's worth." The Chinese are a reading people. Tracts have been known to be rescued even from a waste-paper basket to become effective preachers. He quoted a very telling instance of a man who first learned the truth in this way, and has now given up an excellent business to become a colporteur. Tracts are particularly useful in breaking up new ground.

Strong arguments for the Society were found by Rev. JOSEPH HOCKING in its excellent testimony for Christian union, and in its elevation of the thinking power of the nation.

Speaking with a wide knowledge of what has been accomplished for God by means of literature, Mr. EUGENE STOCK described the Society as a great blessing to him in boyhood and in later life through the books that had reached him. His ultimate connection with the Committee had been to him a precious experience. He thanked the Society for the helping hand held out to the Church Missionary Society.

Gray's Yard Ragged Church, W.

THE annual meeting of this old-established mission, founded in 1835, was held on Friday last, Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM in the chair. A brief report of the work carried on among the very poorest of the London poor was made by the honorary secretary, Mr. A. G. FRASER. In the schools, Ragged Church, or other meetings, about a thousand persons are dealt with Sunday by Sunday and hear the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

A feeling of real sympathy and confidence exists between the workers and their poor friends. Letters were read giving an insight into the sad lives of the writers and expressing gratitude for kindness shown. One was from a "sandwich man" (earning a shilling a day), and enclosed no less than thirty-five shillings for the mission. Another was from a man who had "been wrong all the time for 20 long years; six of that time I have been in the gutter," but now he knows God is able to lift him out of it. Another, from a criminal, says, "I am going to try with God's help to go along straight for the future."

Rev. Dr. PIERSON gave a most helpful and searching address to Christian workers on the lessons to be learnt from the seven characters mentioned in Acts vii.—Abraham, Joseph, Moses, David, Solomon, Stephen, and Saul. Many present were both humbled and encouraged by his faithful words.

West London Mission.

THE annual festival of the West London Mission was held this year under the shadow of a great loss. Nevertheless, while God buries his workmen he carries on His work; Mr. Price Hughes has passed to his rest, but the varied undertakings in connection with the work which he founded, and for years directed with skill and devotion, have enjoyed gracious seasons of blessing.

An outstanding feature of the Mission is, of course, the Sisterhood, which still enjoys the advantage of Mrs. Price Hughes' superintendence. Many are the cares which fall upon these ladies; many privileges of ministry are theirs, and some of these were told forth with touching simplicity and earnestness at the Sisterhood meeting held at St. James' Hall on Friday afternoon last.

Lady Henry Somerset, who presided, said that the work has told as all power from God must tell, and all true hearts in all the churches thank God for it. It has been a chivalrous force for the weak; and, above all, the labours of the sisters have demonstrated what women with consecrated hearts and lives can do in all phases of religious and social life. The world is full of sorrow and sighing, but the sense of suffering only links the worker to God in stronger bonds of love, and leads her to the realization that no soul is hopeless.

THE YOUNG LIFE OF THE SLUMS.

Sister Hope, who followed, spoke of the work among young people; spirited but tired girls of the work-room, with no home but a slum garret; lads ready to become the prey of vicious tempers; little children pent up in tiny rooms—all welcomed and provided with means of recreation and spiritual instruction. The usual playground of the slum children is the gutter, and their games, too often, are a reproduction of the degrading scenes of their "homes." For these there is merry and purifying recreation, while the cripples and maimed are gathered in connection with the Guild of Brave Poor Things. Sick children are tended in their own homes, but so terrible are the surroundings that it seems difficult to sorrow when the weak ones are gathered to the city "whose streets are full of boys and girls." The crèche is another useful department; "it is like a garden which needs much pruning, but which grows in strength and beauty." Sister Hope illustrated present needs by several moving stories of poor mothers struggling with grinding poverty, and endeavouring to find bread for their hungry children. The testimony of one of these women, who passed away in a London hospital, was that the happiest hours she spent on earth were those in the Mission Bible-Class.

"THE ARMY OF THE SORROWFUL."

The next speaker, Sister Lily, gave an account of work accomplished in connection with the Lord's Day meetings at St. James' Hall. Here gather many of the great army of London's woman sufferers, and many are the problems dealt with. Then there is "Piccadilly," and all that it means. One woman owns forty-six houses, in which she carries on her infamous trade. While there was a lull during the African war, an increase of this shocking traffic is now anticipated. Sister Lily told of cases of rescue, and urged that greater encouragement should be given to those who honestly try to live a better life. One striking case was that of a dancing girl who, while drinking in a restaurant, heard the music in the St. James' Hall meeting, entered the building and sought the Saviour. When Mr. Price Hughes died, this girl wrote, in a letter of sympathy, "We shall all miss him, but no sorrow is the same when you have Christ."

IN SOMERS TOWN.

Sister Annie, who labours at the Somers Town branch, said that their building, the People's Hall, is well named, for the people love it. The mothers' meeting is remarkably effective. A good number of men, too, attend Bible classes and Gospel services; and they find a joy, at the end of a long day's toil, in undertaking heavy physical work for the Mission. The lads who gather have greatly developed since the work commenced, and receive with earnestness the story of Christ's love. The Band of Mercy has had good effects; the little ones, instead of pelting a lame cat, as in other days, will bring it to the sisters "to be sent to a home." The aged have been cared for and the young shielded from moral danger.

PITY THE DRUNKARD'S CHILD.

Gipsy Smith pleaded the cause of the children of the slums: "What do they know of the good and beautiful? Some are drunk before they can walk. Pity them! Is it a wonder they fill the gaols? With all gracious influences in your home, with refinement and moral backbone, it takes some of you all your time to keep straight. What then of these children of the gutter?"

In the evening, Lord Kinnaird presided, and among the speakers were Revs. C. Ensor Walters, E. Grose Hodge, and Dr. Shaw Banks.

Friendless Girls in Paris.

A WELL-ATTENDED meeting was held at Grosvenor House on Saturday afternoon, in the interests of the British and American Mission Homes in Paris.

Scarcely any situation can be more distressing than that of the young woman who finds herself friendless in a strange land; and it was meeting with such a case of isolation that led Mrs. Travers Lewis (née Miss Ada Leigh) to inaugurate the beneficent movement with which her name has been inseparably associated for thirty years. The work now comprises three separate Homes, which are open to all respectable young women. The "Mother" Home at 77, Avenue Wagram, has received over 12,400 girls, of whom 8,000 have found situations through its free registry; 622 were resident last year.

The Y.W.C.A. Home, for apprentices, &c., provides a free reading-room, day meals, free Sunday dinners; while the institute for governesses and students had 331 residents during 1902. Among the young, a sorely-felt need is met by the Orphanage and Children's Home, where 434 have been clothed, maintained, educated, and instructed in a knowledge of their Saviour. Another agency is the Mission Hall, where the Sunday-school, evangelistic services, temperance meetings, and similar gatherings take place. In its various branches the work touches each week some 800 of our English and American country-people, chiefly young women and children. Nearly all the lady helpers are volunteers, and many of them have been connected with the movement from fifteen to twenty-eight years.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who occupied the chair, had hearty words to say about the useful purpose served by the Paris Homes. Were it not for these institutions hundreds of English-speaking girls would have remained friendless in the French capital. He rejoiced that while religion is not forced upon the inmates, their spiritual interests form the primary object of all endeavours.

In giving an account of her labours in Paris, Mrs. Lewis told how, in 1872, when on a visit to the gay city, she was arrested by the intensity of a Scotch girl's love in return for a little kindness, and was thus brought to realize the need of something being done for friendless girls. The work was commenced with a gift of 10d.; at the present time the Mission has property to the value of £40,000.

Some telling cases were cited Three young women journeyed to France to take a situation, which it was found did not exist. Each had paid an agent £2, and on arriving in Paris the sum of money possessed by all three amounted only to 8s. 6d. Another pathetic case was that of a girl, unable to speak a word of French, turned adrift late at night by her mistress because she refused to play dance music on the Sabbath.

As an illustration of the number of nationalities to whom the Homes are known, Mrs. Lewis mentioned that the 900 inmates represent France, Great Britain, the United States, Switzerland, Germany, Russia, Egypt, Roumania, Poland, Sumatra, &c.

Some fitting words concerning the spiritual side of the movement were spoken by Canon McCormick. He was thankful that emphasis is laid on family prayer in the Homes. It will be a serious matter for the English people when they allow the services in the sanctuary to take the place of family devotions. Then the Homes are a means of fostering a spirit of unity among English and American in Paris; while the buildings themselves serve to remind the French people of spiritual things. Further testimony of the widespread influence of Miss Leigh's Homes was given by Rev. Dr. Adams, who was for seven years chaplain of the church erected in connection with the institutions.

Thirty Years' Work for Bluejackets.

THE sailors' "mother," as Miss Agnes Weston is affectionately styled by men of the British navy in all parts of the world, well maintains her varied undertakings for the spiritual and social well-being of "Jack," both on board ship and ashore. At the annual meeting, held a few days ago at Exeter Hall, Miss Weston once more charmed a crowded audience with a bright record of another twelve months' toil.

It is now thirty years since Miss Weston commenced her fruitful mission, but she cheerily testified "The longer I work, the happier I am, and the younger I feel!" The navy is being enormously increased; great numbers of boys are being trained as seamen, and among these, as well as among their elders, the organization is being extended. Miss Weston gave a vivid description of a meeting for the boys at Devonport, and of the delight of both officers and boys of a squadron in Portland roads, at visits from workers, who gave lantern lectures. Letters received from many of the lads show that not a few are endeavouring to lead Christian lives, despite the opposition of the ungodly. A typical note, read by Miss Weston, was a delightfully simple illustration of a young fellow's earnest labours to encourage those around him to walk in the way of life.

The operations of the Royal Naval Temperance Society are carried on in all parts of the world, for it has a committee on every ship in the service; while in close association with the temperance work is that of the Royal Naval Christian Union, which now numbers over 1,000 members.

Miss Wintz, devoted as ever, still edits the popular monthly, Ashore and Afloat, and Miss Weston herself writes the "Monthly Letters." The combined circulation of these periodicals during the year passed 1,300,000.

Describing the new block of buildings at Devonport, Miss Weston mentioned that the premises will include a large Gospel hall in which both sailors and their wives will gather for services. For this "Rest" two of the cabins have been provided respectively by King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

Miss Weston's report also describes her useful "Handy Man Fund," for the wives and children of men killed in accidents. "H.M.S. Condor sailed from a distant port, and from that day to this, with the exception of one or two relics, nothing has been seen or heard of her or her brave crew. I have been able to relieve all the cases needing it, and also to sympathize with the sorrow-stricken widows and mothers; and the letters of love and gratitude that I have received from them would fill a volume. Ships' companies have made collections and have entrusted me with the money; I need not say that I value these tokens of confidence from the men more than I can express, and rejoice to act as their almoner."

Miss Wintz, so long associated with Miss Weston, followed with her usual sheaf of interesting statistics. Last month the receipts over the counter at the Rests at Portsmouth, Devonport, and Keyham, amounted to £2,541, and the profit was about £450. The total receipts for the year passed £25,000. The refreshments sold included over half-a-million cups of tea, and the eatables totalled nineteen tons of ham, forty-five of bread, thirteen and-a-half of fish, and half-a-million eggs, while no fewer than 290,000 lodgings were let to sailors. Hearty words followed from Captain King Hall, lately with the Mediterranean squadron, and from other officers.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FIRST WEEK OF MEETINGS IN BELFAST.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONERS.)

THE interest in the mission deepens as the days go by. The daily Noon Meeting for Prayer increases in numbers, and indicates a growing desire for a great awakening. Many requests for prayer are received from day to day, for the conversion of relatives and friends, for local branches of mission work, for the masses of careless men in the city, and kindred objects.

On Monday evening, notwithstanding the rain, which had continued all day, the Ulster Hall was fairly filled, at least 1,800 persons being present. The musical part of the service was conducted by Mr. ALEXANDER, assisted by the Fellowship Choir. Miss Froste (of Dublin) sang as a solo, "Jesus has loved me, Wonderful Saviour," and Rev. James Cregan led in prayer.

The text of Dr. TORREY'S sermon was James iv. 2, "Ye have not, because ye ask not." The preacher's words seemed to flash, like a search-light, on the hearts and habits of his hearers; as he showed how lack of prayer had been the secret of failure in so many undertakings of individuals and churches. Multiplication of machinery and diminution of spiritual power marked the modern as compared with the early days of Christianity. Going on to show what prayer can do, Dr. Torrey closed with an appeal for definite supplication and effort for the salvation of individuals, whose names might be written down and daily remembered before God. He asked those of his audience who would covenant to do this to stand up, and a goodly number rose in response.

Dr. Torrey commenced on Tuesday a series of Bible-readings on the Personality and Work of the Holy Spirit. There must have been fully a thousand at this meeting, which was held at 3.30 p.m. Though the ladies predominated, there were many men present, including not a few ministers and city merchants. Mr. Alexander engaged the audience in singing several hymns, after which he asked that any who had Scripture texts laid on their hearts should rise and repeat them. A number having done so, he gave as his own text Zech. iv. 6, "Not by might nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." Rev. Dr. Robertson led in prayer, and Miss Froste sang as a solo, "'Tis sweet to trust in Jesus." Dr. Torrey then set forth with great clearness the testimony of Scripture to the personality of the Holy Spirit. The subject proved one of deep and practical interest, and several ministers and experienced Christian workers afterwards expressed their hearty appreciation.

THE WISE MAN'S TRUE WORK.

At the evening meeting, the hall was crowded in every part, with two thousand hearers, and before the appointed hour many had to be turned away. Mr. Alexander, as usual, made good use of the time at his disposal for the preliminary service of song, his occasional remarks fixing attention on the words, and helping the great company to sing with the understanding and heart. Rev. J. W. Ballard having led in prayer, Dr. Harry Guinness read the parable of the lost sheep. Dr. Torrey's address was founded on Prov. xi. 30: "He that winneth souls is wise." As he contrasted the estimate of wisdom expressed in the text with those entertained by the mere money-maker, the politician, the student, the military man, and the votary of pleasure, the impression became deep and solemn. The preacher insisted that soul-winning should be the chief business of every true Christian's life, and concluded with an earnest appeal for whole-hearted effort in the glorious work. Mr. Alexander sang, "When my final farewell to the world I have said," and in response to Dr. Torrey's invitation, many stood up to express their earnest purpose to seek for souls, while others indicated their desire to accept Christ as their Saviour.

A FAMILY RECONCILIATION.

The Bible-reading on Wednesday was held in the Y.M.C.A. large hall, about 1,200 being present. Previous to Dr. Torrey's address, Mr. Alexander called for testimonies to blessing already received during the mission, to which several responded. He himself read a letter from a minister in Aberdeen, telling of the continued progress of God's work there, and that many were praying for a blessing on Belfast. Rev. Henry Montgomery told of a mother and daughter, who had for some time past been estranged from each other, meeting on their way out of the hall, and kissing in token of happy reconciliation; and of a lady going away with tears of joy for the blessing she had received. Miss Froste sang "Saved by Grace," and Dr. Torrey's subject was the work of the Holy Spirit in convincing of sin, of righteousness and of judgment, illustrating the truth with many and striking incidents.

In the evening the Ulster Hall was crowded before the time of service, and an overflow was conducted by Dr. Guinness and others in one of the Y.M.C.A. halls. The praise service in the chief assembly was again in charge of Mr. Alexander, assisted by the Fellowship Choir. This part of the proceedings is felt to be not only enjoyable, but highly profitable. The sweet Gospel songs fall as balm on many a weary heart, and their echoes linger through the days that follow. Rev. Dr. Lynd led the assembly in prayer, and Dr. Torrey preached with singular force and grasp from the question in Gen. iii. 9, "Where art thou?"

The addresses of the two previous evenings had been mainly directed to Christians; this was aimed point blank at the unsaved. The speaker having referred to the many vain efforts to hide from God, insisted that the question of his text should be faced seriously, honestly, thoroughly, prayerfully, scripturally, and innocently. At the close a good number responded to the call for decision. These were invited to the front seats, where Dr. Torrey set before them very plainly the way of life. We have no doubt, however, that many others, too timid or retiring to brave publicity in such a large assembly, felt the searching power of the Word, and entered the Kingdom of God without observation. An illustration of this was mentioned next day by Rev. Henry Montgomery. When all the others were gone, he found four young women were being dealt with by one of the lady workers. After he had spoken to them for a short time, three professed their trust in the Saviour.

The Noon Prayer Meeting on Thursday was conducted by Dr. Guinness, who stated that at the overflow meeting on the previous evening about thirty persons had professed conversion. After many had engaged in prayer, he gave a brief, stirring address on Psa. lxxxi. 10, "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

DINNER-HOUR OPEN-AIR MEETINGS.

A new feature of the mission on that day was an open-air meeting held during the dinner-hour, close to several spinning-mills on the Crumlin road. Sacred solos sung by Miss Froste, Miss Montgomery, and Mr. Alexander were listened to with rapt attention, after which Dr. Torrey and Dr. Guinness addressed the great crowd. A number of workers in one establishment returning too late, and finding the gate shut, commenced to sing hymns until the gate was opened for their admission.

Previous to the Bible reading at 3.30, at the suggestion of Mr. Alexander further instances of blessing received during the week were reported. A man had been led to Jesus through Dr. Guinness reading the parable of the lost sheep on Tuesday evening. A young Christian woman had felt constrained to speak of Christ for the first time to an unsaved acquaintance. A young man had spoken to another, with the result that the latter had accepted the Saviour.

Dr. Torrey's subject was the work of the Holy Spirit in regeneration, as set forth in such texts as Titus iii. 5; 1 Pet. i. 23; 2 Cor. iii. 3. The striking instances of Divine power given in illustration of the subject were well fitted to add new force to the old creed, "I believe in the Holy Ghost."

SPLENDID OPEN-AIR WORK.

The evening meeting filled the Ulster Hall fully half an hour before the appointed time, and hundreds unable to gain admission, formed an overflow meeting in the Y.M.C.A. minor hall, where Dr. Harry Guinness took charge. From half-past seven o'clock till eight, in the Ulster Hall, Mr. Alexander engaged the assembly in a hearty concert of spiritual song. Rev. Dr. Robertson led in prayer, and Dr. Torrey read a portion of Romans v. Rev. Henry Montgomery, announcing the programme for next day, remarked that he had never seen a finer congregation than the open-air gathering on the Crumlin Road that afternoon.

The subject of Dr. Torrey's address was 1 John iv. 8, "God is Love," which he said was the greatest sentence ever written. He was listened to with breathless attention as he unfolded his glorious theme, and after prayer, when those who were willing to accept the Saviour were requested to stand up, many readily responded. Mr. Alexander sang with marked effect, "My Mother's Prayer," and an inquiry meeting was afterwards held, to which hundreds of the anxious ones remained.

On Friday, the Noon Prayer Meeting was much larger than on any former occasion, and was marked by great earnestness and fervour. A detachment of the Salvation Army came singing to the place of meeting, and in the prayers offered there was a clear tone of confident expectation. From this meeting a party, consisting of Dr. Guinness, Rev. Henry Montgomery, Rev. James Cregan, Rev. William Witherow, Pastor Gunn, Mr. William Grove (London), several Salvation Army officers, and a number of ladies, drove to the scene of an open-air dinner-hour meeting at Combe's foundry, the largest in the city. The singing of the party as they passed up the Shankill Road attracted much attention, and a crowd speedily gathered when the brake was drawn up. Solos were sung by Miss Froste, Miss Montgomery, and others, and a number of brief and pointed addresses given. Scripture texts were repeated again and again by the great audience at the suggestion of Dr. Guinness, the words of life being thus impressed on many hundreds of men and women who stood around and passed to and fro.

Previous to the afternoon Bible-reading, a number of brief reports were given, indicating the progress of God's work in the city and elsewhere. A deep interest has been awakened at Londonderry, Coleraine, Ballymena, and other places over the province, where many are planning visits to the meetings in Belfast. Dr. Torrey's concluding address on the work of the Holy Spirit was founded on Romans viii. 2-4.

MOST FRUITFUL MEETING OF THE WEEK.

In the evening the Ulster Hall was again thronged with an eager audience, Dr. Torrey's subject was the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which he treated as a drama in three acts, viz., wandering, desolation, and return. The discourse set forth with great vividness the fruits of sin, and the rich grace of God. At the close, Mr. Alexander sang as a solo, "Lord, I am coming home." Numbers remained for inquiry and prayer, and the meeting was felt by many of the workers to be the most fruitful of the week. The overflow in the Y.M.C.A. hall, addressed by Dr. Guinness, and in which Mr. A. W. Vance, Mr. Wm. Grove, Mr. D. A. Black, and others took part, resulted in many waiting to seek salvation.

Saturday night witnessed an extraordinary attack on the kingdom of darkness in the Shankill district. A united body of workers from the Shankill Mission, Salvation Army, City Mission, &c., gathered into the Albert Hall (Rev. Henry Montgomery's) some 800 or 900 intoxicated men and women, to whom the Gospel was earnestly spoken and sung, many remaining for inquiry till midnight was long past.

The Sabbath, which proved a red-letter day, began with a morning meeting at 8 a.m., which filled the Ulster Hall to its utmost capacity, when Dr. Torrey spoke on "How to win souls for Christ." The meeting for women only at 3.30 crowded the hall almost an hour before the time, and many hundreds overflowed in the men's meeting held simultaneously in the Y.M.C.A. large hall, where some 1,700 were present. Here Dr. Guinness, assisted by Mr. D. A. Black, Mr. Wm. Grove, Mr. A. W. Vance, and others, conducted the service, at the close of which a number professed their faith in Jesus.

DR. TORREY FULL OF THANKSGIVING.

At eight o'clock p.m. both halls were again crowded; the Ulster with men, and the Y.M.C.A. chiefly with women. Dr. Torrey spoke at the former on the "Awfulness of Sin," from Prov. xiv. 9. Various forms of sin, including drunkenness and impurity, were denounced in scathing terms, and the sermon was followed by Mr. Alexander's solo, "Would you believe?" At the close about thirty men and youths declared their decision for Christ.

The hearts of God's people are filled with praise for the rich blessing already received, and Dr. Torrey himself seems full of thanksgiving and joy. The Lord has indeed done great things for us, and we confidently hope to see still greater during the coming days and weeks of the mission.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Gipsy Smith at Eastbourne.

A mission on a scale never before attempted at this beautiful resort was conducted by Gipsy Smith from April 25 to May 3. As no building in Eastbourne would accommodate the crowds that might be reached if only a determined effort was made, a large tent, seating 2,400 people, was secured, and erected (by kind permission) on the Ordnance Field fronting a main thoroughfare in the east end of the town. Despite the wellnigh constant daily downpour of rain, the tent was filled night by night, and had it been double the size, it could have been filled on the last days of the mission.

Between 500 and 600 persons passed through the inquiry-room, and most gracious have been the testimonies to answered prayer in the conversion of many. The future alone will declare the good effected.

Among other instances, the remaining six of a large Bible-class, numbering sixty women, and some ten or twelve out of one mothers' meeting, have professed conversion. A husband, whose life-long prayers for his wife have been answered, declares his "home is now like heaven." In a family, none of whom professed the least regard for things Divine, husband, wife, and child have all been bought to decision, and to quote their own words, "We simply don't know ourselves!" Cases might be multiplied. Numbers of people came long distances, a 'bus load arriving most evenings from Hurstmonceux, eleven miles distant, and the inquirers' cards reveal the fact that from Hailsham and Redhill and Heathfield (twenty miles distant), men and women attended the mission. The midnight meeting held on the Wednesday was a never-to-be-forgotten sight, publicans, barmaids, and multitudes of those who never darken the door of any church, assembling to hear the everlasting Gospel of Divine grace and mercy.

The missioner was accompanied by Mr. G. E. Morgan, M.A., whose expository Bible-readings from the Old Testament were helpful to many, fully 600 attending in the afternoons to listen thereto. Mr. Morgan also held a splendid children's meeting on the Saturday.

A converts' meeting was held on Friday last, at which the mission choir, which had done such splendid service, together with the stewards and workers, were present. Some 700 gathered, and addresses were delivered by the ministers of the Free Churches. The meeting was distinctly helpful in every way, and a further one for children is being arranged by the Free Church Council. For many a long day the churches here will thank God that Gipsy Smith ever came into their midst. H. E. B.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Cardiff.

The chief town of the Principality has been greatly favoured during the spring months of this year by the visits of evangelists, and the revival of interest in special religious work. The vernal Psalm civ. has come into many minds, and the words, "Thou sendest forth Thy Spirit, they are created; and Thou renewest the face of the earth," have received for Christian workers a new application. First of all came Mr. George Clarke, invited and zealously supported by the Y.M.C.A., whose fortnight's ministration in March brought many young people to an open confession of faith in Christ. He had no sooner said "farewell" than the meetings for the deepening of spiritual life were held by Revs. W. Fuller Gooch, R. Wright Hay, and J. Hamilton, at the Y.M.C.A., when the more devout and meditative members of the churches listened to addresses, for which they were deeply grateful.

Next came Mr. W. R. Lane, who has just concluded a month's labour in the town, and entered with heart and soul into all that was holiest and best in the work of his predecessors. Every sermon, every exposition of Holy Scripture, every application and appeal to his hearers gave evidence of careful thought and serious study of Divine truth, and showed plainly that Mr. Lane had no thought of commending himself as a preacher and teacher except by a manifestation of the truth to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

Mr. Lane came to Cardiff on the invitation of the local Free Church Council, which gave him the heartiest support in every way. Mr. Shepherd, the secretary of the Council combines religious zeal with great gifts as an organizer. Preliminary prayer-meetings were held, and a house-to-house visitation of town districts arranged for and faithfully carried out. One of the most striking features of this mission gave the evangelist great encouragement. The ministers and officers of the churches supported him heartily. At every meeting they were present in considerable numbers.

One of the methods calls for special notice. On the Saturday evening, before the final meetings in the Park Hall, a procession of ministers and laymen marched through the principal streets, preceded by a band. Announcements of the meetings were made en route, and a brief meeting was held near the market centre of the town, followed by a prayer-meeting in the Cory Hall. On the last day of the mission a conference on Open-Air Mission Work brought together a large number of ministers who listened to an admirable paper on the subject by Rev. Allan Spencer (Wesleyan). On the final days of the mission very valuable help was given by Mr. Frank Cockrem and others who came down to Cardiff for this purpose in connection with the Open-Air Mission.

Most of the meetings were held, not in the centre of the town, but in the more populous working-class districts of Splotland and Grangetown.

It is perhaps too soon to speak of the spiritual issue of all this good work. That a deep impression has been made all are agreed; and on every hand one hears the opinion that the results will prove to be lasting. Many seekers, chiefly men, passed through the inquiry rooms, and not a few declared their faith in Christ. To all who had the pleasure and privilege of working with him in this evangel of Christian faith and love Mr. Lane has commended himself as a faithful servant of his Divine Master, an excellent preacher, and expositor of the Word of Truth, and a man whose ruling passion is an intense love for the souls of men.

Mr. Lane is careful to avoid sensationalism. He can trust the Gospel of God's grace in Jesus Christ to do its own work. He has much to tell his hearers about his life as a soldier in the Coldstream Guards, and the circumstances of his conversion in the barracks at Windsor. But his most graphic accounts of an unusual experience are marked by the utmost seriousness, and by deep spiritual feeling. Nothing is added for the sake of effect. Mr. Lane is emphatically a preacher to young men and men of middle age. And nothing in all his work in Cardiff has been more satisfactory than the large proportion of men among his hearers and converts. One who had been a sceptic for years told the writer on the way home from one of the meetings that "Mr. Lane's manliness and intelligence and sympathy compelled me to listen. I felt I could trust every word he said. He has no tricks. He is in dead earnest. Thank God I ever heard him! He has opened the door for me to a new life." "He that winneth souls is wise." Yes, wise with the "wisdom of God." V. D. M.

Scottish National Evangelistic Convention.

As an outcome of the recent Scottish National Evangelistic Convention it has been decided that the executive shall make provision for an annual gathering on similar lines. It has also been agreed that this executive shall, without founding any new organization, be authorized to offer such help to weaker causes throughout the country as lay in their power to give.

Mrs. Baeyertz at St. John's Wood.

Mrs. Baeyertz has just concluded a short mission in connection with the St. John's Wood Y.W.C.A. Institute. To the many young women who went into the enquiry room Mrs. Baeyertz explained the way of salvation by means of a simple Bible Reading, thus leading them to rest in God's Word for their soul's salvation.

Many precious testimonies have been received on all hands, such as "The Bible has become a new Book; we want to read it all over again"—"We see as never before the Personality of the Holy Spirit for power in life and service"—"Prayer has become a greater and more intense reality." Mrs. Baeyertz is not very well, and as she begins a large mission at Norwich on the 25th, she requests the prayers of God's people. E. W.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

The work carried on in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E., has again been visited by Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, and during the month of April a most encouraging mission was the result of the faithful proclamation of the Gospel by this honoured servant of God. The week-night meetings were well attended, and the Sundays as usual found the great hall filled with men and women who listened with rapt attention to Mr Collins. Some very interesting cases of decision took place. Among others, the following might be cited:—

One evening, two men met in the Mile End Road. They had been boon companions in their drinking days. One of them had been converted at the hall only a few weeks previously, and on meeting his old friend, he revealed this fact by answering a question, "What brought this about?" he replied, "I found Christ at Charrington's." Instead of going to the public house, he took his friend for a walk and talked to him about the Saviour. They parted; the unsaved man went home and told his wife and suggested they should "go to Charrington's and see for themselves, "for," as he said, "if it is good enough for H——, why not for me?" They went next evening, and at the close of the meeting both went into the inquiry-room, were dealt with, and professed to find Christ.

A very intelligent man, who is a school-master and had been a local preacher, but fell through drink, was restored, and is now working again for the Master. A prodigal son was restored to his parents. A carpenter earning good wages had spent his last shilling in drink, when he wandered into the hall. He became very anxious, and said, in the inquiry-room, "I have found more than I reckoned on when coming in here." He left declaring that he would never touch drink again, nor spend money on "that which had almost landed him in hell."

An American seaman, drenched to the skin, wandered in one Sunday night. He was a backslider, and came from Philadelphia. At Christmas, 1899, he yielded to the persuasion of his mates to drink, and since then had continually given way. He left happy, going to his ship in the Albert Dock a restored man. On the Monday he came to say farewell, as he was going back to his parents in America. They, he said, were praying for him.

The immense gathering for prayer every Saturday night, when a time of great refreshing is experienced, is something to be thankful for in these days. It is no uncommon thing to find at the close of the prayer meeting men and women coming forward and asking, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" This is nothing to be wondered at, and is only what might be expected when a thousand of God's children meet week by week to ask His blessing upon the efforts of Mr. Charrington and his noble band of workers. The Thursday night meetings have been very largely attended, when Mr. George Nokes has delivered some very stirring Gospel temperance addresses, illustrated by magnificent dissolving views. Many pledges were taken.

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth Road.

The annual conference held at Union Tabernacle, S.W., on Tuesday of last week proved to be a time of blessing. The subject under discussion was "The Power of the Word of God," and was ably dealt with by the various speakers. In the afternoon, Mr. Henry Varley gave an eloquent and powerful address from our Lord's Prayer in John xvii., dwelling at considerable length on the possession of eternal life (vv. 2, 3).

Mr. A. Garstin (chairman) followed with some very helpful words, dwelling upon the necessity of listening to the Word of God, hearing, obeying, and acting upon it.

In the evening, Mr. A. Holness took the chair; and Rev. J. S. Harrison touched all hearts with what he had to tell of the power of the Word of God in the Gospel. Many helpful words were spoken by Messrs. Bennett Anderson, Barry Wake, Edward Hurditch, R. Blackie, and others, and solos were sung by Mrs. Harrison, Miss Cameron, and Mr. Bennett Anderson.

Abernethy U. F. Presbytery.

The North of Scotland in different parts is at this moment sharing largely is God's saving grace. Among the residents in the valley of the Spey, the goodness of God is outpouring itself, and many are finding their way into the Kingdom of God. Under the auspices of the Abernethy U. F. Presbytery, Mr. Samuel Mackenzie, evangelist, has been at work for a number of weeks past, and in the different townships visited, many, mostly young men and women, have been turning to the Lord. In Cromdale there was very great interest; and one woman, whose son was converted, was heard to say that she had seen nothing like it in the district since she was twelve years of age.

The meetings during the first week were stiff, but the thaw came, and on one night sixteen stood up indicating their desire to rank themselves on the Lord's side. From Cromdale the evangelist passed on to Nethy Bridge, where there were also signs and tokens of the Spirit's gracious working. Next came Grantown-on-Spey, the chief town in the strath. There is much joy among God's people, and the ministers in the different places are cheered in seeing the upspringing of the harvest, sowers and reapers rejoicing together. J. C.

Notes from Midlothian.

Mr. William Stewart has recently concluded a special mission at Musselbugh, N.B., held under the auspices of the united churches. From the first the power of God was manifest, and the interest and attendance were such as to surprise the most sanguine. Many found their way to the inquiry-room, and a very large number of souls have passed from death unto life. All glory to God!

A mission was conducted at Wallyford, a village near Musselburgh by two of the Faith Mission Pilgrims. There was not the breakdown longed for, but a goodly number professed conversion.

Mr. Alfred Moore conducted a special mission in Edinburgh during part of March and April. God was with his servant, and signs followed the Word preached in the apparent conversion of a considerable number of individuals.

A series of special meetings, conducted by Pastor Kemp in Rose Street Baptist Church, have just finished. So deep was the interest and manifest the blessing that it was resolved to carry on the meetings for three weeks. Rarely a night passed without some deciding for Christ. The Sabbath evening services were greatly owned of God, a goodly number accepting Christ at the close. R. C.

Mr. James Wharton Among American Negroes.

This winter has been one of unusual blessing among the coloured churches of the South. The services conducted by Mr. James Wharton have been crowned with success. Since the first week in November close on nine hundred persons have yielded themselves to the Lord, notably in Atlanta and Montgomery, Ga.

At Macon, Ga., God has preciously given us to see much fruit garnered in. All the boarders at Ballard Normal School are now professing Christians; and among the converts in the city is a saloon-keeper, who has given up his nefarious and soul-destroying business, and is now keeping a fruit stand. He might have been seen the other day, with open Bible, reading to a man at his stall, thus proving the great change wrought in him by the Spirit.

No white man, to my knowledge, has travelled more extensively through the South, seeking to lift up and help the coloured race, than Mr. Wharton. Since his first tour in 1876, he has had the joy of seeing the rapid strides of progress that these people have made, in spite of opposition.

Mr. Wharton's earnest and unaffected manner, coupled with his thorough knowledge of the people, has brought great success to his work. His meetings are pervaded by deep and strong feeling, and are, at the same time, free from that undue excitement which only too often is to be found in the revival services of negroes.

We feel that the life of our church, of our home and of our school, has been quickened by Mr. Wharton's coming. Not only have many professed Christ, but the change in the new converts is very marked, and all seem to be helped. We feel that a great blessing has been sent to us through Mr. Wharton.

Geo. C. Burrage.

Faversham Home Mission.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendall, of Bedford, have conducted an eight days' mission, which has proved a spiritual feast for the folks of this town. From the first meeting until the last the fruit of their labours was wonderfully in evidence. As a result of the "still small voice" speaking, people who had been persecutors and an annoyance to their neighbours, with others who had not been inside a church or chapel since childhood, were taken hold of; stubborn wills were subdued, hard hearts softened, and sinners, we believe, were born again. The evangelists were pointed and practical in giving God the pre-eminence in every meeting. The young, the middle-aged, and the old were all influenced by the power of God. The singing of our friends proved very attractive. The meetings were remarkably well attended all through; all classes have been blessed, Christians have made spiritual advance, and God has been abundantly glorified. F. L. M. P.

Open-air meetings have been held at High Beech and Chingford by the Open-Air Band in connection with the Workmen's Hall. Holiday-makers were influenced also by means of tract distribution and personal dealing. Several cases of blessing have been recorded.

Mr. F. Chapman, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a mission at Folkestone Road Hall, Walthamstow, and many souls are thanking God for sending His servant to that district. Saints have been strengthened and built up, and sinners brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in the Lord Jesus. K.

Mr. William Collard, the sailor evangelist, conducted the services at Newtown Mission, West Norwood, S.E., during the month of April. The meetings were well attended, and several cases of decision are known. The Gospel of the grace of God was clearly set forth, and believers were strengthened and refreshed. At the closing meeting several persons testified that they had received blessing through Mr. Collard's ministry. George Willoughby.

That the rising tide of Romanism in our land may be stemmed.

For the Ipswich monthly meeting, May 21. Speaker, Rev. Francis Paynter, of Guildford.

For Mrs. France, Tynemouth (well known to many readers as "M.C.F.") who is, we regret to hear, seriously ill.

A praying mother desires prayers of God's children for a wayward boy just recovering from an illness, but still unsaved.

For Mrs. Baeyertz, the Jewish lady-evangelist, who feels the stress of work, that strength may be vouchsafed during a forthcoming mission at Norwich.

For blessing on a tent mission conducted by Mr. H. F. Pouncey, of the Evangelization Society, at Lindfield, Sussex, from May 17-June 14 inclusive.

Earnest prayer is asked for a revival and manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power during a mission at Lyndhurst, conducted by Mr. Roberts, of the Evangelization Society.

Rev. H. Wood asks prayer for God's presence and working to be manifested at his annual meetings in Liverpool, and for the necessary workers to be graciously given as during eighteen years past.

Welsh Notes.

At a recent meeting of the Rhyl Golf Club a motion to allow individual members the option of playing on Sunday if they so desired was lost by a large majority. Not only so, but a resolution was adopted absolutely prohibiting any play on the Lord's Day.

The spring assembly of the South Wales Calvinistic Methodists was held at Borth a few days ago. A resolution was passed condemning emphatically the proposals to compensate publicans. Another expressed approval of Mr. J. H. Roberts' amendment to the Welsh Sunday Closing Act, while a third resolution strongly condemned the recent utterances of the Prime Minister with regard to the licensing question.

At the recent meetings of the Welsh Congregational Union of North Cardiganshire, a resolution was passed condemning the action of the Licensing Session of Carnarvonshire in granting a number of licensing appeals, no fewer than twelve licences having been thus granted after having been refused by local magistrates. Regret was also expressed at the absence of a number of Nonconformist justices from the Licensing Session.

Oxford Notes.

On Wednesday week a Free Church demonstration was held in the Wesley Memorial Church. Dr. Massie presided, and Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., was the principal speaker, the main part of his address being against the Education Bill. The speaker described the Free Church Federation as a marvellous movement, and the Education Bill as one of the most reactionary measures that had ever disgraced the Statute Book of this country.

Rev. R. C. Miller, of Brasenose College, having offered his services to the Church Missionary Society, will shortly leave for the mission field.

At the annual gathering of the Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society last week the Sheldonian Theatre was crowded. The work of the Society in the Oxford Diocese has during the past year greatly developed, the membership to-day standing at 12,000.

Professor Massie, Yates Professor in Mansfield College, is resigning his chair, in order that he may devote his whole time to the cause of religious freedom. His action has caused the deepest interest amongst Oxford Nonconformists.

This week, in Oxford, a public meeting of Methodists was held to further the interest of the Wesley Guild of Young People. There are already 1,500 branches of the Guild in Great Britain, with a membership of over 100,000.

The annual meetings in connection with the Oxford Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society were held last week with much success. The special deputation was Rev. V. A. Barradale (Samoa), who said it was only seventy years ago that Christianity was introduced into Samoa, yet to-day, out of a population of 33,000, no fewer than 31,000 regularly attended places of worship. The wonderful advance of Christianity greatly impressed Robert Louis Stevenson.

The Oxford branch of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews is holding its annual gatherings this week. Founded in 1809, the Society has to-day twenty-five ordained missionaries, nineteen medical missionaries, thirty-four lady workers, and 101 lay workers. During the history of the Society 2,000 Jews have been received into the membership of the Society, 1,000,000 Old and New Testaments and portions of the Scriptures have been distributed, and over 5,000,000 Christian tracts. To-day in the Church of England 200 clergymen are Jews or of Jewish descent.

Spiritualism.—Rev. Alexander A. Boddy, vicar of All Saints, Monkwearmouth, Sunderland, writes to us:—"Allow me to ask any readers of The Christian who have been mediums or had supernatural experiences in spiritualism, but who have now found Christ and renounced spiritualism altogether, to write me, giving a brief testimony, with permission to use it for the help of others."

West End Evangelistic Choir.—A desire has been expressed to form a choir for the West End of London in connection with "The London Evangelistic Singers' Union," and similar to those already existing in the north, south, and eastern districts. All who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and are in sympathy with the work, will receive a hearty welcome, other things being equal. Satisfactory references as to Christian character, a good voice, and knowledge of music to be essential to membership. An inaugural meeting will be held at Exeter Hall on Monday evening, May 25, at eight o'clock prompt. All applications (enclosing stamped envelope) are to be addressed to Mr. C. I. Clapperton, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

Pontymoile Mission.

THE annual report of the Pontymoile Christian Mission, entitled "Save some of Them," details deeply interesting operations in the Name of Christ. Whether in evangelistic work or the ragged school department of the mission, there has been encouragement. In view of the progress of Popery in Wales, Mr. Wintle writes:—

"This is a serious matter, and calls loudly to every child of God to arouse himself and to awake to his responsibility. The antidote for this evil—the one and only remedy—is the Gospel of the grace of God, proclaimed simply, earnestly, and lovingly, in the power of the Spirit, confirmed by lives that are 'living epistles, read and known,' which have still the power to attract, convince, regenerate, and save men. 'Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved,' but 'How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?' We have excellent organizations, our mission machinery is everything that we can desire, but we want more men and more women set apart to visit the homes and meet individual difficulties and spiritual needs. Jesus talked to Nicodemus and the woman of Samaria, and we are convinced that this is the most effectual way. People are interested, become concerned, and are led to the truth through personal interviews."

Friends are invited to send for a copy of the report. Address Mr. T. M. Wintle, Hon. Superintendent, Undenominational Christian Mission, Pontymoile, near Pontypool, Mon.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn.

THESE two workers have concluded their series of Wednesday meetings at Dr. Barnardo's, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse. At the final gathering a large audience assembled and listened with much profit to the Bible readings and words of counsel and exhortation. At Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W., the meetings on Thursday afternoons and evenings (which continue until May 28) have been attended by steadily-increasing numbers. A correspondent writes:—"Many are testifying that God is using these two servants of His as means of encouraging his people. This is especially the case with Christian workers. There is no paring of the Gospel, no fear of man, no striving to gain the world's applause at the risk of the Divine approval. It is to be hoped that the Churches generally will take advantage of the services of these friends, and so reap a rich blessing."

The address of Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, on Thursday evening last, was full of striking illustrations drawn from her long evangelistic experience on the Continent. With earnestness and pathos she told of souls won for Christ from the worldly habitués of fashionable Parisian resorts, and likewise from hardened infidels among the poorer classes.

Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood.

ON Wednesday, May 6, the members and congregation attending Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, assembled in large numbers to celebrate the eleventh anniversary of the work in that place. The meeting was of a very hearty nature, and abounded in expressions of sincere gratitude to God for His repeated tokens of favour, and for the steady progress the work has made during the past year.

Almost every week there have been evidences of God's approval in the quickening of believers and the conversion of the unsaved. So the members go forward with confidence, still maintaining the supreme authority of the Holy Book; still rejoicing in the fact of the vital oneness of all true believers in Christ their Risen Head; and still seeking by all legitimate means to effect the salvation of lost souls.

During the meeting the pastor (Rev. W. Fuller Gooch) again brought before the people the great need of a plain permanent building to replace the present temporary iron structure. G. A.

Keswick Convention.

JULY 20 TO 25, 1903.

BELOVED FRIENDS,—In this twenty-ninth year since our first memorable meetings at Keswick, the call comes to us again to go up to the mount of the Lord for a season of Holy Convocation.

We would earnestly ask those who hope to be present on this occasion to unite with us in prayer, and to continue in supplication, that both speakers and hearers may come together in the spirit of unity and love, and with great expectations as to the blessings our God is ready to bestow.

The purpose of our Convention is to bring God's children into a state of fitness for service. We meet together in God's presence that He may "take us, and break us, and make us," and then use us for His glory. We meet before Him that He may remove everything that hinders our spiritual growth; that He may repair and replenish that which is feeble and defective; that He may adjust that which is dislocated; and, having brought us into a condition ready to receive, that He may endue us with power, by filling us with the Holy Ghost. All this implies much, in the way of preparation, before the Convention begins.

May we join, therefore, in asking that it may please our gracious God to give us this preparedness of heart, so that we may come together in humble dependence upon Him, in stillness of soul, in full submission, and in definite expectation that He will glorify His name in pouring out His blessing upon us. "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him."

In the confident expectation that this forthcoming Convention will be the means of bringing great blessing and spiritual benefit to hundreds, we remain, your brethren in Christ Jesus,

J. Battersby Harford, Albert A. Head, Evan H. Hopkins, W. Hatt-Noble, Robert Wilson, G. S. Wilson — Trustees of the Keswick Convention.

Convention Lodge, Keswick, May, 1903.

As many missionaries to the heathen desire to attend the Keswick Convention this year, a special fund is needed to assist them in their expenses. Contributions towards this important object will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Albert A. Head, Keswick Convention, Corrie Lodge, Wimbledom, S.W.

Missionaries to the heathen desiring assistance will oblige by writing, enclosing a stamped envelope with full address, to Mrs. Albert A. Head, Keswick Convention, Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W. The fund raised is to aid missionaries to the heathen only. Others desiring to attend can write to Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin Place, Keswick, who will give information as to accommodation.

For information regarding the "special guaranteed train" from London and the South of England to Keswick on Friday, July 17, as well as for the arrangements concerning "certificate tickets" from all other parts of the United Kingdom, apply, enclosing three penny stamps for the "Key to Keswick," to J. T. Budd, Rockville, 23, Pembroke Crescent, Hove, Brighton.

Off to the West.

THE sixty-fourth band of rescued young people left the Sheltering Home, Liverpool, for the Distributing Home in Canada last week. Readers of The Christian, who have joined with us in this happy work of child-rescue, will rejoice that these children, who have known the distresses of poverty and wretchedness, now have before them changed circumstances, with happy homes and every prospect of successful lives.

The March party are all comfortably settled, and many applications are waiting at the Canadian Home for this latest band. Pray with us that the "precious seed" sown in these young hearts may bear a bountiful harvest.—Yours, &c., Louisa Birt.

Sheltering Homes, Myrtle Street, Liverpool.

South Africa.—Referring to our account last week of the annual meeting of the Baptist South African Aid Society, we are asked to state that it is earnestly desired to commence work among the settlers and natives in Rhodesia, and an appeal is made for funds for this purpose, as well as for the missionary work of the Society in other parts of the South African Colonies. The hon. sec. is Mr. R. Howard Henson, Baptist South African Aid Society, 22, Furnival Street, E.C.

The Bedouin Mission.

IN the minds of many praying and thinking people, the little gathering of earnest men and women which assembled at the Metropolitan Police Institute on Wednesday last week, was one portending a mighty movement which, it is hoped, will shortly awaken into vigorous life.

Among those present at the meeting referred to were: Mr. R. C. Morgan (who presided), Dr. Baedeker, Rev. J. B. Figgis, Dr. Woods Smyth, Rev. H. H. Pullen (Spezia Mission), Mr. Albert Head, Pastor Fuller Gooch, Rev. F. H. King, and Rev. J. Rose (missionary-designate).

Mr. Archibald Forder, who was leaving England the following day, gave his parting word in the language of the Apostle Paul when setting forth on one of his missionary journeys into unknown regions, because it was so suited to his own present circumstances: "Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me, that I may be delivered from them that are disobedient in Judæa, and that my ministration which I have for Jerusalem may be acceptable" (Rom. xv. 30, 31).

Dr. Baedeker spoke encouraging words, after which a statement was made as to finance. It was announced that nearly £1,500 had been received in gifts and promises towards the establishment of the mission. This included the kind promise of the Emmaus Mission at Halifax, to pay the whole cost of building the Caravansary. In order to purchase the land, house, and cistern, another £2,000 would be needed. Sums of various amounts were coming in daily. Many hundreds of God's children are pleading that He will supply all the need, so that the work may not be hindered by lack of funds.

In our next issue we hope to give further particulars of this deeply interesting work. The London office of the Mission is 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Mr. Chas. W. Cotton is the Secretary, to whom contributions may be sent; or to the office of The Christian.

The Home of Industry.

OUR eightieth party of children sailed on Thursday by the ss. Tunisian for Canada; a bright, bonny band of boys and girls of all ages from four years old up to sixteen. We are filled with thanksgiving for being permitted to rescue and train these young lives, and to sow in their hearts the good seed of God's Word.

It was an interesting scene at Euston, when the children arrived in omnibuses from the training home, and marched up the platform to take their seats in the comfortable corridor carriages provided for them. A number of friends had gathered to wish them God-speed, and all were struck with the winsome bright faces of the little travellers, ready and anxious to be off on their journey. A quick run to Liverpool, and then on board the big ship, where splendid accommodation was provided for them.

Next day a telegram arrived from Moville, telling of good weather, bright sunshine, and all well. And now we ask prayer for a safe and prosperous voyage, and for blessing among the 2,000 passengers, as Gospels and picture leaflets are distributed among them. Very cheering it is to have laboured on many years, until the applications in Canada are far beyond the ability to supply the demand for well-trained children.

Conference for Ministers.—The Devotional Conference for ministers, which was so successful last year, is again being arranged by Rev. J. Hilton Stowell, M.A., of Aylesbury. It will be held at Oxford from September 7 to September 11. Rev. R. J. Campbell, of the City Temple, will preside, and Dr. Robertson Nicoll, Rev. J. Brierley, and Gipsy Smith, are to be present. The Conference will be open to ministers and missionaries of all denominations, also to their wives, and to students from the theological colleges. Correspondence should be addressed to Mr. Stowell, at Aylesbury.

Home Mission Week.

A FLOATING SCHOOL.

Hymn—Songs and Solos. No. 407.

IT was such a very wet day when I visited the training ship Arethusa at Greenhithe, that one could almost float on the land as well as on the water! But I enjoyed my visit in spite of the rain.

The training of lads as sailors on this vessel is part of the work of the National Refuges, and a very important section it is.

I waited on the landing stage in the drenching rain for the boat which was sent to take me across to the ship. Half-a-dozen boys, shrouded in oilskins, manned the boat, and after numerous instructions regarding "larboard" and "starboard" (which were perfectly meaningless to my land ears!) we were off, and in a few minutes reached the vessel.

The Arethusa is an old warship, now anchored on the Thames, and used as a floating school for poor lads of good character.

Captain Moore kindly showed me round. The boys were working busily away on the lower deck. Some were at their lessons; others were learning the mysteries of knotting, splicing, and sail making. From one part of the deck came the whirr of a sewing machine, and looking into a cabin I saw a boy running together the seams of a sailor's suit, while another was deftly plying a needle. When at sea, a sailor needs to know the art of mending and patching, for there will be no kind mothers or sisters on board to do it for him.

The lads are also taught to cook. The oven I peeped into was like a small house. Near by was the larder filled just then with great quantities of bread and butter ready for tea. As there are some two hundred boys you can imagine a large sum of money is required to feed and clothe them all.

Descending another hatchway, I found myself in what we should term a dormitory, but there were no bedsteads to be seen. Presently I discovered the bedding rolled up in hammocks and heaped upon the floor, and Captain Moore pointed out the hooks down the centre of the deck, from which the hammocks swing at night. Wouldn't you feel strange in a bed like that?

Had it been fine I should have seen these young sailors on the upper deck learning to box the compass, furl and reef the sails, signal passing vessels, and climb the rigging. As it was I had to content myself with watching their performances in the gymnasium. If they are as alert on the deck as they were below they should prosper. And they do, for many encouraging letters are received from old boys, some of whom become master mariners, boatswains, quartermasters, and head cooks on large steamers. Good reports also come in from their employers. The lads are placed in the merchant service, or the Royal Navy when the standard of proficiency is high enough.

In connection with the Arethusa is the Chichester, on which the boys go out on cruising expeditions. Not only are they taught to be useful in many ways, but they learn those things which shall help them to build up strong Christian characters. Total abstinence principles are not overlooked, and religious services are held regularly by the chaplain of the Mission of Seamen. Thus they learn to know of Him who is "mightier than the mighty waves of the sea."

By aid of this ship many a lad has been given a helping hand, and many an over-burdened, honest parent has been cheered with the knowledge that his child will grow up to be a self-supporting man.

You cannot be too grateful, young people, for the good start in life which your parents give you, and which makes all the difference to your future career. Let this gratitude make you more earnest in stretching out a helping hand to those less fortunate than yourselves, and remember it is the desire of Jesus Christ that the strong should help the weak. K. H.

Many thanks for the lovely wallflowers, and also a box of toys. They were much appreciated by those to whom they were given.

"In School and Playground: Five-minute Talks with Young People." By G. E. Morgan, M.A.—After a perusal of the pages of this work, Rev. Eric Farrar, Vicar of St. John's, Hoxton, writes: "You follow our Lord's plan of drawing lessons from the common objects of life. I have read the book with pleasure and profit. There is no surer plan of riveting the attention of children." (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

Ramsgate.—In the presence of a large company a few days ago, memorial stones were laid of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society's Rest and Bethel on the Harbour front. Stones were laid by Mrs. Ford, a generous local friend, and Mr. Richard Cory, for Mr. John Cory, President of the Ramsgate branch of the Society, and its liberal patron. Altogether, £3,630 have been received, but £7,000 is the total amount needed to open the building free of debt, which should be done next September. The missionary, Rev. F. MacCormac is a faithful and earnest worker, and God is giving blessing on his labours. The Hon. Treasurer is Mr. W. MacMaster, The Bank, Ramsgate.

Sunday, May 17.

How a Boy Served Christ (John vi. 5-14).

NOTICE that little pronoun we. As our Lord stood face to face with that vast crowd, He might have said to His disciples, What are you going to do? He might have bidden them summon a committee meeting, and devise some way of meeting the hunger and weariness, which would presently assert themselves. Instead of that, He classed Himself with them, saying, How shall we do it? It was as though He put Himself on their level, saying, You and I have to deal with this problem. And is not that the Lord's way still? He knows the needs of a dying world, but He calls us into fellowship with Himself with respect to them, saying, This is a matter, not for Me alone, not for you alone, but for us together. "I am the Vine, and ye are the branches."

Whilst our Lord talked about buying bread, He knew that there would be no need for any such thing. "He knew what He would do." Before His eye was the entire plan of the supper of which He would be the host. But He spoke of buying, that He might see what they would suggest, and whether they would turn to Him in simple faith, or would begin to meet the need according to their own suggestions. They took the latter course. It is almost always the case, even with good people, that when they are face to face with some grave emergency, they begin to calculate ways and means. When we are tested we take out our pencils and paper, and begin to count up our resources, as the disciples did when they said, "Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not enough, that everyone should take a little."

Then it was that Andrew bethought himself of the little lad, whom he had seen in the course of the day, with five barley loaves and two small fishes. How proud and pleased he would be when they told him that Jesus wanted his little store. He gladly gave it up, because he knew that, if others were filled, he would be; and he was prepared to give up all he had, at the call of that sweet voice, which thrilled him with every note. Oh, that boys would give their best to Jesus, even if it were only like the coarse barley loaves and the tiny fish; they would discover that He would take the poorest and simplest things, and make wonderful use of them for His own glory and the blessing of men. What are our five barley loaves? Time, a life, good spirits, good health, a heart that can love God and man. What are our two fishes? The power of speech or song; the education which any boy can get in this wonderful age, or the special power of doing one thing best, which every one possesses?

These things do not look much in themselves, but it is wonderful how much Jesus will do with our lives, if we will put them into His dear hands. There is no knowing how many men, women, and children may not be benefited by the fact of our having lived. Everything, however, depends on whether we are going to put ourselves, and all we are and have, at the disposal of the Son of God.

"Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee."

If you cannot give anything to Jesus, you can help to arrange the people in orderly ranks, and you can carry round the bread and fish of the Gospel, offering it without money and without price.

Christian Endeavour in Costa Rica is steadily progressing. Rev. S. Witt writes: "I had the pleasure of organizing a new society in a place called Madre de Dios. We have a membership of twenty to begin with, and meet after the morning service. This makes the eighth society in Costa Rica."

The Endeavourers of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, recently held the first of a series of monthly meetings on Sunday evenings for young men and women, especially those who are in business, or away from home. Rev. F. B. Meyer took the chair, and gave an earnest talk. Among the strangers who enjoyed the meeting were representatives of societies in Asia and Australia, and an American minister, Rev. W. H. Brough, of Elizabethstown, Kentucky.

The ninth Scottish National Christian Endeavour Convention at Glasgow had a splendid set off with the Junior Rally in St. Andrew's Hall on Saturday, May 2, at 3.30 p.m., with an audience which packed the Hall in every corner. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Alexander MacKeith, J.P., the life-long friend of the children of Scotland, who said that last year the membership, active and associate, was 4,446. This year it is 5,902, an increase of 1,456. Subsequently, the work of Junior Endeavour was illustrated by the building of a lighthouse. The model was that of the Skerryvore Lighthouse, reaching to a height of about twenty feet. The building of the structure was done by the young people under the guidance of Mr. Alexander Fergus. Course after course was laid till at last the lantern was placed on the top and lit by electricity, having the seven words, "Ye are the light of the world," so placed as to appear like rays radiating from the lantern.

PAUL BEFORE AGRIPPA (Acts xxvi. 19-29).

GOLDEN TEXT—Acts xxvi. 22.

LINKS BETWEEN LESSONS.—(1) For two years, as a privileged prisoner, the Apostle Paul witnessed for the Lord in the Prætorium at Cæsarea (xxiv. 26). (2) Felix recalled to Rome under an accusation lodged against him by the Jews, whom he sought to favour at the cost of Paul's liberty. (3) Porcius Festus, the newly-appointed governor, was quickly met with a petition from the influential Jews at Jerusalem to produce the prisoner Paul for a fresh trial in that city. (A murderous plot was hidden under the courteously humble request—xxv. 3.) (4) Trial granted, but at Cæsarea. Charges "many and grievous." Paul's defence—"not guilty," charges not proved. (5) Another trial at Jerusalem proposed by Festus (v. 9), but refused by Paul, who claimed his right as a Roman citizen to appeal to Cæsar. (6) Congratulatory visit of King Agrippa II. to the newly appointed procurator gave occasion for audience with the Apostle.

PLACE. COMPANY ASSEMBLED. ADDRESS.

The audience chamber of the official palace at Cæsarea, built by Herod the Great. A regal reception of "great pomp." All military and civil authorities present (five cohorts of soldiers were stationed at Cæsarea). The royal guests—Herod, Agrippa II., and his half-sister Bernice (sister to Drusilla), governor of N. Palestine, with title of king; president of the temple, with right to appoint the high priests; a young man, probably under thirty. His great grandfather—"murderer" (Matt. ii. 16); his great uncle (Matt. xiv. 10, Acts xiii. 1); his father (Acts xii. 23) had been striken by death in that same hall. Note, Manaen, one of the elders at Antioch who commissioned Paul for mission work, was foster-brother to Herod (Acts xiii. 1). Festus, a heathen, strove to do justice, but was perplexed (xxvi. 26 and xxvii. 24). Agrippa, well taught in Hebrew Scriptures. Bernice, a beautiful, vain, Godless princess. "Paul the prisoner," a man with one aim—to preach Christ to "small and great" (v. 22) as he had learned Him. THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, present but unseen, except by Paul in faith (Heb. xi. 27, 2 Tim. iv. 7), searching the hearts, reading the thoughts, motives, aims and needs of each.

WHAT DID THE VISION SHOW PAUL.

1. That he was doing wrong all the while he thought he was doing right (v. 9; Pro. xvi. 2, 3).

2. That he was persecuting the Son of God, while he thought he was punishing heretics (v. 15).

3. That the purpose of his life was to witness for Jesus, instead of doing contrary to His name (vv. 9, 16).

4. That he was chosen as a vessel of honour to be tried in the furnace of suffering (ix. 15, 16).

5 That the door of faith would be opened to the Gentiles, and he would be the Apostle to them (xiv. 27, Rom. ii. 13).

SOME SECRETS OF PAUL'S SUCCESS.

DOING { the work God gave him to do at once (v. 19; Gal. i. 16).
the work that lay close at home until a wider field opened to him.
himself, first what he taught others to do (1 Tim. i. 13-16).

"To repent." (Sham trees never bear real fruit.) Paul sought as earnestly to win the slave (Phil. 10), or the soldier chained to his wrist, as the king on his throne.

Mr. Moody began his great work by calling a stray boy from the street and sitting down with him as a class in the corner of the Sunday school to read the Bible with him. Theme—Christ crucified. Christ risen. Christ the Light.

What is the difference between almost and altogether a Christian? Almost is (1) one who wavers between Christ and the world; (2) who knows the need and the way of salvation, but does not turn (repent) and seek it; (3) who trembles, but does not trust Jesus; (4) reforms the earth life, but does not seek the new heart and eternal life; (5) is as truly lost as the sailor who sinks within sight of home.

"Herod heard John gladly" (Mark vi. 20). "One thing thou lackest" (Luke xviii. 22). "Not far from the kingdom" (Mark xii. 34). All ready except oil (Matt. xxv. 8-10). Too late (Luke xvi. 24).

Altogether. 1. Trusts in the atonement of Christ for the forgiveness of sin. 2. Receives His Holy Spirit. 3. Loves Him, learns of Him, does His will, and looks for His coming.

LESSONS.

1. "Tribulation worketh patience." While waiting two years a prisoner in Cesaræa. There was testimony to give in Herod's Hall (Psa. xxxi. 15).

2. There was a crown on Agrippa's head and a chain on Paul's wrist (2 Tim. iv. 8, Rev. ii. 10).

3. Just as in Herod's Hall, so in the Sunday-school the Lord is present, and can see now those who used to sit on the forms, and in the teacher's chair. Some are doing a great work in the world to-day. Some are forgetting all they learned of God. Some may be in prison. Many are gone from earth. All will meet at the judgment (2 Cor. v. 10; Acts xvii. 31). What account shall we give of the Sabbath school lessons. The Bibles we have read or neglected? Am I am learning for eternity from God's Word, or trifling over it? Am I storing my heart with arrows ready for the fight of faith? (Matt. iv. 1-11). Am I getting the wisdom Timothy had? (2 Tim. iii. 15-17). Shall I use it as he did and Paul? (1 Cor. ii. 2-5).

ABLE TO CONTINUE.

When Motley, the celebrated author of "The Dutch Republic" was contemplating that work, he lived, with his wife and children, in various parts of the Netherlands, where he was able to study the many time-stained Dutch manuscripts. His friends wondered why he exiled himself, and not a few of them thought he was out of his mind. Motley himself occasionally became depressed and discouraged, and was at one time well-nigh beaten. Then it was that Wendell Holmes' lines came to his mind and braced him to further effort. "Stick to your aim," said the poet to him, and he was helped to carry to its completion the book by which his name is ever remembered. The Apostle, despite all persecution and discouragement, was inspired by the words of promise from above, and he was able to say that by the help of God, "I continue unto this day" (v. 22).

ALMOST, BUT LOST.

Some time ago a man, evidently tired of life, threw himself into the river Thames. A person who was passing seized a boat, and being an expert oarsman, quickly pulled to the middle of the stream. As he neared the drowning man he called out, and sought to lay hold of the poor fellow. The man, however, refused to be saved, and turned from the would-be rescuer. His well-wisher, not to be beaten, attempted again and again to catch the unfortunate and wilful man, and at one time almost persuaded him to allow himself to be saved. Yet while he wavered, and before his deliverer could make fast his hold, the poor creature suddenly threw up his arms and sank. How many there are who are making shipwreck of their souls. Again and again they say with Agrippa, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian" (v. 28), and yet they delay.

LEAVING ALL FOR GOD.

Rev. Wilson Carlile, speaking of the success of the Church Army, relates that he keeps a museum at headquarters. In it are whisky and beer bottles, skeleton keys found under seats of the church, and a set of burglar's implements; practical testimonies that the hearts of certain men have been changed. Such men are not "almost," but "altogether" persuaded to cast aside the wickedness of this world, and have devoted themselves wholly to the service of the Lord. Real conversion means an out-and-out change in the life, for old things have passed away and all things have become new. The Apostle Paul pleaded that not only Agrippa, but all who heard him that day, might be almost and altogether as he, the Apostle, was, except the bonds (v. 29).

Barnwell Theatre, Cambridge.—For over twenty years the Gospel has been preached in this excellently adapted mission centre, formerly a most undesirable place of amusement. During the past winter the Sunday evening services were conducted with the aid of lantern views, which formed the text of very effective Gospel addresses delivered to large working-class audiences. During the summer (the lantern being dispensed with) the numbers diminish appreciably, but earnest evangelistic work is maintained. Among recent preachers have been Messrs. Henry Varley and G. E. Morgan, both friends of the mission for many years.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

NEWMARKET.

REV. A. J. COONEY writes:—Dr. Henry has recently revisited Newmarket (this time accompanied by Mr. Armon Jones) for a second brief Christian temperance mission. There were four meetings in all held under the auspices of the local branches of the B.W.T.A. and the Total Abstinence Society, and with the energetic leadership of Mrs. H. Bullman, president of the Newmarket B.W.T.A.

The meetings were looked forward to in prayer, and with large expectations of good results and blessing; and in this the Christians of Newmarket have not been disappointed. Dr. Henry's powerful addresses will not soon be forgotten. Those present felt that never before had they listened to such forcible and convincing arguments, based upon the Scriptures, as to the Christian duty of total abstinence. His evidence was so conclusive, his reasoning so clear. The mission has had a wonderfully encouraging and stimulating effect upon the temperance workers themselves. Mr. Armon Jones sang at each meeting with much feeling and pathos, and made a deep impression upon all. The mission opened on the Tuesday evening with a children's service in the Town Hall, followed later by a general meeting. Dr. Gray of Newmarket, presided at both.

On the next day an afternoon meeting, by special invitation, was held in St. Mary's Parish Room, when Rev. A. J. Cooney, Rector of Roughton, Norfolk, presided; and the opening prayer was taken by the Ven. Archdeacon Campbell, Vicar of All Saints, Newmarket, who also, before the close, expressed his sympathy with the movement. The last meeting was held in the Town Hall, when Mr. Cooney again presided, supported by clergy and ministers of the neighbourhood. There were crowded attendances at all the meetings—several of those present having come twelve and fourteen miles to attend, and many pledges were taken. The order of the Sons of Temperance was largely represented, some present wearing their regalia. Newmarket is a difficult field for the temperance worker, but surely not too hard for God! May His blessing follow this effort, and may we still continue to gather in the fruits of this seed-sowing in days which are yet to come.

The Falkirk mission (May 8-15) opened well. The audiences were large, and at the early meetings there were many conversions.

Personalia.

Rev. J. C. and Mrs. LAWSON, of the Industrial and Evangelical Mission, Pilibhit, India, are expected to arrive in London in the course of this week. Communications may be addressed to Room 78, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

Rev. Dr. LEN. G. BROUGHTON, of Atlanta, Ga., passed through London last week, on his return to America, after a short trip taken by the advice of home friends for rest on account of overwork. His work is progressing splendidly. In the course of last year, 368 persons were baptized and added to his church.

Mr. ARTHUR T. UPSON, of the North Africa Mission, who has just returned from Egypt after nearly five years' service, would be glad to hear of preaching engagements, and also opportunities of giving missionary addresses. A syllabus of his lectures in native costume may be obtained from 7, Sunnyside, Herne Bay, Kent.

Mr. EMILIO OLSSEN arrives in England this week from Buenos Ayres, and will be glad if friends will afford him opportunities for addressing meetings in the interests of missionary enterprise in South America. He is also prepared to give illustrated lectures on "The Argentine Republic," and "Ten Thousand Miles in the Interior."

Obituary.

LIEUT.-COL. STEWART.

LIEUT.-COLONEL STEWART, late of the 24th Regiment, and staff officer of pensioners, fell asleep in Jesus, in his eightieth year, recently, at Bedford. His memory will be revered in Ventnor for the very active interest he took in the Town Mission while a resident, and after leaving about two years ago. For some seventeen years he was secretary and treasurer of the Mission, and was delighted to see the blessing of God attending the ministries to the poor, the sick, and the dying, who come from all parts of the country to Ventnor during the winter months. He also did much good work for the spiritual welfare of the town.

MISS KERR, MELROSE.

Miss Kerr, of Melrose, who has just passed to her rest, was a lady whose life and character showed forth the praises of her Lord. For more than thirty years she and a friend kept an educational establishment for young ladies, and not a few of her pupils were made wise unto salvation. Never a series of meetings was held but pupils were encouraged to attend, Miss Kerr accompanying them. Her later days brought much suffering, but she accepted all as tokens of God's love to her, knowing that she was not left to mere secondary causes. Many throughout the land will praise the Lord at their sweet remembrances of this sainted lady. R. H.

MRS. W. E. DODGE.

The death of that venerable Christian lady, Mrs. W. E. Dodge, of New York, removes an honoured worker. From early life she was interested in religious and benevolent undertakings, and maintained her sympathetic efforts to the end of her long life.

Rev. Dr. Stoddard says of Mrs. Dodge and her equally generous husband: "They always lived so as to commend a religious life to those about them, giving no occasion for reproach and attracting others to the Saviour whom they loved. By their unostentatious deportment and self-denying efforts, they made it evident, that, better than houses or lands or gold, the service of God was their highest joy. Their religion was of that type which is most lovely and most useful. Cheerfulness pervaded and commended it. Sound principle sustained and guided it. They were consistent and happy Christians, and their influence upon a large circle was helpful and inspiring. Christian benevolence had a remarkable exemplification in the life of Mr. Dodge. His wife seconded him with equal liberality, and both regarded themselves as stewards of the gifts of God. They gave of their time, of their sympathy, of the hospitality of their home, and of their personal labour, to the world, to the Church, to the poor, and to Christ in every possible manifestation of His call for."

REV. JULIUS SUMMERHAYES.

Protestantism in the western suburbs of London suffers a heavy loss by the departure of Rev. Julius Summerhayes, Vicar of St. John's, West Ealing. His first appointment was to the curacy of St. Mary's, the parish church of Ealing. When the mission district of St. John's was formed, in 1867, he became curate-in-charge. In 1876 the permanent church was opened, and Mr. Summerhayes was appointed vicar of the new parish. He was one of the founders of Ealing Cottage Hospital. He took the deepest interest in the work of the Church Missionary Society and the Bible Society. The late vicar was very highly esteemed by his Nonconformist brethren. He stood almost alone among local clergy in the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance. The funeral was a great tribute to the affection in which the deceased minister was held. The church was thronged, and the road to the cemetery was lined by several thousands of people. Many of the poor, by whom the vicar was much beloved, were deeply affected.

About Books.

FREE CHURCH HISTORY.

A Popular History of the Free Churches. By C. Silvester Horne, M.A. (6s. J. Clarke & Co.) Whether dealing with orthodoxy or heresy, with established churches or dissenting communions, Ecclesiastical History has lessons which the present generation sadly needs to learn. Some chapters in English Nonconformity are the glory of the Church at large; and others there are that may well excite us all to bold fidelity and noble endeavour in the service of Christ. Mr. Silvester Horne writes throughout as the thorough Free Churchman that he is, but he tells a story which Christians of all denominations should read to profit. The pages are characterized by largeness of spirit, and there are many excellent engravings, for the most part reproductions of portraits of worthies of past days.

WESLEY AND HIS PREACHERS.

At the right moment, Mr. G. Holden Pike gives us an excellent book on the great Methodist revival—Wesley and his Preachers: Their Conquest of Britain. (7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) The bicentenary of Wesley should excite a new interest in that wonderful man and his devoted helpers; and we cannot but feel that a more close and general acquaintance with their mission and achievements would result in much practical good at the present time. Sin abounds as it did then, and the message of salvation is the same as ever. Let all men know assuredly that by the preaching of Wesley and his associates thousands of sinners found salvation, and lived to glorify God in their day and generation.

Mr. Pike knows how it is with the so-called "ordinary" reader—he cannot read many books on one subject. Hence, having, so to speak, read everything himself, both regarding the times in which Wesley lived and the work that great man was permitted to do, with practised skill he digests the whole in a volume that is not so large as to repel the busy worker, nor so small as to leave reasonable interest unsatisfied. The book is the embodiment of wide reading; the workers are presented to view in pen sketches, and their experiences and labours outlined in a way that exhibits their human qualities and personal features. The book is like a panorama for variety of topic and animation. The illustrations include some of the most striking portraits, including the new Canadian picture of Susannah Wesley.

BOOKS ON ROMANISM.

Romish Indulgences of To-day; or, is Tetzel Dead? An Exposure, by "Fulano." (2s. Imperial Protestant Federation, 3, Palmer Street, S.W.) Rome's present-day traffic in bulls forms the subject of this book, which is the work of an Englishman who has resided for several years in Spain. By means of extracts from Papal authorities, and the text of official documents, with facsimiles and illustrations, Rome is allowed to tell her own story. Without much argument, the immoral and unscriptural character of the thing is shown; and we join in the author's prayer that the true significance of the traffic in indulgences may be brought home to the English people, who, at the present time, seem greatly to need enlightenment on the subject of Rome's teaching and practices.

The Two Babylons; or, the Papal Worship proved to be the Worship of Nimrod and His Wife. By the late Rev. Alex. Hislop. (5s. Partridge.) We welcome a new edition of this well-known book. The pages are filled with evidences of the pagan origin of distinctive dogmas and ceremonies of the Roman Church. Had the book been worked over again by a diligent editor, it would have been easy to make the indictment still stronger, by the help of modern discoveries regarding old Babylon, and the latest developments in the great organisation which has so long served to counterfeit the true Church of Christ. As it is, with its marvellous collection of testimonies, heathen and Christian, illustrated from the monuments of Nineveh, Babylon, Egypt, Pompeii, and other lands where the glory of God has been given to another, the book is calculated to open the eyes of many as to the anti-Christian character of the system whose head is enthroned in the Vatican.

The Programme of the Jesuits: A Popular Exposition. By W. Blair Neatby, M.A. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) A timely book. We agree with the author when he says: "It is a ruinous mistake to imagine that the Jesuits have no foothold, firm and broad, in the affairs of our nation; and it is simply ignorance and infatuation, however it may assume the guise of liberality, to treat Jesuitism as a negligible quantity in our national problems." Mr. Neatby tells the story of the mischief-making society; and a serious purpose runs through his pages, namely, to utter a solemn warning. He says: "There is a spirit of reaction ever at work throughout Christendom—a spirit that will not rest content short of the full measure of mediæval darkness, superstition, and tyranny. That spirit is, so to speak, incarnate in the frightfully misnamed Society of Jesus; and many a man to whom the very name of the society is an abomination, is doing, in his simplicity, the society's work, by giving his short-sighted, if not his selfish, support to a reactionary policy. It is not, of course, the Jesuits who sow the seed of every policy of the kind, but it is the Jesuits who may safely be counted on to reap the harvest." We trust this sketch of a great subject will have many readers.

Dr. Paterson Smyth's "Bible for the Young" now includes Moses and the Exodus, in which parents and teachers will find the same thoroughness of treatment that marked the previous volumes. (1s. net. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.)

There are many home-thrusts for the thoughtful reader in The Sunny Side of Christianity (2s. net. James Robinson, Manchester); yet the place and power of love are presented in its own spirit. The chapter on "Acquiring the Love Lesson" will call for more than one reading on the part of different members of a home circle.

The Gospel story is told over again for the benefit of boys and girls in The Friend of Little Children. By M. A. Hayes. (3s. 6d. Nelson.) The book is an excellent example of illustrative work with the highest of all ends in view. There are twenty coloured plates and numerous black and white pictures by John Lawson.

Two new volumes of the "Quiet Moment Series" (1s. 6d. each. Religious Tract Society) maintain well the high standard already set up. The Teaching of Jesus Christ in His Own Words was originally composed by the Earl of Northbrook for the use of natives of India, but has already been found useful by others, and is, we feel sure, destined to win many friends in England. The papers on Repentance, Forgiveness, Justification, and Sanctification, included in The Gates of Life, by Rev. H. Elvet Lewis, are doctrinal and instructive in the best sense, while at the same time brightly written and thoroughly readable. The teaching is sound and Scriptural, and to young people and others who would be disinclined to open a larger treatise, this attractive little book is likely to be the means of imparting very important truth.

As a careful and earnest student for many years of Oriental languages, religions, and philosophies, Rev. W. St. Clair Tisdall possesses peculiar qualifications to expound the nature and claims of Buddhism. In his James Long Lectures, 1900-1902, published under the title The Noble Eightfold Path (6s. Elliot Stock), he has done much to present the subject in popular language. We fear only those who have a special interest will care to follow it out so fully; but intending missionaries and others will find in this book much that did not come to their predecessors so easily. The fourth lecture, in which a comparison is instituted between Christianity and Buddhism, indicates points of contact between Buddhism and early Christian errors—such as the monastic system, Gnosticism, and Manichæism; adding that "the striking resemblance which exists between the Lamaism of Tibet and the Papacy is too close to be due to anything but a common origin."

No one needs to sing the praises of Gilbert White's Natural History of Selborne; but of the edition just issued by Messrs. Cassell (6s.), edited with notes by Richard Kearton, F.Z.S., and 123 illustrations from photographs taken direct from nature by Cherry and Richard Kearton, it is only fitting to speak in terms of warm commendation. The charm of the book is greatly enhanced by the pictures, which represent deeply interesting photographic achievements; some of the most timid birds, and animals that are rarely seen by the naturalist, are reproduced as they were surprised by the snapshot camera. The observations of White have been well matched by the wonderful results of Mr. Kearton's intelligent patience and labour, whereby faithful pictorial comments are furnished for the familiar letter-press. In point of printing and binding, this book is admirably fitted for the purposes of presentation to such as admire the works of God in nature.

A Day in the Country. Applications are now reaching us from Christian workers in some of the most needy districts of London for grants from our "Day in the Country" Fund. Even under the best circumstances, the lot of the women and children in many neighbourhoods calls for the utmost sympathy and help on the part of the Christian public, and the winter has been unusually trying. There are many lives which can be brightened in this way, and timely help will relieve anxieties. Those who see the hand of a loving Father in the special joys and privileges of summer, can in this way hold out to others, equally dear to His heart, the cup of cold water which shall not go unnoticed or unrewarded.

Maxims of Evil. Those who disparage the Gospel on the ground that it is rooted in the past, little think how old are their distinctive prejudices and how little of up-to-dateness can be claimed for their criticisms. Dr. Pierson's description, given on p. 10, of modern cavilling in the name of toleration, suggests an instance of this. He remarks :—

> It is being said that it makes no difference what a man's opinions are, provided he is sincere; that what we need is not doctrine but deportment, not a theory but a life.

These sentiments can be traced back further than we care to follow them. Suffice it to say that they were the politest apology for religious indifference a hundred years ago. In the opening chapter of his "Practical View," issued in 1797, William Wilberforce traces many and serious errors and evils to these very maxims. He enunciates them in these words :—

> The one is, that it signifies little what a man believes; look to his practice. The other (of the same family), that sincerity is all in all.

Thus error is not advancing in ideas, though it may be assuming forms that are more perverse and dangerous. Wilberforce's classic has a message for our day; and the same may be said of the writings of many of our fathers and grandfathers in the Gospel.

The New Apologetic. Christian apologists never had a finer field before them than they have to-day. The older apologists too often contented themselves with the work of defence, on account of the formidable-looking weapons of the enemy; now the work must be one of direct attack, since the old weapons of the foe are obsolete, and there is no prospect of their obtaining new ones. Science, the great weapon of the rationalist, can no longer be used against the Gospel; the newer discoveries are driving men to acknowledge God behind all things. Dr. Forsyth, at the annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society, made much of this new position, and urged that we plead not that the Gospel is compatible with all that men have invented and discovered, but that, without the Gospel, the best men's work is incomplete. Nothing can reach completeness without Christ. To "preach Christ" to-day, is to show the glory of the Gospel for the whole of life, and it has a larger meaning than ever. First, Christ as personal Saviour, then as personal Lord, then as Master of all and the bond of all. "For of Him and through Him and to Him are all things." Let no one preach timidly such a Christ as this.

An Elastic Creed. It has been said that if the Church will only consent to make her standard sufficiently elastic, there is no reason why all people should not belong to her. That would be the easiest way of multiplying numbers and gaining a visible success. But what then of Christ's idea of the Church? That after all is the great thing. Here is an open invitation recently given :—

> If you care to join our ranks, I will tell you at once what we ask for. We ask that you should not be ashamed to call yourself a Christian. Then you may interpret that word as you please. . . . If any young man feels that he can take his stand for Jesus Christ, and boldly confess Him to the world, we ask for no more than that.

Under such an invitation, anyone may come who is a moralist, and under the one shelter may be gathered into a brotherhood those who deny and those who affirm the Deity of our Lord. Such a heterogeneous compound cannot be a Church. To leave the interpretation of the word Christian to anyone's particular fancy, is to destroy its radical meaning. We love broadmindedness, but there is a breadth that is hurtful. It is evident that there is still an open door for teachers who know what they teach, and can teach it definitely.

Rock or Sand. The thoughtful reader of Mr. Booth's volumes on the "Life and Labour of the People of London" cannot fail to be impressed by the evidence they afford that much of the failure of efforts made to influence the minds and hearts of the people, is due to indefiniteness of belief on the part of preachers. Where the religious views are clear cut, and held with a firm grip, and where there is nothing nebulous in the statement of the doctrine, there is success. As a recent critic has observed, the failure "is greatest among the Unitarians and the Ethical Societies." Undoubtedly :—

> Strong and definite convictions always win converts, and one is justified in believing that, without definite beliefs, however simple, strongly held, and consistently applied, no church and no creed will beget enthusiasm among its adherents, or win recruits from the outside world.

Fishers of Men. It is often helpful to remember, when tempted to pessimistic thoughts as to the seeming smallness of the results of individual effort, that there was a time when the Church of Christ included, outside the Divine Master, only two individuals, and those two comparatively uneducated, and in a humble social position. Their first efforts to extend the Kingdom were, rightly, fraternal only: "He first findeth his own brother, and saith unto him, We have found the Messias, which is, being interpreted, the Christ. And he brought him to Jesus" (John i. 41, 42). Then came the missionary effort: "Philip findeth Nathanael" (v. 45). To those little points, all the great world-wide missionary work of to-day, and all our noble philanthropic movements, can be definitely traced, and through those points to the One who said to the first disciple "Follow Me." Let no one, therefore, who has heard and obeyed the Master's call, venture to attempt to gauge and limit the glorious possibilities dependent upon his discipleship.

The "Black List." An absurd situation has arisen over what is called the "Black List" in connection with the new Licensing Act of 1902. It was understood that habitual drunkards could be summarily dealt with and "listed," so as absolutely to cut them off from procuring drink in any form. Now it appears that the Act has been misread—so the Lord Chief Justice has decided—and drunkards cannot be dealt with in this way without their consent. A more ridiculous thing can hardly be conceived. Would any drunkard be likely to consent to the restriction of his liberty? The whole point of successful legislation on behalf of the unhappy drunkard class lies in the application of force to which they are not permitted to offer resistance. Viscount Cross is moving for a short amending Bill, which we hope will be successful in passing.

The Gambling Mania. The gloomy picture drawn by Archdeacon Sinclair, concerning the prevalence of gambling in private houses, is certainly not exaggerated in its facts. Since the introduction of "Bridge," playing stakes have continually advanced, until the whole thing has developed into a mania, characterized by a pernicious excitement. Its power over young girls and women is the most serious element in the case, and even worldly people are alarmed at the way things have gone. The formation of a league against the playing of Bridge by women—such as is proposed—might check this particular form of gambling, but the root evil is too deeply seated to be so easily eradicated. Souls are unhealthy, and so life becomes untrue. The only real cure for the moral maladies, whose symptoms ever change, is the cure of the heart by the grace of the Redeemer. The sad thing is that Society knows it is sick, but it refuses the only medicine that can cure it.

Temptation Removed. Meanwhile, we are glad when temptation is removed from human lives; hence we congratulate the authorities on their success in dealing with one incentive to gambling, by their prosecution of the English agents of the Hamburg Lottery. Our sons and daughters have been pestered for years with glowing advertisements of foreign lotteries, and it was time that the agents of this business were summarily dealt with. The Daily News is to be congratulated on the part it has played in bringing the matter to light. Let official attention next be directed to the lotteries which are advertised broadcast by Roman Catholic authorities.

London's New Housing. Londoners have an opportunity now of seeing what can be done in the way of municipal housing. The new estate of the London County Council at Tooting, which was inspected last Friday by the Prince and Princess of Wales, is an ambitious and successful attempt to house the working classes in a manner worthy of a great city. These "cottage homes" are model places of habitation to which a large garden is attached. The physical conditions of life are such as to enable men and women to live as human beings should. Whilst legislation is so long pending, we can only be grateful for these local attempts at improvement. Yet we must not dream, with ultra-enthusiasts, that good housing will solve all the ills and distresses of the city. Evils running riot in the heart will soon o'erspread and spoil the fairest spot in the world. The city to which Christian hearts look forward is the City of God, in which He reigns, and until His reign is established all physical improvements are but the cleansing of the surface while the wound bleeds below.

The Land and the People. Commenting upon Isa. v. 8-10, a writer in the St. James' Gazette remarks that possibly "the immutability of the law of cause and effect accounts for much of the success of prophecy," and draws a remarkable comparison between the condition of rural England to-day and that which Isaiah had in his mind when, eight centuries before Christ, he penned his inspired denunciation. Mr. Rider Haggard has, by books and lectures, illustrated very painfully the results of the joining of house to house, and the laying of field to field in this country. To-day very generally "the homer of seed yields but an ephah," with the result that our islands, which, if fully cultivated, might produce all the food required by the nation, are dependent upon foreigners for daily bread. Certainly the solution of many of our social difficulties lies in the reoccupation of the land.

A Holy Week. Do we not sometimes begin at the wrong end, and in looking after the fractions neglect the whole? Mr. Elbert Hubbard has tendered what he terms a new text "for Sabbatarians." It is a somewhat obvious one, but it is often overlooked. "Remember the week-day to keep it holy," he says, and a critic dealing with the pronouncement has added: "If thy week-days are holy, thy Sabbath will take care of itself."

The Wider Priesthood. Speaking at the recent annual meeting of the Church Reform League, the Dean of Westminster pointed out that what is known as "the clerical mind and habit" was quite unknown during the first two centuries of the Christian era, and that it is a development of a separate order of clergy that has led to the practical silencing of the lay voice in the Church. The present problem, he urged, is to make that voice articulate. As Lord Hugh Cecil added: "The supreme Head of the Church is Jesus Christ, and all powers are derived from Him; the layman is as divinely called as the bishop."

The Once-a-Day Service. Two tendencies of people towards public religious services have manifested themselves during recent years. One is the tendency of the majority to abstain altogether from attendance at public worship. The other is the fashion, ever growing, of attending only once a day. The latter may be explained in several ways, some creditable and some not so. The grand ideal undoubtedly is, as the late Mr. Spurgeon often said, for a Christian to attend in the morning for the sake of his own soul and to go out in the evening after the souls of other people. Twice-a-day attendance may be a virtue or a vice—a virtue if it provides a man with that power which will afterwards be employed for the Kingdom of God, a vice if it means only personal pleasure. We can conceive of no grander spectacle than a church filled with devout worshippers on the Sunday morning, each of whom definitely replaces himself in the evening by someone who needs the Gospel. There are many, however, who in this time of rush need all that the Lord's Day can offer for their own soul's sake.

England and the Vatican. The Roman Catholic journals have found in the visit of King Edward to the Pope ground for hope that there may soon be a renewal of diplomatic relations between this country and the Vatican. It is convenient for them to forget the storm of indignation which burst in Italy itself upon the Duke of Norfolk's expression of a longing on the part of Romanists in Great Britain for the restoration of the temporal power. Anything in the shape of an official suggestion that there should be an English representative at the Vatican would give rise to still greater disturbance, for it could only be regarded as an insult to a nation whose unity and freedom rest largely upon the absorption of the Papal States.

Mission Women in India. The Bishop of Worcester has struck a true note in asserting the great importance of women's work in the mission field. After commenting upon the striking change in public opinion in regard to this development, he said at a recent meeting:—

> It is now generally perceived that there can be nothing of more transcendental importance than the development of women's work. The whole possibility of the Christian religion taking hold of such a country as India, depends on getting at the hearts of the women, and that depends upon women workers. . . . The progress of religion depends on what is going on in the hearts and minds of the women, and nowhere more so than in India; and the advance of Christianity there will be very slow until a rear-attack is made upon that in which the whole social system of the country is imbedded—the zenana.

This is a weighty utterance, and as true as it is weighty.

The Late Rev. Dennis Osborne. All our readers are familiar with the name of the late Rev. Dennis Osborne, who really sacrificed his life in manifold labours on behalf of the sufferers by the recent famines in India. They will be interested in the following announcement:—

*The Narrow Way of Christ.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

THERE is, perhaps, no greater peril of the Church in our day than that which comes from the side of a broad theology. We are told that our Evangelical Christianity is too narrow for the twentieth century, that we need breadth if we are going to hold the people, and that one reason of the unbridgeable gulf between the churches and the masses of the people is this illiberal theology. We are told also that it is contrary to the New Testament doctrine of charity, that charity means breadth, sympathy with all men, forbearance with those who differ from us in opinion and practice; and in this great final battle of the ages there is an immense section of the army whose banner is inscribed with that deceptive word, "toleration." It is being said, especially on my side of the Atlantic, that it makes no difference what a man's opinions are, provided he is sincere; that what we need is not doctrine but deportment, not a theory but a life. That sounds well: it sounds rather fascinating. There is a certain attraction about this kind of liberalism; but you have to think only a little while to see that there is a subtle sophistry and a dangerous fallacy behind all this kind of talk.

If, for instance, it makes no difference what a man's opinions are, what is the use of searching diligently for the truth, or of espousing and defending it when you have found it? Error becomes as good as truth. Charity is a Gabriel when she is in right relations to the truth, and a Satan when she falls from that and becomes an apologist for error.

NOTHING TO DO WITH POPULARITY.

Go and read the Sermon on the Mount, the great inaugural sermon of our Lord that started His ministry and which gave the keynote to His teaching. Throughout, it is what men call intolerant and narrow; it speaks to the few—never to the many, and it has nothing to do with popularity, but only with the great King and Sovereign. It is amazing how that Sermon goes straight in the face of all this modern liberal talk.

I. "Enter ye in at the strait gate. . . ." (1) There is no great good in what we call the religious life that is not approached through a strait gate—that is, a gate of difficulty. (2) There are always few that find it. (3) It is because the gate is strait and the way narrow that the multitude take the wide gate and the broad way. There is no spiritual success that is not reached through difficulty. The highest truth is always with the minority, never with the majority. If you are looking for the majority you are on the wrong track.

Eternal life comes only through the strait gate. When you have given up all your own notions, and practices, and self-dependence, and come leaving everything behind, you can go through a gate that will never let you through with any encumbrance. When you come stripped of everything you have carried before, with your thoughts intent on life, then you get through. Every step of that onward and upward way is a step of increasing self-renunciation and absorption in God.

Narrow, yes narrow. "There is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved." If you get into any broader theology than that, remember it is damnation. Away with all these things that imperil human souls. Do not go and stand on the battlements of a dying world, to attract attention by any broader theology than that of the Holy Scriptures. "Neither is there salvation in any other."

* Notes of an address given on Tuesday of last week at the anniversary of the China Inland Mission.

ONLY ONE AT A TIME.

II. "Enter into thy closet . . ." So strait is the gate into the secret chamber of audience with God, that only one can go in at a time. If I kneel to pray with my beloved wife, that is not closet devotion; that is family prayer. If you are going into the secret place of God, you must go by a gate so narrow that it will take only one at a time, and you will find a place so narrow that it will accommodate nobody save yourself and God.

We make a tremendous mistake when we think we are going to make up for the individual communion of the soul with God by praying with other people, even with a choice number of people in private gatherings. That can never take the place of private supplication. There is a tremendous danger of being paralyzed as to that inmost access to God, by forgetting the duties of the closet. All the power of missions at home and abroad depends, at bottom, on what you know of God in the secret place.

If you are drawn into foreign missions by the romance of the life, or in any other way, and do not come by way of the closet, you will be sorry that you ever went, and other people will be sorry too. The place to get your call is on your knees, alone with God, with all other voices still, that His voice may be heard. Then you may get up from that presence like a giant refreshed and strengthened.

LIKENESS TO GOD.

III. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God. . . ." Put first things first. There is only one thing that can be first, and the moment you try to put two, then neither of them is first. Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. His kingdom is His sway among men; His righteousness is the embodiment of godliness in the individual soul. Christ is saying, Seek first to be like God yourself, and to make other people like Him.

That is the only thing that deserves to be put first—the one thing you can properly aim at. All other things must be made subordinate and secondary, that this may be absolutely primary—the glory of God and the extension of God's Kingdom. Your own glory must be forgotten that His glory may be promoted, your own church's glory forgotten that the Church of Jesus Christ may prevail as the Church of Jesus Christ.

IV. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man. . . ." The same narrowness, the same illiberalism, the same intolerance, from the beginning to the conclusion of that magnificent discourse pronounced by the Son of God Himself. Only one foundation, and only one way to build on it—both found in the words of Jesus Christ.

Four illustrations of the narrowness of Christ's teaching! Yet it is the narrowness of the only way to truth, to life, to power, to victory. It is the illiberalism of Him who knows there is only one way to compass the great things of God. It is the intolerance of One who speaks with Divine majesty to tell us there is only one thing worth seeking, and that being found means eternal success.

Notice the reward: to find eternal life. Do you know what eternal life is? I am coming more and more to think that one of the grandest conceptions put before a human soul is eternal life. It is not immortality. Eternal life has no beginning and no end. You had a beginning, but, if you love God and serve Him, you shall partake of the eternal past of His being, as well as the eternal future. If you are engrafted into God, all the eternal past of God contributes to your strength and victory. Eternal life is blessing, power, glory, holiness—none of which are necessarily involved in immortality.

Simon Peter.

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

2.—CALL TO MINISTRY.

AFTER entrance upon discipleship, come earliest lessons and impressions. After conversion (John i. 41 f), we find Simon Peter with Jesus at Cana (John ii. 1-11), and sharing in the impression of His "glory" through that first "sign." Probably also with Jesus through the Judæan tour (John ii. 12, 4, 42), of eighteen months, or some part of it, gaining still deeper insight into the Master from personal contact. Then, on return to Galilee (John iv. 43), Peter seems to have gone back to his ordinary work of fishing.

Now comes a SECOND STAGE, involving call from ordinary discipleship to special ministry. See Matt. iv. 18-22; Mark i. 16-20; Luke v. 1-11, and study last-named in particular. Probably this miracle was used almost exclusively as an appropriate means to the special end of the calling of Peter and his fellow-fishermen. Consider three stages of the call.

I.—THE PREPARATION (Luke v. 1-5).

1. How appropriate the circumstances (1-3). People pressing to hear the Word. Our Lord enters Peter's boat—"Put out a little"—for the purpose of preaching.

2. Then comes the simple command, "Put out into the deep." (See R.V.) "Let down your nets for a draught"—a test for Peter's faith and obedience.

3. The significant response of Peter needs attention. Are they the words of prompt faith? Or are they expressive of doubt and hesitation? Probably the latter, and as though he said, "Master, we toiled all the night, the best time for fishing, and took nothing; and now in the light and brightness of day a draught of fishes is surely unlikely. Yet I will let down the net, though I feel sure it will be useless." Jesus had said, "let ye down (plural) your nets (plural)." Peter responded with, "I will (singular) let down the net (singular)," just to show the result would be fruitless. (N.B.—The text of A.V. is followed here as more inherently probable.) So the answer was possibly (we would say, in view of sequel, certainly), an answer, not of prompt and reverent faith, but of reluctant and partial obedience. So like Peter!

II.—THE PROGRESS (6-9).

1. Unexpected success was the immediate result.

2. Great surprise was naturally evinced by the quantity of fish at an unusual time, at the order of one who was not a fisherman, and who, presumably, knew nothing about fish and fishing! A reminder of His Divine power and knowledge.

3. Realized sinfulness is soon expressed on the part of Simon Peter. "I am a sinful man, O Lord." Why? What made him feel his sin at this juncture? What connection was there between the miraculous draught and this confession of sin? On another occasion of a miraculous draught, he did not realize his sin, but, instead, hurried to meet His Master, and that soon after his denial (John xxi.). Was it not that he now realized the sin of his own distrust which prompted the answer about toiling all night? Had he let down the nets of both boats, they would probably not have been broken. It is as though it flashed on Peter that after all his Master knew more about fishing than he did. His Master's knowledge and power were evident, and now the disciple rises to a higher conception of the One before him. He had called Him "Master" (v. 5), he now calls Him "Lord" (v. 8). Peter at once gains a higher idea of his Master and a lower idea of himself—both results very necessary for the ministry. The Lord reveals Himself to Peter, and reveals Peter to himself, to make him a greater blessing to others.

III.—THE PURPOSE (10 AND 11.)

1. Notice the loving assurance given (v. 10). "Fear not." How sweetly it fell on the awe-struck heart.

2. Mark the higher work promised (v. 10). "From henceforth thou shalt be continually catching men."

The above interpretation seems to harmonise best all the conditions of the situation. Peter's impulsiveness in telling his Master what he thought, and his candour in frankly confessing his error and sin, are thoroughly characteristic.

SUGGESTIONS FOR MEDITATION.

1. The Master's purpose revealed. A call upward and onward. From discipleship to service. New trials and tasks are to develop character, and prepare for more and higher work.

2. The Master's plan stated. He came to Peter while engaged in the ordinary work of life. Used his boat for preaching, and the work of fishing to illustrate and prepare for the higher service. So God tests us in and by ordinary daily life, "the daily round, the common task," to lead to higher things. What a responsibility this puts on common life. God is ever coming to us in simple and ordinary ways. "Faithful in that which is least" (Luke xvi. 10).

3. The Master's purpose endangered. Liable to be frustrated by Peter's hesitation. He began to reason, and nearly missed a blessing, and did actually miss some blessing by only a partial obedience. We often lose by not doing at once what we are told. The possibilities of blessing are endless if we obey, while partial obedience necessarily forfeits blessing.

4. The Master's plan accepted. Peter was recalled to a right state of mind; he accepts Christ's plan loyally; he obeys, and is blessed. "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it" (John ii. 5).

5. The Master's purpose realized. The fisherman responds to his Master, and is led on to higher and nobler work. He becomes a "fisher of men." How appropriate as a symbol was his old work as a fisherman. What are some of the qualities of a fisherman that are also needed by "fishers of men?"

(1) Watchfulness. Ever alert (Heb. xiii. 17; Ezek. iii. 17, and xxxiii. 2-7; Acts xx. 26-28).

(2) Patience (2 Tim. ii. 24). Impatience in Christian work causes the soul of the worker to suffer.

(3) Persistence (2 Tim. iv. 2). Activity, energy, and keeping "always at it."

(4) Courage (2 Tim. iv. 5). Sea-fishing involves taking one's own life in one's hands.

(5) Tactfulness (2 Tim. ii. 24, 25). Wisdom to win (Prov. xi 30). A worker who is "winsome" will surely "win some."

(6) Self-lessness (1 Cor. xv. 10). Fishermen must keep themselves out of sight.

Readiness.

"WHAT is my need to-day?" Whatever the answer in detail may include, this must stand in the very forefront—readiness. Some "good work" has been "prepared" for us (Eph. ii. 10), and to it we are called. Our need is readiness to rise to that call: readiness in spirit, loving and fully appreciating the end in view; readiness in mind, understanding the work; readiness in the special faculties called upon, be they keenness of eye and skill of hand speed of memory or alertness of perception. Each of these powers is the gift of God, and each He will redeem from the hurts and enfeeblings of sin, and will invigorate within us by His Spirit.

Chief of all these needs is readiness in spirit. For our spirit, our own inmost condition of love or of selfishness, of pride or of humility, affects the character and worth of all that proceeds from us. From our spirit all our faculties take their bent, their upward or downward aim. To our spirit they will bring their spoil, as fresh glory for God, or as more gratification for self. "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

Blind Men.

How blind are they who cannot see
Their soul's deep need and misery—
Who, all unmoved by sense of sin,
Seek not the cleansing power within!

How blind are they who fail to trace
God's wondrous gifts of love and grace—
The Hand that paints the glowing sky
In wisdom guides man's destiny!

How blind are they who turn aside
From paths of truth, in human pride;
And try by works their heaven to win,
And make an offering for their sin!

O Lord of love! we pray to Thee,
Anoint our eyes that we may see.
Bid mists and darkness flee away,
And pour on all the light of day!

Questions Answered.—V.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

SEVERAL correspondents stumble over THE MYSTERY OF SUFFERING. No man can fully explain it. But two things are clear, at least: (1) The highest virtue is developed out of difficulty and conflict. No human being is ever perfected in patience except through suffering. (2) The noblest benevolence is evoked by sympathy with, and ministry to, the sufferings of others. If, therefore, man is to be prepared for a perfect life hereafter, he must pass through the furnace here. Both patience and love are the outcome of tribulation. We do not need to go beyond the actual experiences of our present life and observation to learn this. The finest and ripest fruits on the tree of society are invariably those that have come from the pruned branches—suffering and character are inseparable. The Bible uses at least seven figures to express this:—

1. Furnace heat separating pure metal from alloy.
2. Flail and fan separating wheat and chaff.
3. Fuller's soap, cleansing fabrics from stain.
4. Changing wine from vessel to vessel to avoid taste of the lees.
5. Father's rod of correction to chasten the son's faults.
6. "Purging" the branch to make it more fruitful.
7. Cutting off an offending member of the body, &c.

Till from the straw the flaile the corn doth beat;
Until the chaffe be purged from the wheat,
Yea, till the mill the graines in pieces tear,
The richness of the flowre will scarce appear;
So, till men's persons great afflictions touch,
If worth be found, their worth is not so much;
Because, like wheat in straw, they have not yet
That value which in threshing they may get.
For, till the bruising flailes of God's corrections
Have threshèd out of us our vaine affections;
Till those corruptions, which doe misbecome us,
Are by Thy sacred Spirit winnowed from us;
Until from us the straw of worldly treasures;
Till all the dusty chaffe of empty pleasures;
Yea, till His flaile upon us He doth lay,
To thresh the husk of this our flesh away,
And leave the soul uncovered; nay, yet more,
Till God shall make our very spirit poore,
We shall not up to highest wealth aspire,
But, then we shall; and, THAT IS MY DESIRE.
George Wither (1588-1667).

A considerable number of questions have to do with death and the hereafter. As TO SLEEP OF SOULS, it seems to me that this theory is knocked on the head by the concurrent testimony of the whole Word of God. Here the law finds application and illustration, that, while any error may find shelter, and apparent sanction, in some one or more isolated passages of Scripture, no error will stand the test of the whole Bible. Hence the three rules of Bible study—search, meditate, compare. This doctrine of the sleep of souls rests upon a slender basis, such as the use of the word "sleep" in connection with death. But, in the main passage, Acts vii. 60, where it is said of Stephen, "he fell asleep," it must refer to the body, for, just before, he said, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Compare Gen. ii. 7 with Eccles. xii. 7, which is manifestly its exact correspondent. The body, formed of dust, is resolved to dust; the spirit, inbreathed of God, returns to its source.

Compare Psa. xvi. 9, 10; 1 Sam. xxviii. 11, 20; 2 Cor. v. 1-9; Luke xxiii. 41, 43, 46; Philip. i. 21, 24; 2 Pet. i. 14, 15; Rev. vi. 9, 11.

These are but a few out of a very large number of passages of Scripture, which, taken together, seem to us to give no countenance to this doctrine. Perhaps the crowning evidence against it is the scene of Transfiguration, where not only Elijah, who was translated, but Moses, who was dead and buried, appeared in glory.

AS TO RECOGNITION OF SAINTS IN HEAVEN, the Bible says but little. But the scene of the Transfiguration has long settled that for me. There Moses and Elijah appeared in glory and, as such, both talked with Jesus, and were recognised by the disciples. Nor is there any hint that either of them was announced by name. The recognition was probably instinctive and instantaneous. We shall know each other, without any introduction, by a kinship of spirit, and far subtler and keener senses than the bodily senses. As to how much the departed know of what is going on upon earth, the Bible is wisely silent, for might there not be almost as much to distress them as to make them rejoice? As to our relationships, &c., in the future, again the Bible is silent, and it is not my province to give my opinions, speculations, or even convictions, on matters God has not chosen to reveal, but to teach what is written. There is danger in prying into unveiled secrets. There is, however, this to be said, that if the human constitution is essentially preserved in the future life, which seems necessary to our continued identity and personality, the memory must survive, and in greater perfection. How, then, can we fail to recognize and love those we have here known and loved; and even to remain cognizant of the peculiar relations and associations of our earthly lot?

"IS THERE A HELL? And how can it be reconciled with the goodness of God?" This is the substance of many questions.

I have long since made up my mind that there is a hell, and that it is not only perfectly consistent with the goodness of God, but that it is impossible in the nature of things to prevent it, and for this reason.

Sin, unrepented of, unforgiven, unforsaken, of itself makes hell. Should God, instead of providing hell, banish it by a Divine decree, He could not prevent man from making his own hell unless he abandoned his sin. A man came once to see me. He had fooled with drink till he had become a hopeless sot, trifled with lust till he was a moral leper, with "eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin." He said, "I am in hell." It was not with him a question of getting into it, but of getting out of it! Milton's fallen archangel cries, "Ah, me, miserable! Whither shall I fly? Which way I fly is hell; myself am hell!"

I once tried to help a murderer to faith on the eve of his swinging from the scaffold. "All well enough to talk to me about going to heaven," said he; "but I can't get out of my mind that woman that I sent to hell with my pistol, and whom I led into crime!" He was suffering before death the essential tortures of the damned.

"WHAT IS TO BECOME of the thousands of drunkards and victims of drink and lust who know no other and higher life? Are they eternally lost? How about the heathen and those of other religions who do not believe, and those in the slums whose life is nothing but utter dreariness?" ask other correspondents.

1. In all these questions of final destiny we must come to the position of Abraham: Gen. xviii. 25, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" There is no resting place except in the infinite perfections of God. God is infinite righteousness and benevolence combined. Therefore, any true sentiment of what is right or loving in us, is but a faint reflection of His attributes. We must therefore leave all such mysteries to a future solution. But some hints are given us in His Word. Romans i. 20-25 clearly teaches that men will be condemned only for not using the light they had, not for not knowing, but for not doing. But all these questions sink into insignificance in comparison to two others:—

1. What are you doing with your own knowledge of the way of salvation? Have you availed yourself of the Gospel?

2. What are you doing to save those who are lost in sin and the darkness of ignorance? Are you doing what you can to save those who have no practical knowledge of Christ?

AS TO these questions about HEAVEN AND HELL, a few general remarks may be added.

The Bible idea of heaven and hell is far different from traditional notions. Every man goes "to his own place" (Acts i. 27).

1. Every man has his own place in this world and the next.

2. Every man makes his own place, both here and there.

3. Every man finds his own place, if not always here, certainly there.

4. Every man feels it to be his own place when he gets there.

The gates of the new Jerusalem are open day and night—indeed, there being no night there, they are always open. It may be implied that there is nothing to prevent anyone going out who wishes, or coming in who wishes. It is a question of affinity. The tortures of Regulus were due to an "open eye and pure glory," and no sinner could confront with an unchanged heart the purity and glory of God. Heaven is the sum of all obedient being, with no admixture of evil. Hell the sum of all lawlessness, with no admixture of good. Both have their forecasts here, only that here is a mixed society. No sublimer conception fills the Word of God than that of the New Jerusalem. Its gates opening to the four points of the compass, because it makes no difference whence you start, if the whither is toward God and holiness. There is gold, but it is a pavement to walk on, not an idol to be worshipped. The glory of God is the light of it, not the glory of man. And it is of such a nature that, however free to all who desire to be there, no unregenerate soul would, or could, walk in the light of it. Regeneration is an absolute necessity of residence there.

"The East and the West."

BEYOND all comparison, the most important of all enterprises is the missionary enterprise, and there are no questions which so imperatively and urgently demand the consideration of all lovers of God and of their fellow-men as those which arise out of the endeavour to obey our Lord's command, to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts has added to our missionary literature THE EAST AND THE WEST, a Quarterly Review for the Study of Missions. It emanates, indeed, from a more "churchy" organization than the C.M.S., but the two numbers as yet published are a useful contribution to the subject they discuss, and their tone is, in the main, fair, courteous, and thorough. In the first article of the second number, Dr. Lefroy, Bishop of Lahore, lays before us "The Moral Tone of India," from which we quote as follows:—

Few, I suppose, with any wide experience of Indian life, would hesitate to name as the defect which strikes one most painfully, which permeates most widely through, and most fatally corrupts, their life, the want of faith—of faith in man as man, the want of trust, whether of trustfulness or trustworthiness—the atmosphere of suspicion and mistrust on the one hand, with their invariable correlatives of deceit, falsehood, and untrustworthiness on the other, which so broods over the land. This it is which, amongst much that is good and worthy of our own imitation in Indian character, constitutes the most formidable obstacle in the way of all attempts, whether of the Government or of the missionary, to raise the inhabitants of India to a higher life.

But so far from this low moral tone being considered a discouragement, the Bishop arrives at this conclusion:—

What by the very nature of the case can so meet their need as the revelation of the God-man? They have lost faith in man as man, because they have lost faith in God, the Creator and original of man, the One in whose image man was created, and whose holiness, purity, and truth at once assure us of the reality of these; and constitute the everlasting guarantee that man, corrupted, imperfect, unworthy as he so often is, has yet another possibility open to him, a higher, a truer, a more congenial nature to which he is truly heir. And how is that faith to be revived but by their eyes being open to behold the WORD, "who was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we behold His glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth"? Through touch with that perfectly human life, they can be led as in no other way to the perfectly Divine life in all its fulness of grace and truth.

The other articles deal with the Reform of Mohammedan Education, the Function of the Colonial Churches in Missionary Expansion, and Men and Money in the East and in the West.

SUNDAY, May 24. Psa. vi.

Answered Prayer.

THIS is the first of the Penitential Psalms, the other six being xxxii. xxxviii. li. cii. cxxx. and cxliii. Its language, one commentator says, well befits the life of a penitent, for it expresses at once the sorrow (3, 6, 7), the humiliation (2, 4), and the hatred of sin (8), which are the unfailing marks of the contrite spirit, when it turns to God. The Psalm falls naturally into two divisions. The prayer of one in great distress (1-7); and the confidence of one who knows that God has heard his prayer, and delivered him.

1-7. We all need rebuke. "Corn is cleansed by wind, and the soul by chastenings." The most cogent argument with God is our weakness. Not our goodness, nor our greatness, nor our services; but our nothingness—"for I am weak." The original may be rendered, "I am one that droops." That exclamation, "Lord, how long?" was a favourite one with Calvin; and is not this also the cry of the saints under the altar (Rev. vi.)? "For mercy's sake!" What an argument is here! It would seem that the Psalmist was suffering from some sore physical disease, which brought him within measurable distance of death, and along with this was the reproach of his enemies, whose accusations may not have been wholly undeserved. Are we in such a plight? Then let us throw ourselves on the mercies of our God.

8-10. Whilst he was in prayer, he knew that he had been heard. Weeping speaks more eloquently to God than rhetoric. There is a voice in our tears. When you cannot speak, be still before God. As there are songs, so there are prayers without words.

MONDAY, May 25. Psalm vii.

A Vision of Judgment.

1, 2. The appeal of the harried soul. Here is a picture from David's shepherd-life. The lion has pounced on the defenceless lamb, rending it in pieces, tearing it limb from limb, because there is no shepherd there; and the Psalmist pleads that God would never permit his enemies to treat him thus. Slander spares none of us. The evil hate the good, and will gladly take occasion to blacken their good name.

3-5. A protestation of innocence. If this Psalm was occasioned by the calumnies and misrepresentations of some slanderer of David, in the court of Saul, there was a ready answer, for twice he had spared the king's life, once in the cave of Adullam, and again when he discovered him in the midst of the slumbering camp. It was with a clear conscience, therefore, that he made this appeal.

6, 7. Prayer that God would resume his place on the judgment-throne. To the wounded heart of the sufferer, using a bold image, it seemed as if the Judge of all were asleep. God never slumbers, though as we see the licence granted to the wicked, it sometimes appears as if it were so. Come again to thy throne, O Judge of all, so will Thy saints come to it with their complaints, and presently with songs.

8-13. The answered petition. According to the faith of the Psalmist, his prayer is answered, and it seems as though he sees God again taking His seat on His throne. The Lord shall judge His people, the wickedness of the wicked comes to an end, and the just are established.

14-16. The fate of the slanderer. His sin is clearly proved. He is in pain until his evil plot is hatched out; it is through collusion with Satan that he has spoken; he has dug ditches for the righteous. But like Haman he is hanged on the gallows prepared for Mordecai, whilst (17) the righteous one breaks out into praise.

TUESDAY, May 26. Psalm viii.

Man, God's Viceroy.

This Psalm is founded on Gen. i. 26-28. Man is only a little lower than the angels (than God, for such is the R.V. Heb. Elohim). Small though he is in size, he is akin to the Maker of all things. The babe may be but a span long—a mite, indeed, compared to the palace into which he is born; but the monarch would rather let fifty palaces be burned to the ground than that his child should perish. Bigness is not greatness. On the one hand, we may well exclaim with David: "What is man . . . that thou visitest him?" But the worth of man has been attested, and that question answered for ever, in the Incarnation and Death of the Son of God, that He might lift man back to God. However insignificant he may seem in the scale of creation, he is the object of God's most stupendous sacrifice. God could create worlds by a word; He could only redeem man by blood.

We may well affirm, with the writer to the Hebrews, that as yet all things are not put under man (Heb. ii. 8). The crown rolled from our brow, the sceptre was taken out of our grasp—by our sin. So long as man was right with God, he could rule all creatures (Gen. ii. 19); but when he fell, they broke out in insurrection. But in Jesus that power was restored. He is exalted to universal supremacy; and we in Him regain something of the olden power, and shall get it all back again one day, for He hath made us kings.

WEDNESDAY, May 27. Psalm ix.

A Lyric of Triumph.

This and the next Psalm form one acrostic. The initial letters of the verses follow the order of the alphabet. The Chaldee paraphrase heads it, "Concerning the Death of the Champion that went out between the Camps," referring probably to Goliath of Gath, or some other champion. May we not specially refer it to that victory over evil which, in a measure, is granted to each of the saints, and will be won ultimately, by the Son of God? Dr. Bonar calls attention to the Psalmist's reverence for the beloved Name, which was on his lips in the previous Psalm, and the fragrance of which was still lingering on the air.

1-6. Jubilant thanksgiving.—Oh that our lips were more full of songs like this! We are ready enough to murmur and complain, but how slow to worship and adore! Why are our hearts so joyless, and our tongues so laggard? "The sailors give a cheery cry as they weigh anchor; the ploughman whistles in the morning as he drives his team; the milkmaid sings her rustic song as she sets to her early task; the soldiers march out to a lively air. A praising spirit would do for us what their songs do for them. As the evil spirit of Saul yielded to the music of David's harp, so would melancholy and temptation flee before a praising soul."

7-12. Glad confidence for the future.—Let us learn to know God's Name, i.e., His character and attributes. Nothing so kindles trust as this. Before we realize it, hope revives when God's character looms in view.

13-20. A rehearsal of the ode.—Again the song for past mercy (15, 16); again the declaration of trust in future justice (17, 18); and the closing prayer (19, 20). Let us raise our hosannas also; we may be afflicted, helpless, and impoverished, but God will silence our adversaries.

THURSDAY, May 28. Psalm x.

The Cry of the Oppressed.

1-11. The character of the oppressor is described in very graphic and powerful language, and the accusation divides itself into two very distinct charges—pride and tyranny, arising from his atheism. All his thoughts are, "There is no God" (4, R.V.). The ways of a wicked man are grievous to himself. God in mercy makes them rough, and hedges them with thorns; and to others they are very vexatious. He has no eye for God's judgments, and sneers at men. He counts himself a privileged man who has secured immunity from alarm and overthrow. Listen to his words (7); mark his cowardly ways (8); notice how he lies in wait as a lion (9). And in all his ways he imagines that God will soon forget (11).

In verse 12, the cry of the first verse breaks out with a clearer utterance and vehemence. The suppliant turns from his tyrant oppressor to the Father's heart. "Forget us not!" we cry—as though God could forget!

13-18. What an infinite comfort it is to turn from the lawlessness and oppression of the wicked to our King. The reign of evil is only for a time. The eternal years are full of righteousness and peace. The heathen will perish out of His land (16, R.V. marg.). Men of the earth, earthy, will be terrible no more. The misunderstandings, strife, and bickerings of God's people will come to a perpetual end. The fatherless and widow will no longer weep fruitless tears, and be trodden under foot. No! earth's sad history shall be as a bad dream of the night! There is an inevitable Nemesis for evil, and a compensation for the righteous. Meanwhile, commit yourself to God (14).

FRIDAY, May 29. Psalm xi.

The Song of the Upright.

The wicked shoot at the upright, but the upright behold the face of God (2, 7). In verses 1, 2, 3 we have the challenge of the wicked; in 4, 5, 6, the answer.

Charles Simeon summarises this Psalm thus:—"The Psalms are a rich repository of experimental knowledge. David, at different periods of his life, was placed in almost every situation in which a believer, whether rich or poor, can be placed; and in these heavenly compositions he delineates all the workings of his heart. He introduces, also, the sentiments and conduct of the various persons who were necessary either to his troubles or his joys; and thus sets before us a compendium of all that is passing in the hearts of men throughout the world. When he penned this Psalm, he was under persecution from Saul, who sought his life, and hunted him 'as a partridge upon the mountains.' His timid friends were alarmed for his safety, and recommended him to flee to some hiding place, and thus conceal himself from the rage of his persecutors. But, being strong in faith, he spurned the idea of resorting to any such expedients, and determined confidently to repose his trust in God."

Notice, also, the invincible faith of the Psalmist, that the righteous God will sooner or later vindicate the righteous. However long the wicked may seem to prosper, their end is as sure as it will be terrible; and all through the fiery trial, the eyes of their Almighty Friend will never for a moment be taken off His own. The whole Psalm is a remarkable parallel to the deliverance of Lot from Sodom, when the Lord rained brimstone and fire out of heaven, but "delivered just Lot."

SATURDAY, May 30. Psalm xii.

God's Words against False Ones.

Notice the repeated allusions to speech. "They speak falsehood" (2); "flattering lips" (2, 3); "with our tongue will we prevail" (4); the words of the Lord (6).

Help, Lord! is a useful little prayer, which we can dart up to heaven in every moment of our need. "As small ships can sail into harbours, which larger vessels, drawing more water, cannot enter, so our brief cries and short petitions may trade with heaven when our soul is wind-bound and business-bound as to longer exercises of devotion, and when the stream of grace seems at too low an ebb to float a more laborious supplication."

In every age God's servants have ceased, who were the pillars of His Church, and the faithful have passed away to their reward; but God has always raised up godly and faithful men to take their place.

How much sin is due to the tongue? Men speak falsely, they flatter, their words issue from a double heart, they boast with swelling words of vanity, and lord it over the poor. But their words have an end, as the waves are broken into spray, when they fling themselves upon the rocks.

What a contrast between the vain words of men, and the pure words of Jehovah! "These are yea and nay, His are yea and amen." How true it is that the Bible has passed through the furnace, not seven times, but seventy times, and has lost nothing! Rest yourselves on those precious and tried words, which have been tested by the saints in all ages. Thou shalt be kept, thou shalt be preserved for ever, thou shalt be set in the safety after which thou pantest (5, R.V., marg.).

Home Missions.

The Bridge of Hope.

"WHAT shall I send you for Christmas?" said a kind lady to the little ones in one of my cottages at Chingford, naturally thinking the answer would be "Dollies," or "Chocolates;" but a sweet, fair, gentle little mite looked up and said, with all the earnest gravity of five years old, "I should like some gin"! I had taken the little one from her father, with his promise to help pay for her support, endorsed by his employers, because strong drink had enchained her mother; and, forgetting husband and babes, she had disappeared, broken all holy ties, and lost herself in the vortex of London misery. Did we not believe that God's grace is stronger than any hereditary tendency, we could not go on with our work among these little waifs.

A MOTHERLESS MITE.

Last week a motherless mite was brought to our door, pale and drooping as a little snowdrop, and so thin and barely clad, it made my heart ache. Left by her father, on his wife's death, with a neighbour, and £3 for her maintenance, he went to sea, never returned, or at least, never returned to his child; and she grew up to six years old in an underground kitchen, hidden away and half starved, till the neighbours heard of it, and cried shame; and then the little half-dazed creature was stood out alone on the pavement of a London street, and there left till a good woman brought her to us. She could scarcely speak, and would eat no food unless she might run away with it to munch alone in some dark corner of the room. She laughs now and plays, and is beginning to learn a few words. And this "little sister" of ours, our little "neighbour," was born in Christian England, in the richest city in the world. Is it credible?

"Oh, please take me in; I've nowhere to go, my uncle says I must not stay with him, and he's all I've got," said a pretty, fair child of sixteen on our doorstep. Oh, how many a mother, if the child had been hers, would have revelled in that pretty hair, and answered lovingly to that sweet little gentle voice! But "her mother had never been no good to her"—worse than that, we should say; and what with life in and out the public-houses, and even worse resorts, the child had had no chance in life. It was all true; the uncle, living alone in a room some eight feet square, said he could keep her no longer, "the neighbours were beginning to talk." It is for such as she, that our doors are always open. Of course we took her in, and naughty as she is, with all this terrible knowledge of evil at sixteen, by God's help we may make a good woman of her yet.

Again (all within the last few days), a man who had recently lost his wife, and who was left with six little ones, was told he might bring to us a feeble, sickly baby of three and a half years old, the youngest but one. She could not walk, and was about the size of a normal baby of eight months, but wonderfully quick and intelligent, as such children often are. "She only wants milk and fresh air," the doctor said; but in a room over a mews, with a father earning a pound a week, a motherless bairn has but a small chance. He has to pay for her 2s. 6d. a week, and he means to do it, for the broken-hearted man has a very tender place in his heart for his children; but how it is to be screwed out of twenty shillings a week is a mystery to me.

SURVIVAL OF THE UNFITTEST.

We hear a great deal sometimes about the survival of the fittest; we see a great deal of the survival of the unfittest. We read in the Book we love and reverence beyond all others, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

"You only see the seamy side of life, yours is such sad work," people often say. Granted, in one aspect—yes, the saddest, dreariest, possible work, but there is another side. Scarcely a day passes but we can thank God for another unexpected blessing—a re-appearance of one we had lost sight of, come back to thank us for the almost forgotten help when life prospects were at their lowest ebb—a loving letter from a happy woman, who was once one of our saddest little children; or, again, a mother and father come, hardly able to express in words their gratitude for the loving care bestowed on the once wayward girl, now their joy and crown. We need never cease from telling such stories. Life has its compensations.

This is the twenty-fifth year of our work in Ratcliff Highway. The work is as quiet and as continuous and, I believe, as much blest as ever it was; but we live as the birds do, scarcely ever knowing where next week's food is to come from. It is the desire of my heart and the earnest hope of some of my friends that this year may see the buying in of the last two of our Chingford cottages, that we may no longer bear the burden of the yearly rental. Will some wealthy friends remember this very reasonable desire? May God incline some hearts to help us for the sake of His little ones for whose welfare we gladly labour, year in and year out, as He gives us strength.

Work Among Sailors.

THE visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the East End during the present week, to open the new Sailors' Palace at Limehouse, may remind us that the story of the rise and growth of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society is a romance of real life in connection with the Port of London. Our amazing capital is the greatest port in the world; and the changes which have taken place in fifty years, through steam superseding sails, represent one of the most striking revolutions of modern times. One large vessel of to-day carries a cargo which would have freighted quite a fleet of the smaller vessels of other days. Thus, Christian work among sailors in our own and foreign ports has to be carried on under conditions different from those which obtained in the past, but the urgent need of active and extended service still remains.

When the work among sailors was commenced in the Thames eighty-five years ago, all seamen, whether home-born or foreigners, were alike considered to be past hope. Abroad, the English were regarded as agents of corruption; in home ports, landsharks looked upon them as common prey, and not seldom stripped them of several years' earnings at one haul. It was said by one writer in the time of the early Georges: "In a man-of-war you have the collected filth of gaols; condemned criminals have the alternative of hanging or of entering on board."

Happily there were earnest Christian people who saw that such a state of things was not only a disgrace but a peril to the country. Among these were some who had actually been sea adventurers, including John Newton, vicar of St. Mary Woolnoth, London; Captain Joss, associate and helper of Whitefield; and Samuel Medley, of Liverpool. In due time, such a strange innovation as prayer-meetings for seamen on the Thames began to be heard of; and, soon after, Rowland Hill preached the opening sermon in the first Bethel that had ever hoisted its flag in our great port.

From that day the work grew, and gradually extended over the world. The Angas family, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, especially distinguished themselves in promoting the cause; and the present chief representative of that family, the Hon. J. H. Angas, of South Australia, is now President of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. His relative, Captain William H. Angas, turned his back on the most alluring worldly prospects to become the first unpaid missionary to sailors. He was moved by rare enthusiasm for the cause to which he had set his hand. His belief was that if ten righteous men might have saved a city, one praying soul might save a ship. "Let us give them the Gospel," he said. "A Christian with the Gospel is like a sailor with his money—he deals it out freely." The mariner follows the most dangerous of callings. An average of about six British sailors a day are drowned; and the annual total for the world would be something like 5,000.

For the first time in its history, the British and Foreign Sailors' Society will have its headquarters on a freehold site, and in an eligible and commanding site which will enable the Directors to extend their operations on every hand. The erection of such a building as the Prince of Wales has opened, is a new era of hope for the Port of London; and of course, the good influence will extend to other ports where Bethels or sailors' rests already exist, or are in course of erection. Much of the success won has been owing, through God's blessing, to the hard work and perseverance of Mr. Matthews, the secretary, who was converted in Egypt at the Alexandra Bethel in 1864. Mr. Matthews has held the office of secretary for twenty-five years; for some years previously he held the Society's chaplaincy at Antwerp.

The erection of so fine a building as Jack's Palace, as some people familiarly call it, is a great achievement, and the place seems destined to become the headquarters of an extensive and far-reaching work. Religious services and the preaching of the Gospel will continue to be a leading feature of the service carried on. There will be forty beds for the accommodation of mariners coming into the Port of London, and also a nautical school, which will no doubt do a work of national importance. This is to be named after King Edward VII., while an addition to the building, which was not at first contemplated, will be called the Alexandra Wing, after the Queen. G. H. P.

On the Blackdown Hills.

FOR forty years the Lord's servants have laboured on the Blackdown Hills, with no little success. The soil has borne repeated harvests, and it is still under Divine culture. Precious seed is yet being patiently sown, and fruit is being "gathered unto life eternal." Of late, many souls have been saved. The ploughing and the sowing are continued without ceasing all over the district. But often "the strength of the bearers of burdens" is diminished through lack of sympathy and support. Shall they be left to struggle on in loneliness without help, and sink disheartened and depressed when they might be easily cheered and succoured?

The meetings for Gospel preaching and teaching in the seven mission rooms on the Hills are continually carried on; and the visiting the houses of the people, and day and Sunday-school work, give the labourers in the field ample scope for heavenly energy and bodily exercise. There is great need of a new mission room at Stapley, the present building being very old and entirely unsuitable. Towards the £230 needed, we have received in gifts or promises about £130; and we are very desirous of obtaining the remaining £100, that it may be built this summer—and opened free of debt as all the other buildings have hitherto been.

Much help is required for the General Fund, which covers the entire or partial support of evangelists and helpers, horse-hire (an expensive item), rent and repairs to buildings and premises, and gifts to the sick and poor. Extensive repairs and alterations have been called for at the schools and mission house at Bishopswood, as well as many necessary repairs at some of the other mission stations. To meet these, about £100 will probably be needed.

During the past winter we have had very much to cheer and encourage us from a spiritual point of view. Many souls have been led to yield themselves to the Lord Jesus Christ. Just before Easter my wife and I spent a week at Clayhidon, where we witnessed much rejoicing over young men and women who have recently been saved.

Other Lands.

Among Jews in Russia.—1.

FEW in England know much of Wilna but the name: yet it is one of the interesting cities of Europe. Its history goes back to the earliest times, when it was a centre of heathen worship. In 1386, the King of Poland introduced Christianity, and built a Cathedral in place of the principal heathen temple. Since then Wilna has had a chequered history, being a point of conflict between German knights, Russians, and Tartars. In the Polish wars it was stoutly defended, and Napoleon made it the centre of his plan of attack.

Picturesquely placed in wooded and undulating country, it is now a busy growing town of more than 160,000 inhabitants. These are made up mostly of Russians, Poles, Germans and Jews. Religion and race distinguish them strongly. An orthodox archbishop is the spiritual head of the Russians; a Catholic Bishop of the Poles; the Germans have their interesting church built in 1555; while Talmudic Judaism may be said to have its headquarters here.

Wilna has its earnest Christians, too, and its friends of Israel. The Governor is himself a warm-hearted Evangelical Christian, who has been at a Mildmay Conference; Pastor Liess, of the Lutheran Church, has taken up the cause of Jewish mission work; Professor von Berg gives time and talent and influence to the same effort. The British Jews' Society is represented by Dr. Frohwein, an excellent man and missionary; and the Mildmay Mission to the Jews by Messrs. Nelom and Salzberg, who take charge of a Scripture depôt; and dear old Dr. Althausen, now retired from active work of any kind, waiting, at eighty-four years of age, for the home-call.

The work of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews in Russia was commenced here. On March 15, 1888, the first depôt for the distribution of New Testaments was opened. It now occupies commodious premises in the Cannaja Street, and is daily attended by Jews, many of whom have read the New Testament, but who attend for conversation and inquiry.

Entering the depôt recently, I found some fresh faces, and addressing one, asked him how he stood towards the Lord Jesus. "I hold Him to be the Prophet like unto Moses" was the reply. This man first heard the truth in London years ago; but since his return to Russia had yielded to Christ, and been baptized into His Name. He asks for prayer for his wife. Addressing another, I asked a similar question, and the reply in this case was "He has saved me." The speaker this time was not a baptized man, but hopes soon to confess his faith openly.

We had a very interesting and blessed meeting also, in the schoolroom of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. It was representative of the best Christian element in Wilna, several Jews also being present, and as I spoke for an hour on the cause of Israel, I felt that the meeting implied the growing interest of God's children here in the spiritual welfare of their 00,000 Jewish fellow citizens. The Lord was present to help, and a collection was taken for the benefit of the depôt work in Wilna.

Missionary Exhibition. — In the hope of drawing attention to the question of the health of such as labour in the tropics, particularly missionaries, an exhibition was organized a few days ago by the authorities of Livingstone College. Dr. L. W. Sambon delivered an address on the diseases of the tropics. Dr. C. F. Harford, the principal of the College, expressed regret that the Government has not shown greater interest in the progress of medical science in relation to tropical diseases. In the course of the day there were demonstrations on the preservation of health in unhealthy climates, and numerous specialties in missionaries outfits were exhibited, and the many-sided work of the College illustrated.

The Children of India.

THE Society for the Protection of Children in India has just held its annual meeting in Calcutta. The Hon. Justice Pratt presided, and Mr. Summers, the secretary, read an encouraging report. Lady Curzon and some others in high position have begun to contribute to the Society's funds.

The misconception that there is an intention to interfere between parents and children is passing away. One well-known Hindu gentleman has joined the committee, and a Mohammedan and a Hindu were among the speakers at the meeting. At the same time, occasions have arisen when a child has had to be protected from its mother. Thus a female employée in a hospital had so grievously kicked her little son of two and a half years that he was taken as a patient. The mother demanded his discharge. The doctor said it would endanger his life. She commenced legal proceedings, when the secretary's aid was invoked. He succeeded, after warning, in bringing the mother to her senses, and so saved her from imprisonment, and secured hospital treatment for the child. The above facts are noted in a lengthened report of the meeting in the Calcutta Englishman.

Many cases have been successfully cared for, and the children placed in institutions appropriate to the creed of the guardians. This is facilitated for the present by the existence of two orphanages, one maintained by Hindus, and the other by Mohammedans. Hitherto the majority of the cases have been those of girls exposed to evil surroundings. It has been discovered that there is a regular system of slavery by which girls, many of them infants, are being obtained and brought up to an evil life. In eleven consecutive houses in one small street, twelve little girls were found, being prepared for a life of shame. Their rescue, though at present peculiarly difficult from the state of the law, has been successfully accomplished in a few cases. Government is being extensively memorialized on the subject.

Interest in the Society's operations is spreading to distant towns, and the need for the organization is being more widely acknowledged. It is now hoped that several representative men will join the committee, and give their advice and countenance. Public opinion has already been affected in the right direction, and with continued patience and judicious enthusiasm, the Society may be placed on a permanent basis. The call, therefore, for extended sympathy and financial help from this country is still urgent.

Opportunities in Hankow.

WRITING from Hanyang, Hankow, Dr. G. A. HUNTLEY speaks in hopeful terms of the work maintained there under the auspices of the Baptist Medical Mission.

In the outpatient department we have received 5,012 visits, and 132 have been treated in the little native shanty we call a hospital, while many others have received attention in their homes. We have had wonderful opportunities of preaching the Gospel daily in both departments, though our best work along spiritual lines has been done in the hospital. Here we have continued our readings on the Life of our Lord—a series of thirty lessons which are covered in a month—so that a patient who is with us for that length of time gets a comprehensive view of the Gospel narrative and teaching. In addition to the daily readings, we also give magic lantern exhibitions of pictures, illustrating the Scriptures studied. Thus through eye-gate as well as through ear-gate we seek to lead the patient into the Kingdom. There is an eagerness to learn the truth which we have not experienced before, and our hearts are rejoiced as we see some definitely accepting Christ, and others entering their names as inquirers.

Dr. Huntley and his helpers are desirous of raising a sum of £1,000 for the erection of a permanent hospital, to take the place of the rude structure which now serves that purpose. He is the only physician in this city of a quarter of a million.

Who are the Gideons?

THE Gideons are an organization of Christian commercial men whose rise and development in the United States is a story of quite recent years. They are banded together "to recognise the Christian travelling men of the world with cordial Christian fellowship; to encourage each other in the Master's work; to improve every opportunity for the betterment of the lives of their fellow-travellers, business-men, and others with whom they may come in contact." In a word, the Gideons scatter along the pathway of life and duty the seeds of Christ's Kingdom. They are members of various Evangelical churches.

The movement was born in a special providence. At an hotel in a little town in Wisconsin, about three years ago, two commercial travellers, entire strangers to each other, owing to the crowded state of the house mutually agreed to occupy the same room. Just before retiring, one of the men produced a Bible which he began silently to read. The other man, having discovered what his roommate was engaged in, said, "I thank the Lord that I have fallen in company with one who is evidently a Christian, and I suggest that you read aloud, and that we have a season of prayer together." The man gladly complied, and after reading, they bowed together and had blessed communion with God.

These two travellers were no longer strangers; through the instrumentality of God's Word and their meeting before the throne of grace, they had been drawn together into the sweetest and most enduring fellowship on earth. Recognizing what a blessing this recognition of kindred interest had been to them, they thought a plan could be devised whereby all Christian travellers might be able to recognize one another for mutual helpfulness in the service of Christ.

Hence the Gideon organization, which was formed on July 1, 1899, by three men; but to-day it has a membership of about 2,500, and promises to become a great and efficient agency for good. Chicago Camp No. 1 has a membership of 300.

As a means of recognition, each Gideon wears upon his coat lapel a gold-plated button, bearing the design of a white enamelled pitcher with a blue background. From the mouth of the pitcher shines the golden flame of a lamp. The men are all travelling evangelists, each one standing in his allotted place, ready and glad to witness for his Lord. Many of them have had most remarkable conversions. Each Lord's day the Chicago Gideons have entire charge of the services in one or more churches in that city. This form of service was not of their seeking, for they are not preachers or orators; but the pastors and leading laymen speedily recognised the efficiency of their work, and invited them to become active heralds of the King's message to their fellow-men.

Mr. Fred Woodcock, secretary of the Chicago Camp of Gideons No. 1, hopes to visit England at the beginning of June, and to have the privilege of organizing a "camp" in London. Letters to him may be addressed 42, Anson Road, Tufnell Park, N.

In the Orange River Colony.

IN a recent communication, Mr. PERCY H. BATEMAN tells of much encouragement in the work with which he is connected in the Orange River Colony. He says: "God has been and is blessing us. Our house is full every Sunday, and all classes, high and low, hear the Gospel. It is wonderful where the people come from. They all seem to enjoy the plain message of the Word. Roman Catholics, Anglicans, and members of all denominations attend, and many tokens of blessing received are given us; yet it is Christ alone who is proclaimed.

"The work among the natives, too, is going on well. We have now a faithful native evangelist and schoolmaster. He has a record of twenty years' consistent life and service. Pray much for this land. Many out here are crying to God day by day, 'Wilt Thou not revive us again, that Thy people may rejoice in Thee?'"

The Bedouin Mission.

In our issue of last week some account was given of the meeting at which Mr. Archibald Forder was bidden God-speed on his return to the East to work among the Bedouin Arabs. It is a pleasure now to give more particulars of the Mission.

While missionary zeal has been advancing the Kingdom of Christ in almost every part of the habitable globe, the plains of the vast Arabian peninsula (nearly twenty-five times the size of England, and with a population more than twice that of Canada) are still without a single missionary of the Gospel. There are two worthy workers in Aden, but that is British territory, and there is another established upon one of the islands in the Persian Gulf.

"The desert of the sea," as Isaiah calls it, is, however, entirely neglected. It was in this dry and thirsty land that Mohammedanism was born. The religion of the False Prophet went forth from this land to conquer the nations of the world, and to-day it holds sway over millions of mankind. Leaning upon the promise of Jehovah that "they that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before Him," the Bedouin Mission has been formed for the definite purpose of reaching some of Arabia's millions, and telling them of the True Prophet. The methods to be adopted by the Mission will be such as years of experience have proved to be best.

The Bedouin of Arabia are constantly on the move, and many thousands visit Jerusalem to buy and sell. Here they are often cruelly robbed and ill-treated. The Mission intends to protect them and give them safe shelter in its Caravansary, which will be in charge of Rev. J. Rose, an experienced Arabic-speaking missionary. These Bedouin will go back to their encampments and deserts, with hearts warmed towards their Christian friends, and right gladly will they welcome, feed, and shelter the missionary who goes to them in their tents, and to their stay-at-home brethren in the desert cities. This is the work which the Holy Spirit seems to have clearly marked out for Mr. Archibald Forder, and past experience has taught him how deep is the sense of indebtedness felt by the desert men for kindness shown them in cities where they have been helped and befriended by the Christian.

At the farewell meeting already referred to, Mr. Forder said he believed in prayer because it had played such an important part in his life. It was in answer to his mother's prayers during many years that he was led to give himself to the Lord, and it was in answer to prayer that he himself was sent to the mission field to work among the Arabs East of the Jordan. He owed the measure of success God had given him, and many remarkable escapes and deliverances from death, to the daily striving in prayer of some of God's people; and he was convinced that if such would strive in prayer about this mission to the Arabs, God would give evidence of His approval of the work, and send in money needed to establish and carry it on.

Mr. Forder then spoke of the two-fold work of the Bedouin Mission; first that in Jerusalem, where it was proposed to build the Caravansary or shelter for the protection of the Bedouin Arabs that come from the region east of the Jordan. The place would be a simple, plain building to which the Arabs could come and find shelter and protection from the violence and robbery of the soldiers. Whilst there, they will be spoken to about the Saviour, given or sold copies of the Scriptures; then, going back to their own people, they will unconsciously open the way for the Gospel by telling how they had been treated by the Christians in Jerusalem. Said Mr. Forder, I believe that one way to break down the opposition and misunderstanding of the Moslems as to the Christian religion, will be to show them that there is something practical in it, and the proposed Caravansary will be one means of doing this.

Until the Caravansary is erected, Mr. Forder intends visiting the Jewish centres in Yemen, S.W. Arabia, for the purpose of distributing Hebrew New Testaments and Arabic Scriptures, on behalf of Rev. John Wilkinson's Mission. There are difficulties to be met and obstructions to be overcome. The hard-hearted Jew and the fanatical Arab will have to be faced. The journeys across the mountains and deserts are realities to be considered. Past experiences encouraged Mr. Forder to set out, believing that God would open the way and break down the bars of brass.

In answer to prayer it has become possible to circulate and proclaim the Gospel in Arabia. On all sides the land is being assailed by the missionary, and the prayers of Christian people will go a long way towards fulfilling "Oh that Ishmael might live before Thee!" In conclusion, Mr. Forder referred to prophecies about the participation of the Arabs in the Gospel (Psa. lxxii, 8, 9, 10, Isa. xlii. 11, and lx. 6, 7), which should encourage all to pray and work for these needy millions of Arabia.

"THE STONE MISSED ME."

The accompanying illustration reproduces a scene which is thus described by Mr. Forder in his book, "With the Arabs in Tent and Town." (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

"We were going along the eastern shore of the Dead Sea, and came to a tiny stream of fresh water, where we determined to camp as the sun was about setting. The place was very stony, and not such a one as we generally choose, preferring, if possible, open ground, so that anyone or anything can be seen approaching; but as there was no water ahead of us, we had to stay there or go thirsty. We had our supper, and put the nosebags on the horses, but noticed that they did not eat. . . Old Salem said to me, 'The animals are restless, and cannot eat their suppers.' Time passed, and still our patient steeds remained supperless, but not motionless. With their ears pricked up, and their heads well lifted, they were keeping a sharp look-out ahead of them, first in one direction and then in another—turning this way, and then that. Their behaviour told my experienced old Arab that somebody besides ourselves was about, and the horses could see them moving about, although it was dark. This was causing their restlessness and abstinence from their suppers.

"We all made up our minds to sit and watch; but, weary with a long day's ride, I soon fell asleep under the cover of a great boulder. It was about midnight, and I was lying half awake and half asleep, when almost together, within a few moments of each other, the horses whinnied, and old Salem called to me, 'Get up, quick!' Up I jumped, and on looking out I saw three men running away as hard as they could go. They had crept up to us under cover of the large stones, no doubt thinking we were all asleep. But the horses saw the nearest one, and gave Salem the alarm. He saw the nearest one standing over me with a huge stone in his hands that any moment might have been dropped on my head, and so have killed me. Jumping up quickly, the stone missed me, the men making off on finding that they were discovered."

Rev. James Rose, missionary-designate to the Jerusalem Caravansary, is prepared to give lectures, Sunday-school and other addresses, dealing with missionary work among the Arabs. Particulars may be had at the office of the Mission, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

Movements in Canada.

THE Dominion Parliament now in session has passed a law prohibiting the manufacture as well as sale of cigarettes. The matter was forced to an issue chiefly through a monster petition from the Women's Temperance Union, whose members have been long engaged in an active crusade against the evil, which has been greatly increased during recent years. The measure was carried by a large vote.

The great Prohibition majority in the Province of Ontario, numbering nearly 100,000, has unfortunately been lost sight of by reason of a grave political scandal in the Legislature which is now being investigated. But for this, legislation would probably now be before the House, since Premier Ross has declared that so large a Prohibition vote cannot be ignored. In Manitoba, and other provinces, candidates definitely pledged to prohibitory legislation are being placed in the field.

Sunday Observance has received a fresh impetus by the appointment of a second field secretary. The Lord's Day Alliance is organizing branches all over the dominion, and reports one of the best years of its history. A strict watch is kept against infraction of present law, while earnest efforts are made to further legislation favourable to this day.

The churches are all turning attention to the rapidly-growing West. Immigration is now exceeding all previous records, and thousands of settlers are pouring into Western Canada. Present railway transportations are inadequate, more particularly for export, and the Grand Trunk Railway is planning a great transcontinental line, which will prove an incalculable factor in the development of the country. All these facts are bestirring the churches to respond to the religious needs, which become increasingly great.

On the Nepal Frontier.—Mr. Jai Bhai writes to the effect that £113 has been received out of the £266 required for the property which it is hoped to secure for a Mission House and Church. He adds: "God is overruling all, and what at first we regarded as a calamity (being turned out of house and home), is proving itself a blessing. We had not a rupee when we started praying for this money. Nearly all of the help has been sent by a few native Indian Christians. We have just finished a four months' preaching tour, and before this reaches you hope to be on the frontier of Nepal for a month's preaching. Mrs. Paynter and Miss Grace Sarkar hope to get into Nepal itself. I am not allowed in."

China Inland Mission.

THE fact that for the third year in succession the China Inland Mission has had the sad honour of adding names to the martyr roll of the Church of Christ, lent a chastened tone to the celebration of the 37th anniversary, on Tuesday of last week, at Exeter Hall. The terrible Boxer rising is happily a thing of the past; yet fanatical superstition is so strong that J. R. Bruce and R. H. Lowis were called last August to yield up their lives before the fury of the heathen. At the same time there had been manifest deliverances, and the servants of God had been shielded from many dangers.

After the proceedings had been opened by the reading of Scripture by Mr. ROBERT SCOTT (treasurer), and prayer led by Mr. T. B. MILLER, the chairman (Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS), described the past year as one of exceptional pressure in China. He spoke with the deepest sympathy of the suffering of the native Christians, yet pointing out the wonderful way in which the power of God had been manifested in the causing of His people to rejoice in the midst of the greatest perplexity.

The home director and chairman of the mission (Mr. THEODORE HOWARD), read the following letter:—

LETTER FROM MR. HUDSON TAYLOR.

Once again we are looking forward to our annual meetings and to commencing another Mission year. Our faithful and covenant God and Father has vouchsafed many blessings during the past year, and we are thankful to you, beloved friends, for your continued help and prayerful sympathy. May He reward you for all your effort and self-denial for the good of the Mission.

Though my last visit to England, and other efforts made from time to time, have proved that I must not longer attempt any measure of the work that has been such a joy in past years, yet we have had great cause for thankfulness. We have had the pleasure of receiving visits from a number of our dear C.I.M. workers, notably among them, Mr. Frost from America, Mr. Walter Sloan, and Mr. Hoste from China.

With the concurrence of our Mission Councils in China, America and Australia, I have, after consultation with Mr. Howard and the Home Council, requested Mr. Hoste to altogether relieve me from the work of general director, and Mr. Sloan has become assistant home director. I feel very thankful to God that, when I am no longer able to bear the responsibility, He has given great unanimity of feeling, and experienced help for the future carrying on of the work. I have every reason to believe that all the various departments will be carried on prayerfully and wisely.

If spared to see the autumn of the present year, I shall look back on fifty years since I sailed from Liverpool to China, with grateful acknowledgment for all the way God has led me and for His sustaining and providing bounty, and be able to testify that in no good thing that He has ever led me from His Word to expect has He failed me.

It is a great joy to us, now that I and my dear wife are not able personally to be in the work, that several of our dear children have this privilege.

May God bless every beloved worker in the Mission, and add to their numbers such men and women as He can use and bless.

And may He bless the old friends who have stood by us these many years, and the younger ones who have filled up the ranks. How soon to all of us the time of service will have passed away, even should the Lord delay His coming. May we each be kept abiding in Him, that we be not ashamed before Him at His coming.—Yours gratefully in Him,

(Signed) J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

The report submitted by Mr. WALTER B. SLOAN called attention, among other important indications of progress, to the signing of the commercial treaty between Great Britain and China, and the opening of the Trans-Siberian Railway to regular traffic. The former of these events can hardly fail to still further open China, while the latter has brought China weeks nearer in time.

In addition to the two martyrs, nine other members have heard the home-call; and at the close of last year there were on the roll 763 missionaries. The number who proceeded to China in the twelve months was 189, of whom fifty-seven were new workers. The work of reorganization was still incomplete, but 1,016 persons had been baptized. The consular restrictions against unmarried ladies entering Shansi and Kan-suh have been removed; and in these and other provinces, fifteen stations have been opened in districts hitherto unworked.

The income in England had been £51,446 10s. 7d., being an increase of £5,053 14s. Including sums received in Canada, the United States, Australasia, China, and from the Continent of Europe, the total was £70,705 8s. 4d. All through the year, in answer to prayer, God has granted a steady inflow of money. During the months of August and September, the funds were low, well on into the month; but on each occasion before it was necessary to remit to China, a special gift of £1,000 was received, amply supplying the needs.

LIGHT AND SHADE.

As superintendent for sixteen years of the stations in the province of Gan-hwuy, Rev. J. J. COULTHARD described the varied nature of the work with its lights and shadows. At some of the stations there is much to cheer and encourage. A spirit of inquiry is abroad, and some of the chapels are filled at the Lord's Day services. In one case numerous calls come from outlying districts for workers, which cannot be responded to. At the capital, Ganking, and on the river Yang-tse-kiang, there is a decided and growing readiness to listen. The seventy-three converts baptized in 1902 brought the number since he joined the Mission up to 800.

Among difficulties to be faced special attention was called to the action of the Roman Catholic missionaries, who formerly left the Protestant workers alone. Every means is now used to obstruct and oppose Evangelical work, as well as to coerce the heathen into enrolling themselves under the banner of Rome. Many of the people are Mohammedans, who are also bitterly opposed to the Gospel.

THE DESOLATION OF HEATHENISM.

Pointing out that there are two views of the work—one man seeing the stars, the conversions, the other the mud in which the work must be done—Mrs. MONTAGU BEAUCHAMP showed how real is the mud of superstition, of fanaticism, of ignorance. Essaying to give a verbal picture of heathenism—desolate, dark, forlorn, Godless, Christless—she said her mind was full of the vast millions who have never had one chance to hear the story of the Cross. It seemed as if the voice of Jesus were still saying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"—a cry for forgiveness for the very Church of God.

No nation can rise above the level of its women: so the cheerlessness and hopelessness of a woman's life from the cradle to the grave were depicted with deep feeling. Homes and lives are alike loveless and dark.

Looking at what their religions had done for the people, Mrs. Beauchamp said they had every form of religion, and plenty of it. They want no more. Let us not think that the heathen are longing for the Gospel, that they are receiving it with open arms: yet there is a great mute cry that has gone up and entered into the ears of God. Our work is not merely to preach the Gospel; it is to open eyes that have been blinded by the god of this world, to turn the people from Satan to God. Power has been given to us over the Evil One, and God's people are sent to exercise that power. Thank God the people are coming out of darkness into light; there are open doors, doors more widely open than ever before. Every letter Mr. Beauchamp (who is now in the far west) sends home tells of those who are willing to hear.

After fourteen years spent in China, Dr. JOHN A. ANDERSON (Cheh-kiang) declared that they had been the best years of his life. He had seen what God could do not only for the Chinese but for himself. His experience had been gathered at three stations in China. He first laboured at Talifu, on the far western border of Burmah, where his heart was deeply stirred at the sight of the spiritual darkness of the Miaou and other aboriginal tribes. There he saw the triumphs of the grace of God, as well as later in the city of Chung King. He believed in the power of the Holy Ghost, which is the one power by which the work can be done in China, and he had seen some little of it. His later years had been spent with Mr. W. D. Rudland, at Tai-chau. Round that centre, where thirty-five years ago Christians could have been counted on the fingers of two hands, at least five thousand are now reckoned.

China is equal to a hundred Scotlands, and only about one of these has ever heard the Gospel. We think we have done a great deal of mission work; it seemed to him that we Christians ought to be so ashamed of ourselves that we could not face the question without praying God to forgive us.

As this is the centenary year of the British and Foreign Bible Society, Rev. JOHN SHARP (editorial superintendent) had been invited to speak on the work of Scripture circulation. He showed that from the very beginning his Society had been deeply interested in China, their first sub-committee having been appointed to deal with work there. He urged that even more attention should be paid to Bible work. Where missionaries failed, the Bible could be sent; and, with its gradual influence, it is the preparation above all others which the missionary would desire for his own proper task.

Before bringing the gathering to a close the chairman summed up the wishes of all present by sending a message of sympathetic love to Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Taylor and the members of their family.

AN APPEAL—NOT FOR MONEY.

In the evening the chair was taken by Mr. THEODORE HOWARD, who read again the letter from Mr. Hudson Taylor. He remembered, being then a lad of sixteen, the beloved head of the Mission when he went forth in 1853; and pointed out how Mr. Taylor is now known over the world as a giant in faith and a man of wondrous trust in God. If we want a living proof of the faithfulness of God we may see it in Mr. Taylor. He went in faith that God would open up the country, and God has done so.

For a time God closed the door, and no man could open it. Now God has opened the door, and no man can shut it. But are we ready to take up the cross and be followers of Jesus Christ in this way? May God send forth preachers chosen and prepared.

Others cannot tell what it means for those who passed through the tribulation to return to China. The Mission never makes a personal appeal for money; but He did make a personal appeal for help. There must be qualifications in the helpers, or their help will be of no avail. They must be those who have yielded themselves wholly to the Lord. The help should be like that of Epaphras, who "labouring always for you (the members of the China Inland Mission) in prayer that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God."

We want also to be like that marvellous helper, Epaphroditus. We cannot be all that he was, but we may be some of the things—brother, companion in labour, fellow-soldier, messenger, and minister—that the spirit which was in him may be in us; a man willing to die in the effort to supply the lack of service of those who should have done the work of ministering, and who did it not.

His experiences as he went back after the Boxer rising to Kai-feng-fu were graphically described by Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness. One man was quoted who had been baptized only one week before the riots, and had suffered terribly, who simply marvelled at the question if it was worth while to suffer in that way for Christ. He was ready to go through it all again without hesitation.

The two questions, "Where art thou?" and "Where is thy brother?" were pressed home on the audience by Miss S. E. Jones (Chehkiang). The Chinese are not waiting with open arms, but they are waiting in dense darkness. She had been strengthened by the readiness of the Christian women to go out visiting.

From the remote province of Si-chuen, Mr. Thomas James brought the message that as believers at home pray that there may be no unblest missionary, so the missionary prayer is that there may be none unblest at home. He had been astounded to find people asking him whether the Chinese were after all worth saving. Why, he asked, was it more his duty than that of any hearer to go to China?

The meeting was closed with a long-to-be-remembered address, in which Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson dealt with "The Narrow Way of Christ," notes of which will be found in another page.

Awakening in Guatemala.

THERE are signs of a general awakening in this republic, with a remarkable inquiry regarding the Gospel. Last week the large army, which had been guarding the frontiers, was disbanded, and the soldiers are at home. There was no war with this country, but a fierce revolution in Honduras. Our most faithful evangelist, Matias, went with the troops, and did good service in preaching the Gospel, distributing literature, and caring for the sick. He was treated with great consideration, and the authorities repeatedly praised him. Matias is the man who, two years ago, publicly burned his idols as a welcome to the visiting bishop of Rome, who had thrown a large package of Bibles into Lake Atitlan, near here.

This entire Quiché country, with its 500,000 pure Indians and 100,000 Spanish-speaking natives, is an open door, as is, indeed, the entire republic. There are several fine points open for God's servants, and with us a physician would be welcomed. Our lending library has been recently added to by a gift from a gentleman in England, but we hope to enlarge it further.

Our mission station is slowly nearing completion. The preaching hall and dispensary have been finished for some time; the hospital is being plastered, and the dwelling-house is ready for the roof.—Yours &c.,

Rabbi Lichtenstein's Visit to England.

AN interesting meeting was held on Thursday evening last at Exeter Hall to welcome Rabbi Lichtenstein from Hungary, who is on a short visit to this country. The chair was occupied by General Halliday, who in a few well-chosen words drew attention to the work which the Rabbi has been called to do both by voice and pen for many years as a faithful and fearless witness for the Messiah among the Jews.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson said that though there were in the world to-day an immense number of true believers, yet it must be specially a source of joy to Christ when one of His own kinsmen accepts Him as Lord. Among the most striking witnesses for Christ was this aged Rabbi, who at an advanced age had been led to see Christ as the true Messiah.

Recalling his personal interest in Rabbi Lichtenstein for over sixteen years, Rev. David Baron expressed the pleasure it gave him to bear public testimony to the genuineness and sincerity of his character, and to the usefulness of his testimony to the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Some friends are disappointed that he has not founded a Hebrew Christian Church, or united himself with any existing church. In some respects Rabbi Lichtenstein's position and views were not his own, but all are not led the same way, or appointed to do the same work. Rabbi Lichtenstein's life since his conversion has not been in vain. He has written ten pamphlets, to whose importance and value those most competent to judge have borne witness. The value of these pamphlets consists in that they are not theological. Christ is set forth in them in a Jewish setting; the voice which speaks in them is not the voice of the Church, not the voice of a Gentile theologian, not the voice of a missionary, but the voice of a Jew, with a thorough Jewish accent. Tens of thousands of these pamphlets in different languages have been distributed among Jews in different lands, and Mr. Baron could bear witness to the effect which they have produced. When it became impossible for the Rabbi to retain his post on account of the persecution made to bear on his devoted people, he resigned. It was then that among English sympathizers a fund was started to maintain him.

Rabbi Lichtenstein, speaking in German, translated by Mr. Baron, expressed his joy at once more meeting his English friends, and testified that the power which proceeds from Jesus supports, strengthens, and glorifies the evening of his life. The hand of the Lord came to him at an age when many are worn out and led him forth in the Spirit of the Lord. Just because I am a Rabbi, he said, I speak to them with heartfelt conviction, my words find hearing and acceptance. An eminent and learned Jewish professor said to me gravely shortly before I left home, "Do not allow yourself to be intimidated by vulgar agitation, for you have a larger following than Chief Rabbi Kohn." My modest dwelling is a consecrated hall, where friends and strangers assemble to hear the word of God, and the Word becomes flesh and dwells among us, and we see His glory, a glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.

Rev. C. A. Schönberger and Sir Andrew Wingate also bore earnest testimony to the excellent work that is being done.

Deliverance of an Aged Missionary.—Dr. Colin Valentine writes from Montreux:—"Yesterday I wished to ascend by the lift in my hotel. The iron gate was open, and I unthinkingly stepped in. On looking up I saw the lift descending, and within six feet of me. I rushed to the gate; it was shut, and I could not open it. The lift had descended half-way down my back. In another minute I would have been cut in two. My screams brought the manager, who stopped the lift, and pulled me out. I am considerably bruised, but not confined to bed. Truly in the midst of life we are in death. I am very poorly, and have been asking the Lord if it were His will to take me to Himself. Surely He has something more for me to do.

Pay or Purgatory.

WHILE staying lately with some of my family at the lovely French watering-place of Cambo, in the Lower Pyrenees, we drove one day across the Spanish frontier to the little town of Urdax, where we picnicked on a hillside, in the midst of grand mountain scenery. On our way back we stopped at a little inn, recommended by our driver as the only clean one in the neighbourhood, to obtain hot water and make tea. While waiting there, I espied on the table a booklet, which I found to be a Spanish religious tract. Its title meant: "The Work of the Sacred Expiation," and it set forth the origin and objects of a Roman Catholic association.

A Spanish priest, a few years ago, moved with compassion for the many poor people who die leaving no relatives or friends to provide for the release of their souls from purgatory, had instituted this society (at first on a very small scale), for securing that a certain number of masses should be said with this intention! This charitable thought had found wide acceptance, and the society had rapidly increased in numbers, so that now many thousands of members are enrolled not only in Spain, but in Portugal, France, Belgium, Austria, Argentina, Uruguay, &c, and in England, too! The tract earnestly appealed to its readers to join in this pious work, stating that the minimum subscription is only five centimes (a halfpenny) per annum!

What a picture of Roman Catholicism! How unspeakably sad that multitudes of our fellowmen, in the loss of a dear relative or friend, have no other hope for them than that by the expenditure of much money on masses, aided perhaps by alms-giving and penitences, they may succeed in somewhat curtailing the hundreds of years these would otherwise have to spend in atoning for their own sins by enduring the torments of purgatory! What a contrast to the "sure and certain hope" which many of us have as regards our loved ones gone before, for whom we "sorrow not as do the rest, which have no hope," but rejoice in the assurance that they are "with Christ, which is far better." Is it any wonder that in France and Italy and other Roman Catholic lands the people flock to Protestant funerals, and are deeply moved as they listen to words of Divine comfort and hope based upon the New Testament declarations as regards "the dead who die in the Lord," or that they remark on the contrast between such teaching and the gloomy, hopeless ceremonial of a Roman Catholic funeral?

And what shall we say of those who are seeking to bring back Protestant England to these deplorable superstitions by the introduction of prayers for the dead? Let us pray that their eyes may be opened to see their error, and that more labourers may be sent forth into the lands which are pervaded by Romish darkness. J. G. A.

In the Southern States.

IN April last year five of the students from Northfield Bible Training School left New York for Lamar, South Carolina. They found a very needy field, and the people very ignorant, especially in the country districts. Many of the so-called homes were mere shelters, but the people were very eager to hear about Christ and Him crucified.

God wonderfully blessed our humble efforts, and during the six months we were there, for the most part working in a tent, over five hundred persons professed conversion. We were greatly rejoiced to see the glad change that came into their lives, and we felt well paid for the persecutions and hardships which we had to endure. Many of the confessors are still standing true. Some of us expect to return shortly. Elizabeth S. Barker.

The Free Church Year Book, 1903, will be welcomed by Nonconformists throughout the country as a handy and useful volume. Not only does it comprise the many valuable papers given at the National Council at Brighton, as well as a mass of statistical and general information for Free Church ministers and secretaries, but also forms a complete history of the campaign in opposition to the Education Act of 1902. The May Meetings.

Congregational Work.

[BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.]

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE work of the Congregationalists is so heavy that they cannot get it into the limits of a May week, so they start on a Saturday with a missionary meeting for the young. The success of the plan justifies itself; young people come in from all over London and crowd Exeter Hall. The meeting always has the attraction of some well-known missionaries; this May it had Miss SPENCE, of Benares, and Revs. J. TOM BROWN, of Kuruman (Moffat's old station), and ARTHUR BONSEY, of Hankow.

ADVANCE OR CRIPPLING.

Then on Monday morning, at ten o'clock, a Special Thanksgiving meeting was held; for the old L.M.S. has had a year of heavy burdens and of wonderful deliverance from them. A year ago there was a deficit of £29,468; but that has all been cleared off, while a much larger annual income from regular sources has also been received. There has evidently been a considerable quickening of interest among some of the churches, and there has been a brave resolve on the part of some of the native churches to bear all their own costs. The improved financial position of the Society is also partly the result of stopping any further developments for a period of five years, and cutting down expenses to an extent which has practically crippled work. The thanksgiving is modified with regret; for there is many an open door for the Society to go in at, but means are not forthcoming. One of two things will have to happen—either the friends of the Society will have to increase their gifts according to the natural and inevitable growth of the work, or the work will have to be crippled and decline. To stop the growth of a vast work for a period of five years is very much like stopping the growth of a vigorous boy for a similar period—some trouble will result. But we hope that in some unthought-of way deliverance will come from this perilous position.

THE PLACE OF THE DEATH OF CHRIST.

On Wednesday morning a large congregation gathered in the City Temple to hear "the missionary sermon," which was preached by Dr. FORSYTH, of Hackney College. His text was John xii. 31, 33, special emphasis being laid upon the death of Christ as the agency by which the world was judged, and the power unloosed for saving the world. Any idea of the wealth of thought in the sermon can only be obtained from reading the whole sermon, which was given at a rapid rate, and was an hour long. It was not so difficult to follow as some of Dr. Forsyth's deliverances, not so paradoxical, not so antithetical. Some day—the sooner the better—he will no doubt give us sermons chastely simple, and they will be a pleasant change from the present Oriental affluence and Oriental love of over-refining.

Dr. Forsyth kept his congregation attentive by keen thrusts: "Let your soliloquising become prayer, or it is only selfish introspection." "The soul of evil, evil collected, had been judged by the death of Christ; the cross was its day of judgment." "The victory over sin and death and hell was not gained at the resurrection; the resurrection published the victory." "There is more hope of missions from those holding a narrow creed, in which the position of man is great, than from mere humanism that seeks to help men." Strange to say, this preacher, who seems unable to speak on a great occasion without making our Lord's death more or less his theme, declared: "If a missionary, himself a living bearer of the cross, likes to leave the preaching of the atonement till a little later on, let him do so."

THE WATCHERS' BAND.

The large audience assembled at the annual meeting of the Watchers' Band—men and women who are united to pray for missions, especially the L.M.S.—showed how this ministry of intercession had grown; there are now 974 branches, with a membership of 29,000.

Rev. F. W. WALKER, from New Guinea, spoke strongly on the need of Industrial Missions in such a country. The principal occupation of the people had been war, and now that fighting was being abolished they were a people practically reduced to idleness, for food grew so plentifully that little labour was needed to cultivate it, and nearly all that work was done by the women. A native had come to him and said: "Me good fellow now; me sing plenty; me no work." The Church of Christ must teach the native that he had a duty to develop the great resources of the country for the benefit of the world. At present no one engaged in commercial industry in New Guinea was identified with Christianity, and traders came who were actually antagonistic to Christianity. Work was, in the native mind, largely divorced from Christianity. What an awful situation was thus growing up!

The address of Mrs. MAY, whose husband recently died in Central Africa, was admirably thought out and beautifully spoken, but it may be doubted if many gave attention to any feature of it save its humble spirit, its soul-searching light, its profound sense of responsibility, its tender love for the Saviour and the sinners He came to save. Not a word was there about her great bereavement and heavy trials; the meeting listened in solemn stillness as she frankly spoke of the want of success in the mission to which she had given her best, and probed the heart with the question, "Who is to blame? Even the missionaries may be at fault, notwithstanding all that they have done; it may be the members of the Watchers' Band." It was all so tender, so fearless, so frank, that hearers could only bow themselves before God.

Rev. R. A. HICKLING spoke of how unwilling India is to move, and yet is moving.

A GREAT MEETING,

that crammed every part of the City Temple, met in the evening, and was willing to remain until close on nine o'clock. The Chairman, Mr. ALBERT SPICER, stated that he had been a director of the Society thirty years, eighteen of which he had filled the office of treasurer. He pointed out the great increase that had taken place during that period in the expenditure of £104,000 to £173,000, in the number of men and women missionaries from 156 to 275, and in the number of native ordained pastors from 165 to 943. He described the changes by which the management of the Society had been taken from the hands of a small body of men and put into the hands of a representative body of men and women gathered from all parts of the kingdom. Lieut.-Col. SETON CHURCHILL spoke on behalf of the C.M.S., as a substitute for Sir John Kennaway, M.P., who could not come, and showed, from his own observation, how useful the L.M.S. is in India and other places. As in the case of the spies who went to the land of Canaan, there was a majority and a minority report, and the minority was right. A Kaffir who saw some English soldiers worshipping, and was told they wanted to go to heaven, asked, "Why England not annex heaven?" People spoke of "Little Englanders," but he was afraid we had too many "little Christians," persons who kept the blessings of Christianity to themselves, and would take no part in helping, not to annex heaven for England, but this little world for heaven.

Rev. D. HELM cheered the meeting by telling it of the progress of the Gospel in Matabeleland, among a people who had been fierce, hard, and untractable; and Rev. A BONSEY dwelt upon the recent changes in China. Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL dealt with some of the objections he had heard offered to missions by persons living at home.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

For the public the chief interest of the Congregational Union meetings seems to lie in the election of the chairman for the ensuing year and in the address of the chairman for the current year. Dr. Goodrich, of Manchester, was elected chairman for 1904, and will begin his duties on January 1. Dr. HORTON, of Hampstead, is chairman this year, and gave an address on "Congregationalism and the Catholic Church." Want of space makes it impossible to give even an outline of it; but something of its spirit may be felt in a quotation or two:—"The first note of the Church is that it is a community of redeemed souls, which becomes for that reason 'a pillar and ground of the truth.' It is composed of those who are new creatures in Christ, a new creation itself, intended therefore to transform the world. In the new birth the old distinctions of birth, of rank, of wealth, of privilege disappear. In Christ men stand on another footing. Rich and poor meet together; the Lord is the Maker of them all. The primal heresy is this: 'If there come into your synagogue a man with a gold ring and fine clothing, and there come in also a poor man in vile clothing, and ye have regard to him that weareth the fine clothing, and say, 'Sit thou here in a good place,' and ye say to the poor man, 'Stand thou there, or sit under my footstool.' 'The equality of all human beings before God is,' says Tolstoi, 'the fundamental truth of religion.' If Christianity had not struck that note it could never have set out to conquer the world, nor will it conquer the world until it strikes that note again and yet again."

NO PRIEST.

Continuing, Dr. Horton said: "With our eyes on the religions of the world, and especially on the Jewish, the Roman, and the Greek religions, in which apparently Christianity had its cradle, the thing that must always strike the student most forcibly is, Here is a new religion, a religion without a priest. In the community there is a variety of mutual ministry and of spiritual powers for operating on the world, but there is no priest. The community was itself a royal priesthood, but for that reason no individual or order within it could usurp its powers. Let one person or an order of persons claim an official exclusiveness of access to God, and immediately the blessed equality of status, and the universal relation with an ever-present and accessible Lord, must be destroyed. What an advertisement of an absent Lord, what a daring suggestion of a dead Christ a priesthood is! When Christ is dead, a victim on the altar, then the priest must come in to make, to manipulate, to offer Him, and the apostate city of a spurious Christianity is the place where—

'God is made and eaten all day long.'"

THE BIBLE.

Dr. Horton referred to the Bible in the following words:—"But from the manifest completeness and sufficiency of these notes [of the Church] there followed a corollary, which was dear to the heart of our fathers. The Scriptures which Christ and the apostles reverenced, and the additional Scriptures which the apostles produced, formed in their entirety a court of final appeal. What was there was of authority. The truth completed by the Apostolic age could never be superseded, or corrected in such a way that it would be essentially changed."

The reconstitution of the Union, only a projected scheme at present, is of only denominational interest. The cause of temperance prospers, the work of the "settlements" among the poor extends, the place and service of women in the churches receives fuller recognition (women attend the Union meetings as delegates), and there is marked increase in work done for

THE COLONIES.

Rev. Burford Hooke, who has done so much for the Colonial Missionary Society, reported at its annual meeting that the income, including balance, was £6,030, and expenditure left a small deficiency of £9; but £1,000 was held on deposit account for special purposes. During the year six ministers had been sent out to Canada, Queeensland, Cape Colony, the Transvaal, Western Australia, and Natal respectively, and next week two more would be sent to New Zealand; while three ladies had also been sent. With regard to the combined offer of the Congregational Union and this Society to give ten per cent. of the debts on Canadian churches if any effort were made to pay them in a year, a few gentlemen in Canada had offered to add fifteen per cent. That meant that a special fund of £4,000 must be raised in England this year. Three churches had become self-supporting during the year, namely at Vryburg, at Graaf Reinet, and the native church at Philipton.

Dr. Fairbairn preached a notable sermon on behalf of this Society, which, I am sorry to say, was often applauded. Passive resistance of the Education Act was eagerly affirmed; the Government will have an impossible task with the Congregationalists.

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colporteurs.

THE workers and friends of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association assembled in force on Monday of last week. In the afternoon the men made statements regarding their work; in the evening addresses of a more stated order were delivered. Mr. S. Wigney, secretary, gave an abstract of the report, which was very encouraging. Fifty-six colporteurs had been maintained during the year, ten of whom have served between twenty and thirty years. During the year 11,000 Bibles have been sold, and, altogether, half a million publications, realising £5,307, of which £1,607 was net profit. Visits to the number of 270,000 have been paid. Districts had contributed £2,075, and the General Fund subscribers £648; so that, happily, the year closed with a slight balance in hand.

Rev. H. J. Harvey, Congregational minister, from Essex, assured subscribers that colporteurs are extremely useful aids. He likes to see them not only in the pew but sometimes in the pulpit, and has heard many encouraging testimonies from neighbours. He urged the importance of the work done by village colporteurs in influencing the country youths and maidens who make their way to the metropolis. Mr. Job Smith, working at Aylesbury, told of a man who offered five shillings for an explanation of a passage of Scripture; and of another who gave him "a fair dose" of swearing, from whom he asked a cup of tea. Prayer followed, and tears ran down the man's cheeks. A publican welcomes him and gives him milk.

At the public meeting, held in the Tabernacle, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presided. Lord Kinnaird, one of the vice-presidents, expressed his pleasure at the testimonies of the colporteurs. He has for twenty-five years been in the colportage line, and complimented the Tabernacle folk on maintaining so many agents. He declared colportage to be good investment, and stated that Mr. T. A. Denny had been the means in five years of pushing the disposal of 230,000 copies of "Precious Truths." He recommended any dissatisfied person to take a colporteur's pack and try selling for a day.

Rev. John Wilson, vice-president of the Baptist Union, was most heartily received. He commenced life at seventeen as a colporteur. Bells and music may fail to bring the people in; you must preach them in. He had great joy in selling books and preaching in the open air. An M.P. read "Grace and Truth," and saw its principle. Next day he bought 100 copies, and then another 100, and he was greatly disappointed when some read it and were not converted.

Protestant Reformation Society.

AMONG the oldest of the organizations seeking to keep the public thoroughly informed as to the influence of Rome in our midst, the Protestant Reformation Society occupies a worthy place. Its operations cover a period of seventy-six years, and its history is a record of strenuous endeavour in the interests of truth. The annual meetings took place at Exeter Hall on Monday, and were well attended.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

At the afternoon gathering Mr. W. J. Fraser, who presided, rehearsed the numerous occurrences of the year, demanding the serious attention of all who are desirous of upholding the principles of the Reformation in our land. Alluding to the King's Declaration, he expressed the conviction that those who sought its modification are now aspiring to positions in which they hope to be able to effect their designs. He deeply regretted that the recently-appointed Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police is a Roman Catholic. In addition, many of the officials are of the same persuasion as their chief, and much the same state of things exists in military circles. It means, continued Mr. Fraser, that practically the supreme command of civil and military forces in the metropolis is in the hands of Roman Catholics. He proceeded to point out how the Bishops have shown their inability to deal successfully with the Romanizing element in the English Church, and declared that the time has come for the laity to come to the front and take a more solid share in the government of the Church.

THE PRESENT AWAKENING.

In submitting a number of the monthly reports from the missionaries, Mr. Walter Limbrick unfolded many facts of a cheering nature, and threw much light on the need existing in numberless places for such efforts as those being made by the Society's workers. One feature of the organization's work was particularly emphasized, viz., its training and sending forth evangelists to carry on evangelistic missions among Roman Catholics.

Dr. F. J. Hamilton (incumbent of Ram's Episcopal Chapel, Homerton) followed with an earnest and thoughtful address. Speaking of the present Protestant awakening, he considered it had several causes. The murder of Mr. John Kensit has not been without its influence. The Education Act has aroused interest and directed attention to the Protestant question; but the awakening is largely due to the faithful and consistent efforts of Protestant societies.

Some interesting particulars of pioneer work, under the auspices of the Society, were given by Miss E. M. D. Miller. During the last ten months she has laboured in Devonshire and Cornwall, holding 130 meetings in thirteen towns and villages. She urged the need for ministers of the Gospel laying themselves out to train and fortify those in their charge concerning Protestantism. She had found men and women everywhere desirous of continuing this warfare, but lacking someone to lead them.

The closing address was given by Rev. J. M. Willoughby, vicar of St. Mark's, Tollington Park. He heartily endorsed the purpose and work of the Society, particularly its endeavours to refute error by proclaiming truth. A man is not so much impressed with the falsehood we point out to him as he is with that which he discovers for himself.

A YEAR'S RECORD.

Following the afternoon meeting there was a conversazione and a sale of work in aid of the funds; and Mr. J. J. Bamford delighted the audience by instructing a class of children in the "One Hundred Texts." At a subsequent gathering Colonel T. Myles Sandys occupied the chair, and a number of addresses were given. The annual report was presented by the secretary. It showed that the year under review has been marked by many events of a cheering nature, while others have been full of discouragement to Evangelical Christians. Among the former may be placed the extended revolt against Romanism, both doctrinal and political, on the Continent, and the revival of Protestant vigour in many parts of England, with its resultant influence upon the vote and voice of Parliament. Some of the discouraging features are the murder of Mr. John Kensit, with the culprit undetected and unpunished; the apathy shown by the Government to the influx of Jesuits and other foreign Romish orders; and the continuance, practically unchecked, of Romish teaching and practices in many of the parishes of our National Church.

A CALL TO PROTESTANTS.

Such facts are deeply deplored, but at the same time they have sounded a call to Protestants not to slacken their efforts in defence of truth—a call which the Society has not been slow to heed. Besides using every endeavour to maintain the Scriptural principles of the Reformation Society, the missions to Roman Catholics in England have been conducted with increasing evidence of blessing. New missions have been established, particularly in Devon and Cornwall, and from few stations have more satisfactory reports been received than from these counties. Last year the stations of Manchester and South London were reported vacant. The vacancy in Manchester has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Herbert H. Hall, while Mr. J. J. Bamford has taken charge of the work in South London.

Turning to the general activities of the Society, it is seen that the Jesuits' courses of lectures, specially intended to persuade Protestants to join the Romish Church, has necessitated the Society continuing its reply lectures. The Society has shown itself fully alive to the importance of disseminating thoroughly reliable literature, and publishing books and pamphlets upon almost every topic connected with the Romish and Ritualistic controversies, as well as standard works. During the year the arrangements for the publication of the "Protestant Dictionary," edited by Dr. C. H. H. Wright and Rev. Charles Neil, have been completed, and its appearance is being anticipated with much satisfaction.

Christian Evidence Society.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society was held recently at Sion College, the Bishop of Exeter (vice-chancellor of the University of London) in the chair. The report dwelt on the success of the evidential missions of Mr. W. T. Lee, attended by 84,760 persons in fifteen large towns. Rev. Dr. Forsyth (principal of Hackney College) declared that the whole world of civilization needs Christianity in order to complete it The great mass of Christian people have no grasp of their faith. Religious controversy is not objectionable as long as its object is to reach the truth. Criticism has killed secularism, not faith. The permanency of Christianity carries with it its flexibility. We must adjust methods, especially in view of the change from the hegemony of physical sciences to the historical and social sciences, moralized, and from scientific agnosticism to gnosticism; from Huxley and Spencer to Lodge, James, and Myers.

Colonel Williams, M.P., referred to the problems lightly discussed in these days, to the value of the examinations conducted by the Society, and to the lectures in Hyde Park. Rev. W. R. Inge (Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford), in a thoughtful address, said that a great danger at Oxford was an amiable epicureanism. Difficulties were not mainly scientific or critical, not so much "is it true or false?" but, "is it normal or pathological?" Psychology may bring science and religion closer; though the former may incline to pantheism, the latter to the supernatural. The Chairman said it was of no use to meet prejudice with prejudice, and abuse with abuse. We must appeal not to the emotions, but, with Augustine and Bishop Butler, to the abiding consciousness of the human heart. Other speakers included Rev. E. McClure (editorial secretary, S.P.C.K.) and Mr. E. Baker (open-air lecturer of the Society).

The Christian Community.

THAT interesting "Huguenot legacy," the Christian Community, has been for over 130 years a means of spiritual blessing to the poor of London. Founded in the dark days of 1685; and reorganized in 1772, with the advantage of John Wesley's wise counsels, it has made notable progress in the organization of voluntary religious effort.

At the annual meeting held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday week, Mr. J. ATKINSON (the venerable secretary, who has worthily occupied the position for over forty years), presented a pithy and instructive report. The Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, which is the Society's headquarters, is in constant use for the spiritual and social good of the people. There are bright services, of a homely character, with brief evangelistic addresses, which attract many outsiders. Eight branch halls are also under the care of the committee; all are situated in districts where there is poverty and overcrowding, and where attendance at places of worship is very low. Close attention is given to the preaching of the Word, and cases of inquiry are frequently met with.

WORKHOUSES AND INFIRMARIES.

The oldest of the Society's operations is the visitation of workhouses, infirmaries, and casual wards. Twenty-three of the institutions within the Metropolitan district are regularly visited by about 200 workers. In the workhouse proper, regular services are held in the dining halls, or sitting-rooms, the attendance being voluntary. The larger proportion of the inmates are glad to be present. A Bible reading and one or two Gospel addresses are given, and a delightful hour is spent in worship. At the close, the poor people gather round and express their gratitude. In the infirmaries, of course, the aged and sick are dealt with. These prove excellent listeners.

The lodging-house branch effectively reaches the "submerged tenth," who, in spite of all their faults, readily allow services to be held, and enjoy them as a break in the monotony of their lives, while a good number fully appreciate them. At the close of the services many will surround the workers, tell of their troubles, begging for help. In many cases, when found genuine, lodging for a night will be provided them or a ticket for food. Money is never given, for fear it should be spent in drink. A number of cases of the younger sort have been dealt with, and sent to homes, or friends, or assisted to get tools when work could be secured.

IN THE OPEN AIR.

At about twenty stations services have been held in the open air, in several cases in prominent thoroughfares, others in back streets and alleys. In nearly all cases audiences have been readily secured, and at not a few services people have come forward to make admission of their sins and ask advice. Such cases are always most carefully dealt with, encouraged, and urged to come to a decision.

In addition to these operations, large quantities of Gospel literature have been distributed, and thousands of meals given to the starving; the naked have been clothed, and the puny children of the slums taken into the country for brief holidays. One friend, going further afield, makes the hamlets and out-of-the-way farm houses of Herts and Essex his special care, and has been privileged to see the good seed grow and bear fruit.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM urged his hearers not to rest content with the proclamation of the truth, valuable as that is, but with all earnestness to endeavour to point sinners to Christ. Mr. Seagram also referred to the value of the printed message in winning souls, and spoke of four persons being won for Christ through reading one "marked" Testament.

Other speakers included Rev. GEORGE FREEMAN, who emphasized the importance of preaching with simplicity; Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND, who testified to the devotion and self-denial of the workers; and Rev. J. F. SHEARER, who has succeeded the late Dr. Gritton as honorary secretary; and Rev. HUGH MCINTOSH, Author of "Is Christ infallible, and the Bible True?"

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

ON Thursday afternoon a deeply impressive service was conducted by Prebendary H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE, in connection with the Barbican Mission, at St. Paul's Church, Onslow Square, Kensington. It had been arranged to meet the wishes of a number of converts from Judaism, who desired publicly to confess their faith in Christ, and receive the rite of baptism. The vicar was assisted by Rev. F. Sumner, and the large congregation fully entered into the solemnity of the service, uniting in prayer to God that the converts might be kept stedfast in the faith which they had confessed. Five adults were baptized, also three children of a Hebrew Christian.

At the close of the service the annual meeting of the Barbican Mission was held in the Church Room, which proved only too small to accommodate comfortably the number of friends anxious to show their continued interest in the evangelization of Israel. The President (Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE) occupied the chair, and spoke of the hearty sympathy existing between the Barbican and sister societies. He wished to disprove the idea that there is any bitter emulation or rivalry in the work. As regards the present position of the Mission, the chairman was able to make the gratifying statement that the debt on the new Gordon Calthrop Memorial Mission House had been virtually removed, only £200 still remaining to be paid. The committee, however, are exercised concerning the adjoining site, which was acquired with the land on which the Mission House is built; and Mr. Webb-Peploe made an earnest appeal for the site to be redeemed right out, and thus be secured as an open-air preaching station, and to provide for future developments, otherwise the ground may pass into hands likely to use it for purposes detrimental to the Mission. About £2,500 is required to clear the mortgage.

Coming to the general operations of the Mission, the Chairman expressed the pleasure he had felt, when visiting the Mission House, to find a large number of inquiring Jews. Whatever language they speak, they find the Scriptures in their own tongue. The reading-room is freely used up till seven o'clock, when all periodicals are put away, and the Bibles are distributed for the evangelistic service, a meeting of unique interest. Reference was also made to the encouraging results which have followed the Saturday (Jewish Sabbath) gatherings, and the useful purpose served by the new home at Mitcham, where during the year, forty-four converts and inquirers have received hospitality.

In the course of an address appreciative of the Mission's purpose and work, Rev. E. A. STUART pointed to some of the most prominent features of the annual report. He was particularly impressed by the important place in the curriculum given to Bible study. It is by such means that the claims of Christ are most effectively presented to the Jewish mind.

As a representative of the London Jews' Society, Rev. W. T. GIDNEY brought a message of fraternal sympathy and encouragement from the oldest mission to Jews. While some had remarked that the smaller organizations were the little foxes that spoil the vine, this was not the view which his society takes, but acknowledges that there is room for all who are seeking to benefit Israel. Prediger Lipshytz is anxious for the conversion of Jews for the sake of their souls. Having visited the new Mission House in Whitechapel, Mr. Gidney was able to speak in unqualified terms of its adaptability to the needs of the work. Rev. H. O. ALLBROOK, of the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, gave a searching address on the discharge of our duty toward the House of Israel. They are blinded by the god of this world, and we shall fail in our duty if we do not recognize that we have to contend with a most subtle and malignant adversary.

Further testimony to the many-sided work of the Barbican Mission was given by Rev. MARCUS S. BERGMANN, who spoke of the eagerness with which the ministry of the Word is followed.

"The Soldiers' Friend."

THE labours of the Army Scripture Readers' Society continue to receive grateful recognition among the various regiments of British regulars, and during the past year the object which first called the organization into existence, i.e., "to spread the saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ among our soldiers," has been actively pursued.

At the annual meeting, held at Exeter Hall on Friday last, Bishop TAYLOR SMITH, Chaplain-General to the Forces, presided; and Colonel G. PHILIPS, secretary, called attention to some features of the report. A typical letter of gratitude reads: "I am sure you will be delighted to hear that, in the six weeks since your Scripture Reader came to us, we have had some soul-stirring times, and it has been an ingathering of precious souls such as we believe are eternally saved." A heavy responsibility is laid upon the committee in the matter of providing Readers for the large body of troops likely to be quartered in South Africa for years to come. The need of Readers in that land is graphically shown in a letter from Rev. R. Deane Oliver, who writes:—"The troops are widely scattered, which makes the work very heavy. I believe there was never yet such an opportunity in peace time as out here now."

There are now forty-one Readers in England and ten in Ireland, with six in South Africa, and eight in other foreign stations. In the Militia also some of the Readers have worked as in past years, and a chaplain writes:—"I wish the Christian public could appreciate rightly the value of work such as is done by your Reader among a section almost untouched by Christian agencies. Nothing but good can come from such work, done so patiently, lovingly, and prayerfully."

THE POWER OF A CONSISTENT LIFE.

Major-General BATTERSBY followed with an earnest appeal in the spiritual interests of the soldier. People are ready to cheer the army in times of national trial as the men go out in performance of their duty; but when they return, if they do return, it too often happens that their welfare is forgotten. Their needs are but unsufficiently met. Yet there are remarkable results following the labours of the Readers, whose consistent lives testify to the presence of God's grace in the heart, and gain the respect of all. The speaker added a pathetic story: a sergeant sent home from South Africa, "only a piece of a man, with the left leg and arm gone," and was visited by Miss Perks, of Winchester. "What is Jesus to you now?" asked Miss Perks. "More precious than ever," was the reply. General Battersby urged in conclusion that a reader should be attached to every regimental depôt.

The next speaker, Rev. J. BULL, pointed out the many openings in the Lord's work of which the Reader takes advantage. He visits the barrack-room, conducts meetings, distributes religious literature, goes from cot to cot in the hospital, reading the Bible to the sick, making himself at home with the children, and from time to time taking part in evangelistic missions. Many letters are received from parents and guardians of recruits asking that their boys should receive oversight, and in this important work the Reader is of great service. Very often good success attends their efforts in co-operation with the chaplain, and many touching letters of thanks have been received.

THE ARMY FOR CHRIST.

The Chairman spoke of the opportunities presented by "a diocese of men, in many lands." The Army ought to be the greatest evangelistic force in the Empire. The young recruit is "a slate for the pencil," and how much depends upon what is written thereon! We do not forget that the worker of this Society is first of all a Scripture Reader, but we may prefer to call him "the Soldiers' Friend." With the Chaplain grasping the recruit by one hand, and the Reader grasping the other, there is a glorious possibility in front of the youths who join the army. Bishop Taylor Smith's concluding words were of exhortation to yet more earnest and far-reaching work.

British Jews' Society.

IN its sixtieth year the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews is found following along the same lines laid down by its founders. The names of Rev. William Wingate and Rev. Robert M. M'Cheyne are precious not only to the Society but to the whole Church of God, and the work on behalf of Israel with which they were identified in its inception, commends itself to Christian friends of many denominations. This was demonstrated by the attendance at the sixtieth annual meeting on Friday evening.

A summary of the year's operations was presented by the Secretary (Rev. ISAAC LEVINSON). It was seen that from many of the Society's centres cheering tidings have come that numbers of baptisms have taken place at the request of the converts who were anxious to confess their allegiance to Jesus Christ. The missionaries' reports bear testimony to the readiness with which copies of the New Testament are accepted by Jews, and this is one of the most encouraging signs of the times in regard to the task of preparing the way of Jesus Christ among Israel. Mention was made of the far-reaching influence of the work in Spitalfields under the superintendence of Rev. M. Nachim, where the spiritual agencies and educational classes are alike fruitful in their results. In the Homes for Aged Christian Israelites kindly assistance has been given to the deserving poor of Christ's flock in their declining years. The urgent need for a centre of operations in the West End of London was emphasized by the Secretary, and he expressed the hope that this Diamond Jubilee year will witness the realization of the proposed Wingate-M'Cheyne Memorial, which is to take the form of mission premises in that part of the Metropolis.

Sir ANDREW WINGATE, who presided, announced that the present time is one of considerable anxiety and difficulty. The committee are anxious to add to their agents a convert who, at his own cost, has been in training for seven years with a view to preaching the Gospel to his brethren. It is only a lack of funds that keeps the society from accepting this medical student, whose services will be invaluable in connection with the forward movement in the West End of London.

An inspiring address followed from Rev. Dr. J. SHAW BANKS (president of the Wesleyan Conference). It is often said, in reproach of work among Israel, that little progress is made; but he felt that the tokens which God had given to the society were sufficient recompense for the labour and devotion of not sixty years only, but ten times that period. No one who believes that the prophets were the forerunners of Jesus Christ could be indifferent to the work of evangelizing God's ancient people. The Old and the New Testaments are one revelation in two parts; neither can be understood without the other. We cannot correctly understand Jesus Christ, Paul, and the other apostles without the Psalms and the Prophets; and the Psalms and Prophets are an unfinished fragment without the essential supplement of the Gospels and Epistles. Jesus Christ never stood higher in the reverence and worship of mankind than to-day, and this is true not of Gentiles only but also of the Jews.

Rev. Dr. CHAPMAN, principal of Western College, Bristol, made an earnest appeal on behalf of the spiritual need of Israel, in view of their blindness and hardness of heart. The conversion of the sons of Abraham will bring untold blessing to the Gentile race. For this end the Society is labouring, and the results of the efforts put forth can never be tabulated. Revs. A. BERNSTEIN and C. SHERMAN also took part in the meeting, and the enjoyment of the proceedings was much enhanced by Sister Effie's sacred solos, which were beautifully rendered.

[We hope next week to furnish reports of further May meetings, including Paris City Mission, Soldiers' Christian Association, Irish Church Missions, Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, Strangers' Friend Society, Bessbrook Homes, National Protestant Church Union, and Religious Tract Society Breakfast.]

NEWMARKET.

FURTHER particulars of Dr. Henry's mission at Newmarket are given by the Newmarket Journal, which says, in the course of an extended report:—"A year ago, when a stranger in Newmarket, Dr. Henry, of New York, attracted a crowded audience at the Town Hall, and on Tuesday evening, upon the occasion of his second visit, the hall was filled to overflowing with an audience which received the brilliant total abstinence orator with tremendous enthusiasm." Before the meeting concluded "the chairman (Dr. C. F. Gray) cordially thanked Dr. Henry for his words of burning eloquence and Mr. Armon Jones for his wonderful singing. On Tuesday evening, Dr. Henry delivered an address to children in the Town Hall. Two solos were sung by Mr. Armon Jones. The building was crowded both downstairs and in the gallery. On Wednesday evening another crowded meeting was addressed by Dr. Henry, who was again received with enthusiam."

FALKIRK.

Dr. Henry has just concluded his third mission at Falkirk. The work has been phenomenal in its character. He has taken nearly 4,000 total abstinence pledges in the community, and about 300 have publicly acknowledged Christ as their Saviour. Hundreds of people have been won from the public-house, with the most blessed results upon their own home life. Not a few habitual drunkards have been converted; while a new and nobler tone has been given to thousands of lives.

The Y.M.C.A., which is to celebrate its jubilee in February, 1904, has asked Dr. Henry and his musical comrade, Mr. Jones, to return at that time for another fortnight of soul-winning work.

In connection with the recent mission some especially interesting things transpired. A Sunday-school teacher, having a class of fourteen girls, was blessed in one of the meetings. The next night two of her pupils were converted, whereupon the three set to work to win the other twelve, and all have made an open confession of Christ as their Saviour.

Another teacher rejoices over a class of six—all converted. One Christian Endeavour Society has its active membership list increased from seven to thirty-five. A woman from one of the hospitals was saved. She sent two of her companions the next night, and they were led to accept Jesus as Saviour and Lord. The Town Mission Hall had a large choir, with but few Christians in it. Now they are all rejoicing in the God of their salvation, and offering Him the true tribute of praise.

Among the converts was a Roman Catholic woman, who said she had long been trying to get rid of her sins, but did not know how. A young man, years ago, stole tools from his employer when working as an apprentice, was converted, and the first thing he did was to straighten that matter out. A little boy, eight years old, has had a remarkable experience, and seems to grasp the Gospel like a prophet. In one of the testimony meetings he said, "I do thank God for such a Saviour as he has given me."

On the opening night the meeting was somewhat protracted in order to deal with the inquirers, among whom was a young married woman. Her late return was causing her husband some uneasiness; so that when she opened the door he said: "I thought you were lost." "No! thank God," she exclaimed, "I am saved," and the next night he, too, took Christ as his Redeemer and Friend.

EDINBURGH.

Dr. Henry held three important services in Edinburgh last Sabbath. The buildings in each case were crowded with attentive and sympathetic audiences, and the ministers were most cordial. During the day about 4,000 people were addressed. Dr. Henry spoke on the Drink Problem in relation to the Church, the Kingdom of God, and the nation, and in the evening, in Dr. Smith's church, dealt with the important question of "Young People and National Sins," dealing earnestly with the responsibilities of Christian people with regard to the traffic.

A Missionary Welcome.

ON Saturday evening last, at Exeter Hall, a large gathering of friends and sympathisers gave a warm welcome home to Rev. J. Gregory Mantle on his return from a tour of the mission stations in India.

Rev. F. B. MEYER, who presided, voiced the general feeling of esteem in which Mr. Mantle is held by Christians in the homeland, and Rev. W. H. FINDLAY (Wesleyan Missionary Society) followed with a timely word regarding recent criticisms on missionary effort in India. "There are still "spies" and doubters who declare, "We are not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we;" but Mr. Mantle is encouraged to say, "We are able."

Dr. HARFORD (Livingstone College) pointed out that with regard to Africa, as well as India, there has lately been "an epidemic of criticism." One individual, for example, has written a "protest against endeavour to Christianize the African." The hearts of believers, however, remain undaunted, and the great cause of foreign missions will be upheld. Further words of welcome were given by Mr. ALBERT HEAD, representing the Keswick Convention, who sounded a call to prayer for revival.

With much earnestness Mr. MANTLE responded, commencing with a note of praise for manifold mercies. With regard to India, an outstanding feature of the mission field is the brotherly love manifested by the workers. Proceeding, Mr. Mantle said that he had secured many important cinematograph pictures which it is hoped will prove a stimulus to interest in foreign missions. One of these represents a procession of the widows under the care of Pandita Ramabai.

The speaker paid a glowing tribute to the courage, devotion, and tenacity of purpose manifested by the missionaries, and while mindful of the great difficulties, said that the future is full of hope. Statistics show a large increase in the number of native Christians. In a tract which is being circulated by Hindoos, the fear is expressed that "our temples will be turned into churches," and an alarm is sounded regarding "the many thousands who have become Christians." Intelligent non-Christian natives are closely reading the Bible, and one of them has lately proposed that it should be studied in colleges as a class book, pointing out that India is bound to profit by careful attention to the love and self-abnegation taught therein. In a concluding appeal, Mr. Mantle spoke of the terrible cruelties inflicted on child wives. This is "the open sore of India," and the speaker urged that all Christians should combine to bring about an alteration in the present shocking condition of affairs.

Bonar Memorial Mission to the Jews in Glasgow.—Since the opening of the present hall o the Bonar Memorial Mission to the Jews in Glasgow, about five years ago, Jews have been attending with great regularity and in steadily increasing numbers. Help to acquire the English language is statedly given, the text-book in use being the English Bible; and among those who are constant in attendance on these Bible classes and Gospel services many seem slowly, but surely, coming out of the bondage and darkness of Judaism to the marvellous light and liberty of the Gospel. No other attractions, of a material or sensational kind, are resorted to, nor are they needed. For over a year past, however, the increase has been much so marked as to render it necessary to extend the accommodation.

The Old and the New.

FOR some weeks I have been interested in watching the gradual disappearance of the old prison of Newgate, which I have to pass several times a day. For hundreds of years the grim old structure has stood as a warning to evil-doers, and it would be difficult to say how many prisoners have lived and died behind its walls.

The outside had become black with age and grime, but as the outer stones were removed their inner and under sides were seen to be quite white. Behind them were layers of bricks which made the entire wall four or five feet thick, so you can imagine how hopeless it was for any prisoner to think of escaping, although one, Jack Sheppard, is said to have succeeded more than once: but his escapes were made by the roof, which perhaps was not so well guarded then as in later years.

What terrible histories the gloomy old building could reveal if only its stones could speak. But now it is nearly all destroyed, and even the pigeons can find no resting place among its ruins.

The removal of this ancient landmark reminds one of the phrase in Rev. xxi. 4, "The former things are passed away." Indeed the earlier part of the verse is also in a certain sense appropriate, for we can well imagine how much "sorrow and crying" have been felt by the unhappy inmates of Newgate during their imprisonment; though in many cases, no doubt, it was the fact of being caught that distressed them, more than the sin that had brought them there.

Many of them, when they were boys and girls like you, little thought that they would come to such a dreadful fate; but one sin led on to another, and Satan got them more and more firmly in his grip. It is a striking warning to us all, to resist temptation in its earliest and most easy forms, "lest a worse thing happen."

We are so apt to think that sin doesn't matter so much if we are not found out But in the sight of God it is hateful any way, and sometimes the added deception that prevents discovery only makes it all the worse.

We are glad to know that to some, imprisonment was the very best thing that could have happened, because it removed them from their bad companions, and gave them time and opportunity to think; and some prisoners have come out of prison better men and women than they went in, because they gave their hearts to God.

On the other hand, some only became more hardened, and used their imprisonment to think out fresh ways of doing wrong when they were released. You see it all depends on the heart. Jesus said to Peter, "Satan hath desired to have you . . . but I have prayed for thee" (Luke xxii. 31). If we place our hearts in His keeping, He will protect us; but if we let Satan have the control of them, He will lead us on from bad to worse.

When I was a child, I am sorry to say I was sometimes shut up in my room for bad conduct, and once I spent four days there waiting punishment, which made me very unhappy indeed. But even then I am afraid it was the punishment, more than the sin, that troubled me. But when, some time after, I gave my heart to Jesus, I began to realize that "old things had passed away, and all things had become new." There I found that much of the former "sorrow and crying" had also gone, and that Jesus gave me a happy heart that I had never known before.

Satan tries to make us believe that to be a Christian means to be dull and miserable, and that happiness is only found in wrongdoing. But Jesus calls him "the father of lies," while He Himself is "the Way, the Truth, and the Life"; and I am sure your own experience has often taught you that there is more happiness in being good, and in pleasing Him and those about you, than in doing wrong and always fearing and receiving punishment.

Our lives must grow to be like one of two things—either like a gloomy prison, with a heart which is "the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird" (Rev. xviii. 2; see also Matt. xv. 19); or like "a temple of the Holy Spirit" (1 Cor. vi. 19) in which Jesus dwells. On the site of Newgate will be erected buildings which will become centres of usefulness and activity. And so it may be with your life, if you will let Jesus, the great "Master Builder" take possession of it. Then you will know greater happiness than you have ever experienced yet; and you will not have to wait till you get to heaven, but here and now you will have within you a little city of joy "whose Builder and Maker is God." Power and Prayer (Mark ix. 14-29).

IN our Lord's life there was no divorce between the life hidden in God and a ready response to the call of human need. As in Raffaelle's great picture of the Transfiguration, which combines the scenes of the mountain and the valley on the one canvas, so must it always be in every true life. There must be the systole and the diastole—the heart must drive the blood to be aerated in heaven's ozone, and then to pulsate to the extremities of hand and foot.

How wise for parents to bring their sons and daughters to Jesus. Many of them seem to be possessed with evil spirits which are wrecking their health and peace. Again and again I have realized how little, after all, money can do to make life happy. The even tenor of life is impossible so long as some beloved child or relative is subject to periodic fits and seizures of evil.

How often people make the mistake of this man, in bringing their relatives to disciples who as yet have not been baptized with the power of the Holy Spirit, and have not entered into the secret place of power. Of course, it is not possible for such to afford any real help. The demon laughs them to scorn. They can no more master it than men can draw out leviathan with a fish-hook. If a few months had been allowed to elapse, and the father had come to the disciples again, and if those months had included the Day of Pentecost, there would have been no such difficulty and delay, but the demon would have gone forth (Acts xvi. 16-18). We must learn our native powerlessness in dealing with the great forces of evil that are sweeping through the world, unless we have been endued with power from on high. Then we must go to our Master, and ask him to give us power to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy. There will be no doubt as to His response. He will communicate to us the power, before which the power of evil is powerless. Ye shall receive power (Luke x. 17-20; Acts i. 8).

In Matt. xvii. 20 the Lord rebukes the littleness of His disciples' faith; and in this passage He rebukes the unbelief of the father. Evidently these are included in the groan that burst from His heart in v. 19. Notice the way in which the Lord casts back the responsibility on the father. He had said, "If thou canst do anything;" but Jesus said in effect "the if is not with me, but with you. It is not a question of my power, but of your faith Can you believe?" Then the father threw the responsibility back on the Master, saying in effect, "I fear that I have not faith enough, but I trust Thee to create it in me. Help mine unbelief."

This is very helpful. You and I often fail in our faith because of ignorance and besetting sin. There is the mighty ocean of power all around us; but for some reason we cannot tap it. It is like the electric current, which refuses to help us unless we have instruments precisely adapted to transmitting it into driving power. Faith is absolutely necessary for the conveyance of God's power to meet the need, sin, and sorrow of the world. But when we find it deficient, when our heart "believes not," when we find ourselves face to face with Jerichos that are closely shut, and with mountains that mock at the tiny levers with which we propose to move them, then we must turn to Christ and say, "I trust Thee for more faith, I trust Thee to help me trusting; I believe, help Thou mine unbelief."

But such faith is the product of close fellowship with Jesus. It is only they who are with Him on the mountain who can exert this faith, or receive out of His fulness in the valley. "This kind," said the Master, "can come out by nothing, save by prayer." And we cannot forget that before this very miracle the Lord had been engaged in prayer, which preceded and led up to His Transfiguration (Luke ix. 28, 29).

One often thinks of the example of the late W. P. Lockhart, who used to spend as much time in prayer, before preaching, as he thought the sermon would occupy. Let us pray more earnestly; and let us believe more simply. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

During the last five months the Tilehouse Street Baptist C.E. Society, Hitchin, has more than doubled its membership, and ten young people have become associates.

Morgan's book, "In School and Playground: Five-minute Talks with Young People," the Life of Faith says:—"In titles and treatment they are fresh and interesting, and, of course, thoroughly loyal to Evangelical truth. Young people will greatly enjoy reading them, while through them, speakers to children ought to be able to learn 'how to do it.'" (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

The Life-Giving Spirit (Rom. viii. 1-14).

Golden Text (Rom. viii. 14).

ROME was the most important city and centre of the Gentile world (Acts xix. 21; xxiii. 11). Paul, the Divinely-appointed Apostle to the Gentiles (Rom. xv. 15-24; xi. 13; Acts ix. 15). The Epistle to the Romans was written at Corinth, prior to his last visit to Jerusalem, at the close of his third missionary tour (Acts xix. 21). Three years before he visited the city (Rom. i. 11, 13, 15). In the Greek language. Theme: One way of salvation for all. Justification by faith "through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus" (Rom. i. 16; iii. 24; v. 1; x. 12, 13; xvi. 20).

The doctrine which, in later years Martin Luther rescued, like a hidden and priceless jewel, from among the errors and ritual of the Roman Catholic teaching of salvation by penance and works. He was climbing the steps of his monastery on his bare knees, as penance, when the Spirit of God flashed light into his soul by the word, "The just shall live by faith" (Gal. iii. 11), and henceforth he preached Rom. iii. 22-26. "Watch and pray" against the work of evil in our time.

The Romans prided themselves on their laws being fair and right, their judges being just and true. Paul described to them: (1) A judgment-seat more solemn than any tribunal of Rome—on "the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ" (Rom. ii. 16, iii. 6). (2) A law so strict that not the slightest fault could be passed over (Matt. v. 17-48; James ii. 10). (3) A verdict on which depends life or death for evermore. (4) A Judge, "holy," "just and true" (Rev. xv. 3, 4; Isa. xlv. 21; Acts xvii. 31). (5) A way by which the guilty may be cleared and set free from sin and death (Rom. v. 9, vi. 22, viii. 2). (6) The new life the freed ones ought to live (Gal. v. 16-24). (7) And the power by which they can lead the new life (vv. 9, 10, 16, 26).

What will the Holy Spirit do for me? Show me "I'm the sinner Jesus came to save" (John xvi. 8, 9, 14, 15). Dwell in my heart to enable me to live to His glory (Phil. ii. 13; Heb. xiii. 21). To be like Jesus (John viii. 29; cannot v. 8; Heb. viii. 10). Call the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ my Father (v. 15; Gal. iv. 6; compare v. 9 with 1 John iv. 13).

Pass me not, O gracious Spirit,
Thou canst make the blind to see;
Witnesser of Jesu's merit
Speak the word of power to me,
Even me.

STANDING CONDEMNED.

An infidel lecturer was once labouring to prove the folly of believing in God, in the atonement of Christ and eternal life. When he had finished, an aged man stepped forward and narrated how he had once witnessed from a river's bank a boat borne down the current towards a rapid. On board was a man struggling desperately with one oar (the other being broken) to bring the boat to land. All his efforts failing, the poor fellow threw himself upon his knees and cried to God for mercy. "Marvellously the man was rescued from the brink of death; and now," added the speaker, "that same individual is before you attempting to prove there is neither God nor eternity."

GREAT POWER, NOT GREAT EFFORT.

Bishop Hall once remarked that when he looked into his garden he was taught of a covenant-keeping God, a God of life, not of death. The tiny stalk and the beautiful flower alike pointed the Bishop to God, and he was reminded of a lady who was in the habit of giving pots of crocuses, with helpful texts attached, to young friends who had publicly confessed the Lord. On one card were the words, "Consider the lilies, how they grow—not by great effort, but by great power." The lesson tells us of the Spirit by whose power Jesus was raised from the dead. He that raised up Christ shall also quicken our mortal bodies (v. 11).

A MISTAKEN SACRIFICE.

Not long ago a woman died suddenly, and on an inquest being held, it was discovered that two rosary beads were embedded in the flesh just over the heart of the poor woman. She had, doubtless, kept the beads in that position for a very long time, and, as a result, sacrificed her life. She thought to please God by mortifying her body; though, as we learn from the present lesson, we should, through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body; then we shall live spiritually (v. 13). The Lord does not desire that we should destroy the body; He would have us make it His temple. To live after the flesh means death; though as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God (v. 14).

Preparing for "The Derby."

IN view of the great opportunities for Christian work at Epsom Races during next week, may I earnestly beg the sympathies and prayers and practical help of God's people? Reinforced by the London City Mission, the Open-Air Mission will number about forty experienced evangelists, who, on this hard field, will once again attempt to raise the Gospel standard.

Special difficulties were met with last year; all the more is there need for prayer that these may be overcome on this occasion, and that free access may be granted to the racecourse, where the crowds assemble.

Nowhere in the world, surely, are the appalling powers of darkness so much in evidence as at this great Epsom carnival, and nowhere is there greater need for faithful, earnest, and loving Gospel testimony. Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

Open-Air Mission, 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.

Mr. O. L. Heatley, of the Race Course Mission, writes:—Once again we are actively engaged in preparing for the Epsom Campaign. As in the past few years, Miss Gurney of the International Christian Police Association, is co-operating with us in providing for the comfort of the large body of policemen who are on duty on the Downs during the four days.

Last year we had upwards of 800 men who availed themselves of what they consider a great privilege. Our Gospel Tent being the only one on the Downs, it is the only accommodation for them, and but for it they would again be thrown upon their own resources, i.e., either the Downs or drinking booths. Our workers are all honorary, the chief expense is that of hire of tent, &c., and literature.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

SECOND WEEK OF MEETINGS IN BELFAST.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

NOT for many years has there been in this city such a spirit of prayer and earnest effort to advance the Kingdom of God as during this week. Not only at the central meetings, but at many others, the power of God is manifest. The mission is a common subject of conversation on the streets, in the tram cars, and in numerous homes. Christians who have hitherto been strangers to one another, engage in conversation without formal introductions, as their hearts flow together and are enlarged. In the prayer meetings and those for inquirers, workers whose ordinary fields lie far apart are joining hand in hand to gather in the sheaves.

The week has been one of great blessing. Notes of thanksgiving are heard daily, and requests for prayer pour in from all sides. Among the incidents narrated at a recent meeting, Dr. Torrey told of a man, his wife, and daughter, who had gone to the meeting for women last Lord's Day. The man was refused admission, while his wife and daughter entered. He said to himself, "What if this were heaven, and I shut out?" He went to the men's meeting, where he professed his acceptance of Christ before leaving. Many of the young of both sexes are yielding to the Saviour. A young man, related to the writer, was converted a few evenings ago, and seven others in the same place of business have also avowed Christ as their Lord.

BRINGING THE UNCONVERTED.

The Ulster Hall being no longer available, owing to an arrangement for extensive repairs, the evening meetings have been transferred to St. Enoch's Presbyterian Church (Rev. John Pollock's), the largest in the city. It had been arranged that the ground floor should be open till 7.45 only to those who held tickets on condition that each should bring an unconverted friend or neighbour. Almost two hours before the time of meeting, people began to assemble outside the gates. Soon after seven all the space open to the public was filled, and the entire audience must have exceeded 2,000. The Carlisle Memorial Hall across the way, kindly granted for an overflow, was also filled. At the larger meeting the praise service was led by Mr. Alexander and the Fellowship Choir, after which Dr. Torrey gave a searching and solemn address on Dan. v. 27, "Weighed in the balances and found wanting." In response to his closing appeal many remained for conversation and prayer, most of whom confessed Christ before leaving. The overflow was in charge of Dr. Harry Guinness, who, with the assistance of Miss E. M. Froste and a special choir, rendered several Gospel choruses, after which he gave a timely and telling address on Luke v. 3. At the close a considerable number expressed their desire to be saved.

The noon meeting on Tuesday was largely attended, and marked by a fervent spirit of prayer and praise. Instances of blessing were reported which moved the meeting to sing the doxology as a spontaneous expression of joyful thanksgiving.

At one o'clock, in the Y.M.C.A. large hall, Dr. Torrey commenced a series of meetings for business men, taking for his subject, "Why do I believe the Bible to be the Word of God?" There was a large gathering of men on the ground floor, while the balcony was filled with women. The speaker held the eager attention of his audience as he set forth the testimony of Jesus Christ to the Scriptures, and the unique credentials of that Divine witness, as the first reason for his faith. As his arguments reached their triumphant conclusion he was frequently applauded, and there were many expressions of hearty appreciation as the meeting dispersed.

BIBLE READING BY DR. J. M. GRAY.

In the same place, the Bible reading was held at 3.30 p.m., and conducted by Rev. Dr. J. M. Gray, of Boston, whom Dr. Torrey had announced at a previous meeting as one of the ablest exponents of Bible truth in the United States. His lucid expositions of portions of Rom. v. proved most instructive and helpful.

The spacious church of St. Enoch's was again crowded in the evening long before the appointed hour. Several hymns were sung, including a new one, "Never lose sight of Jesus." The music had been composed by Mr. Harkness, Mr. Alexander's pianist, and the song has become a favourite. Dr. Torrey read a portion of Rom. ii., after which he preached on the Day of Judgment, from Acts xvii. 30, 31. While he spoke with singular power of the certainty, the universality, the basis, the Administrator, and the issues of the judgment, many, like Felix, must have trembled; and when Mr. Alexander had finished the solemn solo, "There's a great day coming," a good number rose in response to Dr. Torrey's appeal to seek the Lord. The number of inquirers was larger than on any previous occasion, most of them professing their acceptance of salvation in Christ.

Wednesday had been set apart as a day of fasting and prayer, and was looked forward to with unusual interest and expectation. It was understood that, as far as possible, business would be set aside for the day, and that those who had God's work at heart would give themselves to humiliation and prayer. A special meeting was held at 10.30 a.m. in Donegall Square Church, at which there was a large attendance. "Sweet hour of prayer" was sung, and Rev. Henry Montgomery offered prayer. Instances of answered petitions during the past few days were reported, and several persons, at the suggestion of Dr. Torrey, mentioned special objects for which they had been praying in their families or social circles.

One sister reported that at a meeting of nine persons one had been brought to the Saviour that morning. Rev. Dr. Gray having led in prayer, Mr. Alexander sang "Holy Spirit come in." Dr. Torrey spoke from James iv. 2, 3, on hindrances to prayer, particularizing wrongness of purpose, indulgence of sin, idols in the heart, niggardliness, unforgiving spirit, and domestic friction. Many afterwards engaged in prayer, until the special gathering merged into the noon meeting, at which Dr. Guinness gave a short address, referring to the many backsliders he had recently met with. He traced that grievous state to a lack of entire consecration, and comparing the condition of many believers to an ankle out of joint, said that while they were justified they were not adjusted.

The meeting for business men at one o'clock was very large. Dr. Torrey continued the subject of the previous day, giving as his second reason for believing the Bible to be God's Word, that of fulfilled prophecy. He cited prophecies regarding the coming Messiah and other events, which had been fulfilled in all their minute details, arguing that a book with such power of looking into the future must have God for its author. His third reason was the unity of the Book. Consisting of sixty-six different books, written in three different languages, by some forty different persons, on every plane of life, under every form of government, and covering 1500 years in the history of its writing, they found in the Bible the most marvellous unity. Dr. Torrey closed his lecture amid an outburst of applause, after which he dismissed the meeting with prayer and the benediction.

THE GIFT OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

The Bible reading at 3.30 was again in charge of Dr. Gray, his subject being in Romans viii. Speaking of the gift of righteousness, he dwelt on the effects of its reception, especially in the believer's inward experience. He was brought into a new sphere, being dead to sin; a new condition, conflict with sin; and a new possession, victory over sin. The subject was treated in a manner that left nothing but satisfaction in the minds of Dr. Gray's appreciative hearers.

The meeting in St. Enoch's Church was a memorable one. The audience included a party from Banbridge and another from Bangor. The "Glory Song" and other hymns were heartily taken up by the great gathering, and Mr. Alexander, with the Fellowship Choir, seemed at his best. Rev. J. W. Ballard led in prayer. Dr. Torrey's subject, as previously announced, was "Hell." Speaking in the most solemn and earnest manner of its certainty, its character, and how to escape it, he closed with an impassioned appeal to the unsaved in his audience. Mr. Alexander sang with touching effect, "Lord, I am coming home," and apparently not fewer than a hundred remained to seek salvation. The overflow filled the Carlisle Memorial Church, the adjoining hall being inadequate. Dr. Guinness was in charge, and many remained as inquirers.

On Thursday the noon meeting was presided over by Rev. J. H. Quarry, who slowly read the numerous requests for prayer as they were presented before God. Testimonies were given by some to blessing received the previous day.

OPEN-AIR MEETINGS FOR WORKPEOPLE.

Dr. Torrey's lecture at one o'clock again drew a large audience of business men and others. One man known to the writer had driven thirty miles to be present. Four additional reasons were adduced by Dr. Torrey for his faith in the Bible, viz., its immeasurable superiority over all other books; its omnipotence in resisting all attacks; it influence in lifting men to God, and the respective characters of those who accept and reject it. During his entire address every word seemed to tell on those who heard him.

During the same time an open-air meeting was held at York Street Mill, where a crowd of 2,000 workpeople gathered in their dinner hour. Addresses were given by Rev. Wm. Witherow, Rev. Wm. Maguire, and Mr. Wm. Grove—Rev. H. V. Brownrigg, Rev. James Mitchell, and others taking part. Such was the interest manifested that at the eager request of the audience another meeting was arranged for the next day.

The evening meeting in St. Enoch's Church was a record one in the mission. The edifice was filled to overflowing, the platform being crowded with ministers. Mr. Alexander introduced an old hymn, "Now the day is over," for which Mr. Harkness had written a new tune. Rev. M. Richardson led in prayer, and Dr. Torrey preached on "God's Blockade of the Way to Hell," from 2 Pet. iii. 9. A mother's instructions and prayers, a Sabbath-school teacher's efforts, sermons, providences of life, the wooing of God's Spirit and the atoning death of Christ were treated as obstacles placed by God in the sinner's way to perdition. At the close a very large number remained to the after-meeting, the great majority of whom professed acceptance of the Unspeakable Gift. Dr. Guinness addressed the overflow in Carlisle Memorial Church at the same hour, and subsequently spoke at a meeting for men, at 9.15 p.m., in Rev. S. Thompson's Church, Clifton Street.

On Friday forenoon Dr. Torrey addressed an audience composed almost exclusively of ministers of the Gospel. Those present will not soon forget the earnest and solemn words spoken to them by one who, himself the pastor of an important church, has had so large an experience of pastoral work.

During the dinner hour a great crowd of men and women again assembled at York Street Mill, and listened with marked attention to the brief and pointed messages addressed to them, while near the Queen's Island Shipyards a similar service was conducted by local ministers and others.

The evening audience at St. Enoch's was literally packed into the building. The subject of Dr. Torrey's address was, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" and at the close the number of anxious souls seemed greater than ever. Dr. Guinness, in addition to conducting the overflow meeting, which was also crowned with blessing, again addressed a men's meeting in Clifton Street Church at 9.15 p.m., at the close of which several expressed their decision for Christ. No fewer than nine meetings were held during the day, and the aggregate attendance probably exceeded 10,000. It is believed that during the week several hundreds have been saved, and the hearts of the reapers are full of the joy of harvest.

During the Sabbath five great gatherings assembled; the first in the Grosvenor Hall at 8 a.m., when about 2,000 were present. Under the leadership of Mr. Alexander, who wins his way to the hearts of all, the service of praise was warmly entered into, and Dr. Torrey gave a most profitable address on "Prayer."

The afternoon meeting for women filled the same building fully an hour before the time, about 2,500 being present. Dr. Torrey preached on Psa. cxix. 59, after which scores of women expressed their choice of the good part. Dr. Guinness spoke at the same hour with much power in the Y.M.C.A. hall, after which some fifty men avowed their decision to be the Lord's.

The evening meeting for men in the Grosvenor Hall was a most remarkable one. Dr. Torrey discoursed with singular force and effect on "What it costs not to be a Christian." About 100 men and youths professed faith in Jesus as their Saviour and Lord, while at least thirty additional inquirers were dealt with.

Dr. Guinness, assisted by Mr. D. A. Black, conducted the Women's Meeting in the Y.M.C.A. Hall at eight o'clock, when there were again many seeking the Saviour.

From Mr. William Grove.

The work has broken out in a glorious manner at Belfast. I had arranged to leave last Tuesday, when Mr. Alexander and Dr. Guinness said I must not go. There is much to do at the great dinner-hour meetings, the large overflow services and the work on Saturday evenings after the public houses close. I have been released from another engagement, and have decided to stay till the end of the mission.

Hundreds of souls are coming to Christ. On Sunday, the Ulster Hall was full at eight o'clock in the morning, packed out in the afternoon with women, and again with men in the evening. There was a mighty time of blessing, many coming to Christ. Dr. Guinness and I were at the afternoon and evening overflow gatherings in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, where in the afternoon about thirty, and in the evening fifty-five names and addresses were taken of those who decided for Christ.

I am arranging to have the tent in the month of June at Ballymacarrett, where most of the men engaged in Harland and Wolff's shipyard live. There are thousands of drunkards swarming some of the streets at the week-end. I am sure we shall be seizing a great opportunity, so many Christians are being stirred to think of the conditions of slumdom, and are ready to help in rescuing the perishing. It is a poor and needy neighbourhood. Mr. Charles Lepper and all the churches in the district are in full sympathy.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Mr. Henry Varley at South Kensington.

The mission held at Onslow Baptist Church, and conducted by Mr. Henry Varley, has been eminently successful. Whether the occasions for Bible study in the week day afternoons, or the evening addresses, be considered, deep and extending interest has existed. Situated where Ritualism and Romanism have a strong holding, the services have been timely and valuable. The preacher's clear and interesting exposition of Scripture drew together twice daily audiences composed very largely of men. The pastor, Rev. J. Garden, with the officers of the church, feel that no mission held for many years has taken a firmer hold upon the people of this part of the metropolis. Despite the trying weather on Sunday the goodly church was crowded. Mr. Varley's addresses upon "The Great High Priest passed into the heavens," and the "Pharisee and Publican," in the Old Testament, were listened to with profound attention. The mission closed on Monday night, when Madame Annie Ryall assisted in the service of praise in the crowded audience.

Canon Hay Aitken in Dublin.

Belfast is not the only part of Ireland that is just now being specially favoured with prospects of revival. Further south, in the Irish capital, there is a spirit of expectancy of great and lasting blessing, resulting from a seventeen-days' mission which that veteran preacher, Canon Hay Aitken, is conducting.

Much interest was aroused throughout the city when it was announced some time ago that Canon Aitken had accepted the invitation of Rev. J. O. Gage Dougherty (incumbent) to visit Trinity Church. There were many who could recall the wonderful results of which Canon Aitken's mission in the same place twenty-five years ago had been productive, and both those and others, whose own memories could not, in the natural order of things, serve them in this direction, looked forward with eager anticipations to a repetition of the remarkable time of blessing that characterized his first visit.

Canon Aitken arranged to bring with him Rev. James Nunn, rector of East Shefford, Berks, for the purpose of conducting a special series of meetings for the children and younger people, and also Mrs. Crouch to co-operate in the work among women. At the introductory service, which was held on Saturday last, a very enthusiastic welcome was accorded to these three servants of God. Mr. Gage Dougherty having briefly introduced the missioners, the meeting was addressed by Mr. Nunn, who said that the part of the mission with which he was particularly to devote himself—work among the children—was the happiest and sweetest he could undertake. Canon Aitken then delivered an interesting address by way of introduction, and recalled memories of his previous mission in Dublin in the year 1878.

On the first Sunday of the mission the preacher at both the regular services was Canon Aitken. For his first sermon he chose as text James i. 21 and following verses, and delivered an appropriate and heart-searching address, laying special stress upon the verse, "Receive with meekness the engrafted word." In the afternoon, at 3.30, three meetings were held, one for women addressed by Mrs. Crouch, another for children and young people addressed by Mr. Nunn, whose sympathetic manner immediately won for him a great share of the affection of those among whom he would work, and the third was for men only, at which Canon Aitken delivered a soul-stirring address on Isa lii. 1-3. At all these the attendances were very encouraging, and the presence of the Lord was realised. For the closing service the church, which has seating accommodation for nearly 2,500 was literally packed out in the body, while the gallery was also well filled. Canon Aitken's sermon was delivered with great power, amid a silence on the part of his audience that bore testimony to the solemnizing influence of the Spirit of God. There are undoubtedly "sounds of abundance of rain." H. J. R.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey. Our venerable friend, Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in a letter received last week, said:—

A few days ago I saw my neighbour, Mrs. Sankey, and she told me that her dear husband is still suffering sadly from his shattered nerves and depression of spirit. He could bear his loss of sight more cheerfully but for his utter prostration of bodily health. It is certainly a mysterious providence which permits this beloved "sweet singer of Israel," who has made so many others happier and holier, to be under the dark cloud of affliction! Let us pray that the cloud may yet be lifted.

Many of our readers, we are sure, will join in the prayer thus suggested. May God comfort the dear sufferer, and vouchsafe unto him much of His own presence!

The Education Crisis. Never was a policy more ill-timed or foolish than that of the Government in applying the closure to force through clauses of the London Education Bill. It is clear that free discussion has from the very first been proscribed, and the ultimate effect of this most un-English proceeding cannot be other than disastrous. Mr. Balfour makes light of the growing opposition to the Bill, and professes to know little about it. The gigantic demonstration in Hyde Park on Saturday he does not allow to have enlightened him. In every way the present crisis is regrettable. It is begetting an evil which cannot be eradicated for years. There can be no doubt whatever as to the depth and strength of the resistance offered to the measure by Evangelicals. Mr. Meyer, in his recent sermon at Christ Church, voiced the true feeling of the opposition when he declared that the protest was not political but religious, and was entirely a contest between the people and the priest. It is a call to all who would refuse the priest as teacher, to use every effort to destroy this reactionary Bill.

The Jesuit. Although the Church Times, in its ill-concealed sympathy with Rome, has had the bad taste to refer to the French Government as "the gang," it is obliged to admit that the attitude taken in regard to the Orders has been forced upon the administration by the dangerous development of the associations. Coming from such a source, its tribute to the Jesuits is a noteworthy one:—

For the present state of things the Jesuits are mainly responsible. . . . When England was wavering at the end of the sixteenth century, it was the Jesuit methods which created that anti-papal feeling which is not yet extinct, and destroyed the papal cause. It is the Jesuits who are responsible for the hopeless relations between the Pope and the Italian monarchy. They are universally distrusted. Go where you will—to England, France, or Italy, to Spain, in Protestant circles, in Catholic circles, you will find the same deep hostility to and dislike of the Jesuits.

The Lords and Betting. By a majority of nine the House of Lords has thrown out the admirable Betting Bill of Lord Davey. It was a Bill created as the result of the report of the Betting Commission, and was by no means too strong an attempt to grapple with this glaring evil. The reasons given for rejecting the Bill were puerile, and worse. A man, though he be a noble lord, who can bring himself to speak of the venerable Sir George Williams as "a person who described himself as the founder and secretary of the Y.M.C.A." (sic) makes a study of insulting the finest type of philanthropist in the country. The Earl of Durham can only see in the Anti-Gambling League men who are half Pharisee and half lunatic. It may be well for the country to see what kind of manners some Jockey Club sportsmen have learned.

Liberty to Demoralize. Both brewers and bookmakers will now breathe more freely since their "liberties" are to be so tenderly respected! Meanwhile, what about the liberties of the thousands of youths and maidens who are delivered over to the tender mercies of street bookmakers and other vampires of their order? What, too, are we to think of those who "desire to reform existing evils," and who after appointing a Commission to inquire into them, take the first occasion to reject practical measures for remedying the scandal of the streets? Can we be blamed if we doubt their sincerity?

The Sacrifice of Child-life. The annual reports from the health officers of most of the large towns in Lancashire again show points of resemblance in their painful references to the sacrifice of child-life, which gives so unenviable a notoriety to the two great manufacturing counties. With the mothers employed from morning to night in mills, or at the pit mouth, it is almost inevitable that the babes should be left without proper care, and that "quietness" is obtained for them through the hands of the chemist. Rev. R. M. Julian, of Burnley, states that 226 out of every 1,000 children born in that town do not reach the age of twelve months, and he attributes that dread condition of things to "early marriages and a low conception of the glory and honour of motherhood." The matter, however, cannot be disposed of so easily, for every student of modern civilization knows that other causes are at work. In the other great empires which preceded ours, and which died away from their centres, disregard of the value of human life, as compared with that of "national progress," developed with the growth of wealth; until at length, but inevitably, God sent the dread handwriting upon the wall. Must such a fate be ours?

The Ravages of Alcohol. The report, just issued, for 1902, of the Brighton medical officer of health, contains much that is of value to the student of sociology. Dr. Newsholme records the fact that, during the twelve months, nine deaths of men, and four of women, were returned as caused by alcoholism, or delirium tremens. He adds that those figures represent only a very minute portion of the mortality resulting from intemperance, the real cause of such deaths being, as a rule, concealed behind the headings of nine other diseases "which, with many others, are caused to a large extent by chronic alcoholic excess." Under one of these headings alone, that of "a disease almost solely produced by intemperance," forty-one deaths appear. Referring to three diseases, which Dr. Newsholme says, plainly, "represent the final wages of our two chief social sins," drink and immorality, the medical officer remarks that, although the figures are sufficiently serious as they stand, and display evils of great magnitude, showing about four times as many deaths as those from typhoid, there is annually from them a much larger mortality than the certificates reveal:—

Against the latter disease a constant war is waged, and it has declined to an enormous extent. Against alcoholism, but little has been effected, and the figures show a tendency to increased, rather than to decreased, mortality.

Perhaps, however, the keynote of this section of the striking report is found in a word to the moderate drinker, viz., that frequent daily tippling does more harm to the drinker than even occasional outbursts of intoxication.

Good and Bad Literature. Certainly the remarkable development of what is termed "light reading," from the "penny dreadful" up to (or down to) the fashionable novel, is anything but a satisfactory proof of the spread of education. Shortly before his death, Dean Farrar called attention to the fact that five novels are published in England every day, including Sundays, or nearly 2,000 per annum, and he added:—

Many of them are no better than deplorable rubbish, which it is an utter misuse of time to read. . . . To waste precious time over tenth-rate inanity is reprehensible dissipation.

As some of these worthless and injurious books run into thousands of copies, and pass from hand to hand, it is difficult to estimate the harm they do. It is easy, however, to do something in the direction of checking the evil by circulating good books, and many Christians might give valuable help by lending about healthy volumes which now lie unused upon their shelves.

A Good Example. It is gratifying to learn that the Greenwich Borough Council, in connection with delegates from other Councils, has been considering the question of "noxious publications," and has framed repressive bye-laws which the County Council is being asked to adopt, so that they may apply to the whole of London. These regulations are of a comprehensive kind, and make it illegal to print, publish, sell, offer for sale, or distribute any newspaper, book, pamphlet, magazine, bill, picture, print, photograph, drawing, or other publication containing any indecent or immoral matter, or any matter the tendency of which is to deprave or corrupt those into whose hands the same is likely to fall.

This is legislation of the right kind, and it has been undertaken none too soon, in face of the quantities of pernicious literature now in open circulation. It is to be hoped that other councils will follow the excellent example set by Greenwich.

"The Good Old Tract." A testimony from the Lord Chief Justice based upon personal experience in his judicial capacity must necessarily possess exceptional value. Speaking at the recent 104th annual breakfast of the Religious Tract Society, his lordship paid a high tribute to the value and influence of the tract, "the good old tract," as he termed it :—

I have had a long professional life, and a great deal to do with people who had not kept within the bounds of the law, or had not been under the influence of religion. In such cases I have had personal experience of the good done to them by tracts. Men, most callous and indifferent to religion, were found after incarceration or death to have carefully valued a page of a tract, or of some sacred book. Men and women might be induced to read by the attractive commencement something that might bring home to them that the story was the history of their own life, and thus they would have received the means of redemption and the knowledge of the Saviour.

Naturally, after much experience, he expressed a hope that "no one would be foolish enough to underrate the good influence of tracts;" and now especially is the season to circulate them.

Righteousness, then Peace. The re-appearance of Dr. Maclaren in the pulpit, after his long absence through illness, is very welcome; and his first message upon "Righteousness first, and then peace," may well be taken as a manifesto to the Church and the nation. The age needs that message badly. The tendency of men is to seek the nearer good—the bonheur of life—without troubling about the radical condition which alone creates the good. "Peace at any price!" is a foolish cry; yet it is in reality uttered by many who would repudiate it when taxed with it. Particularly in social reform is it so. Earnest people are applying themselves to the alleviation of distressing symptoms, in ignorance of or forgetfulness of the deeper causes of infelicity. There is no true peace without righteousness. The foundation of all righteousness must be right relation with God, and this, unhappily, is ignored by too many reformers to-day. Righteousness between man and man can never be realized apart from righteousness toward God. We append some extracts from the worthy doctor's utterance :—

Do not suppose that the great message of the Gospel s merely forgiveness. Do not suppose that its most blessed gift is that man is no longer guilty since Christ has died. All that is true. But there is something more than that which is the basis of the other, and that is that by my faith in Jesus Christ I am so knit to Him that there passes into me by His gift a life which is created after His life, and is intact, cognate, and kindred with it. No doubt it is a mere germ, but the seed so implanted, though the least of all seeds, has in itself the promise and the potency of triumphant growth. . . .

Here is the great, blessed, characteristic of Christian morality. It does not say, first, "Aim at good deeds, and so grow into goodness," but it starts with a gift, and says, "Work from that."

Christ comes into the world to bring peace at the far end, but righteousness at the near end, and therefore, for the moment, strife . . . Christ, and Christianity, when it keeps close to Christ, is a ferment, not an emollient . . . and so it comes to pass that Christian men, in the measure in which they are true to their Master, turn the world upside down. . . . Would to God that all Christian men deserved the name of troublers of Israel!

The New Testament in Modern Speech. Many have awaited with lively interest the appearance of THE NEW TESTAMENT IN MODERN SPEECH, by the late Dr. R. F. Weymouth, and it is a pleasure to announce its issue in a compact volume, clearly printed on thin paper. (2s. 6d. James Clarke & Co.) Avowedly "an idiomatic translation into everyday English from the text of the 'Resultant Greek Testament,'" this cannot but prove a singularly suggestive work to students of the inspired Word. Being somewhat paraphrastic the translation occasionally appeals to the reader more as an interpretation than as a translation. In some cases this tendency seems to limit the power of the book. Reserving for a future issue an extended notice of the translation, we are pleased to call attention to the large amount of labour represented, not only in the body of the work but in the copious footnotes. In a word, the translation is the outcome of learning and piety in earnest co-operation.

The Death of Atheism. The clever writer in the Morning Leader, who each Monday sketches some "man in the pulpit," devoted his article last week to a description of an "Ethical Society" gathering. He points out the fact—surprising to himself, as he says—that Atheism is dead. Rationalism, formerly atheistic, has now assumed the airs and ways of a religion. There are hymns, lessons, and a "moment's pause"—which does duty for prayer. The old, coarse vulgarity has gone, and is now replaced by an element of religiousness. The change is very significant and means much. The day for blank denial is always short-lived; men weary of pure negation. The religious forms assumed by the Rationalists bear eloquent witness to man's need of God. Their instincts are stronger than their reason. "The world by its wisdom knows not God."

The Redeemer's Satisfaction. "He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied." There is no note more cheering to all who are associated with the Redeemer than this—He shall be satisfied, He who is most concerned about men, and who has done most for them. This is the grand ultimate of His work. In this light there can be no failure of anything that He has undertaken. And the work He has entrusted to us is His work, and however imperfect may be the human instruments He has chosen, behind all is His mighty Power and Will. We serve a Master whose Will is supreme. Yet we must not make an ill use of this fact, as many do, and argue, with the worst of logic, that because He will be satisfied He is therefore bound to save all men. The Cross represents God's all-sufficient work for man's redemption, and if to any it is a savour of death, the fault is in that perversity of spirit which "will not come" to Him for life. The Cross is not less a triumph because some refuse its efficacy. Christ will be satisfied because His Love will triumph wherever it is received.

Whitsuntide.

THE HOLY SPIRIT—OUR TEACHER.

(1 John ii. 20-27).

THERE is no need to fret
O'er questions wide and vexed;
Tossed to and fro in wind and wet,
Despairing and perplexed.

No need that we complain
Of learning, yes, from youth!
Yet never able to attain
The knowledge of the truth.

There is no need to sit
At many masters' feet;
Now here, now there, in restless fit,
For training incomplete.

Our need is all supplied
In God the Holy Ghost!
How restful and how satisfied
Are those He teaches most!

His the anointing oil
To open filmy eyes;
His full abiding serves to spoil
The effect of Satan's lies.

If any man will do
God's will with honest heart—
Is He not pledged to bring to view
Each hidden obscure part?

WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

Communion Wine.

AFTER a recent meeting conducted by Dr. Henry, five young ladies sought his advice as to joining a church in which alcoholic wine is used at the Lord's table, they having recently taken the total abstinence pledge. Dr. Henry's reply was emphatic that they should preferably join one where unfermented wine is adopted.

This is a question ever with us, though happily less so than in former years. It is a gratifying fact that, in Nonconformist churches at least, alcoholic wine is the exception, not the rule, and certainly it cannot be said that their communion services are less numerously attended, or less devout, than those of the Established Church. Practically, it is largely a matter of custom. No doubt a sudden change from one kind of wine to another is apt at first to distract the thoughts of the worshippers; but this soon passes away, and those who from childhood have habitually used the unfermented wine would be quite as distressed at the sudden adoption of the other in their Communion service.

QUESTION AND ANSWER.

Is it compatible with the character and ministry of our blessed Lord that His table should in any way become a stumbling block to even one of His followers? This is the heart of the question, and demands sincere treatment from every disciple of Christ. Whatever may have been the local conditions under which He moved on earth, the principles at the foundation of His teaching give a negative reply. He lived and died to bless, and at no point in His life do we find His supreme purpose set aside.

That there are earnest Christians who partake at His table of fermented wine, with a conscience void of offence, is beyond question, but it may safely be assumed that many of these have never given serious thought to the subject in its relation to their fellow-men. We have, indeed, met some (though they are few), who pride themselves upon their "liberty" to use alcoholic wines thus, but with the majority it is more a matter of usage than of conviction.

GROUNDS OF APPEAL.

There are two classes of people on whose behalf we urge the use of non-alcoholic wine: (a) Those who have at some time been victims of the drinking habit; (b) Those who, being life-long abstainers—whose numbers happily are ever increasing—are quite unaccustomed to the seductive taste of alcohol. Can it be with our Lord's approval that, in either instance, that taste should be revived or created (as the case may be) at an ordinance which commemorates His dying love to men?

In our judgment, a grave responsibility rests upon officers of churches in any denomination, who thus place a snare before those who are seeking, with themselves, to honour their Lord. Surely the table of the Lord ought to be the safest as well as the most sacred place on earth. Young people especially will reasonably ask, "How can it be wrong to partake in the home of that which is permitted in the church?" And those who are abstainers have equal ground for inquiring why that is permitted in the church which is deprecated in the home. Surely the time has more than come for all who profess to follow in the Master's steps, to show a united front on this important subject. It is not a question of preference, but of principle, and that principle the same as moved the Saviour in all that He did and taught.

The Holy Ghost.

GOD has in the midst of these years revived His work; He has saved sinners and quickened saints. Now He looks for fruit. Nor does He look in vain. On every hand we find Christians realizing the fact of their heavenly calling, and seeking by the help of God to walk worthy of it. May the Lord the Spirit guide us in attempting to set down a few plain thoughts on faithful service gathered from His own Word.

The awakened sinner often seeks by doings of his own to propitiate God; the converted man is exposed to a similar temptation as to serving Him. Restless nature will be always doing; Jesus came to give us rest. Esau was a cunning hunter, a man of the field; Jacob was a plain man, dwelling in tents.

God requires after conversion just what He did before; viz., that we should yield ourselves unreservedly to Him. A working man who had lost his arm told us, as the light of the glorious Gospel shone into his soul, "I see it now; I must just chuck myself into the arms of Jesus; the same as when I had my arm amputated, I told the surgeon, 'I am in your hands, you must do with me just what you think best.'"

Nothing pleases a doctor so much as that his patient trusts him; and God is well pleased with His people when they commit the keeping of their souls in welldoing unto Him, as unto a faithful Creator. The Creator must best know how to use the creature He has made, and He is glorified when we treat Him as a faithful Creator, who will not abuse the confidence reposed in Him.

Yet when one, who had been transformed from the chief of sinners to a chief apostle, beseeches saints, by the mercies of God, to present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, their reasonable service, how many shrink as from a hard requirement. Oh, foolish heart, wherefore dost thou doubt the blessed God? He watches to do thee good. He has given thee gifts which He alone knows how to use, and it is He who worketh in thee first to will, and then to do, of His good pleasure. Therefore, "Yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God."

Does thy soul cleave unto the dust, and does it grate upon thine ear when the Spirit bids thee "Be not conformed to this world"? He will do all the work Himself; He asks you to allow yourself to "be transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh." "Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean?"

Nothing can be more futile than to lay down rules for Christian service which are not written in the Book. The members of a man's body are at the bidding of the man's will; the members of Christ's body ought to be at the bidding of the will of Christ. And for one member to say to the other members, we should all do this, or we should all do that, is an assumption which denies the Head, who is our Wisdom; a denial also of the diversity of office distributed to the many members of the one body, and of the gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us. "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every one that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly according as God hath dealt to every one the measure of faith."

The Pharisees of old troubled the minds of the Gentile converts with circumcision and the law of Moses; to which Peter replied, "Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the Gospel and believe. And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as He did unto us; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith."

Observe the antithesis. The Pharisees say, "Circumcision and the law of Moses;" Peter answers, "The Holy Ghost." God bare witness to their being saved through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, by giving them the Holy Ghost.

This gift was more clearly acknowledged in early days than now. Peter does not speak of miracles or tongues, but of that gift of the Holy Ghost which is God's witness that a man believes. This was not peculiar to those days, for Paul declares, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." This gift of the Spirit is the grand distinction between the New Covenant and the Old. "And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep My judgments and do them." "I will pour My Spirit upon thy seed, and My blessing upon thine offspring."

The Lord the Spirit—the Spirit of Christ—the Holy Ghost—is the author of all real prayer and of all real service. And He is given to all who believe in Jesus, not to be a mere inoperative Tenant of His temple, but to be the moving power of a Christian's life.

There was no subject on which Paul was more energetic and decided than on this. In his mind the work of Christ and the gift of the Spirit are indissolubly linked together. "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? . . . before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you. This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, . . . that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith." Have we sufficiently considered this blessed fruit of the accursed tree—that Jesus bore our curse, that we might receive the Holy Ghost?

The law of Christ is infinitely stricter than Moses' law (see Matt. v., vi., vii.), and yet it is, as James declares, a "perfect law of liberty." For the "ministration of death," at which even Moses said, "I exceedingly fear and quake," was written and engraven on stones, a law to which the law of sin in our members is entirely antagonistic, and therefore only capable of making the offence abound. But the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death; because in accordance with the New Covenant ("I will put my laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts") that law, holy and just and good, is written by "the Spirit of the living God, not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." And not only so, but, inasmuch as we are not yet delivered from this body of death, God "hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into our hearts, crying, 'Abba, Father.'" And while the flesh is against the Spirit, blessed be God, the mightier Spirit is against the flesh, that we may not do the evil things we would.

Do we, the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, realize the value of "that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession"? If we are the temples of the Holy Ghost, shall we defile the temple of God by sin? If the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death, shall we yield obedience to the law of sin which of old wrought in our members to bring forth fruit unto death? or shall we attempt to serve God in the oldness of the letter, and not in the newness of the spirit? Having begun in the Spirit, are we now made perfect in the flesh? God forbid.

Oh, vain endeavour, for a living member of Christ's body to seek satisfaction and rest in the world's ways—to fill a soul, new made after the image of the Son of God, with things offered to the idols of self and sense. Oh, happy portion of God's children, to walk amidst this restless and weary world in the comfort of the Holy Ghost! The little ones crying "Abba, Father!" because He has sent the Spirit of His Son into the hearts of all who are the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ. The young men overcoming the wicked one; for God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. The fathers counselling and directing those who are younger in the faith, warning against seducing spirits and doctrines of demons; for "ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things."

"How beautiful upon the mountains," the world beneath her feet, breathing the clear pure air of heaven, is the Church of Christ, walking in the comfort of the Holy Ghost! A city set on a hill, which cannot be hid. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good; that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth." We wait for our incorruptible inheritance, but the Holy Ghost is the earnest of it. He is with us on the earth, and will not leave the earth until the temple in which He dwells is raised into the glory of the heavenly Jerusalem. Therefore we may have days of heaven on the earth.

Some one may ask, "How am I to be filled with the Spirit?" In the last day of Israel's last and greatest yearly feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, "If any man thirst, let him come unto ME and drink." As though He said, If, after all your rejoicing, there remains a want which even the Feast of Tabernacles has failed to satisfy—a yearning for more than earth can give—come unto ME and I will slake that thirst. And more than that, "the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Yea, "he that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said"—he that receives all that the Spirit has written in the Word concerning Me—"out of him shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

Oh, wonderful meeting of extremes! The same pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb in heaven, flows also from him who believes that Jesus of Nazareth—the carpenter's Son, Mary's Son, the poor and sorrowful Man, with visage marred more than any man and His form more than the sons of men—is the Wonderful Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. The Holy Ghost, in the plenitude of His divine power and blessing, fills the earthen vessel in which Jesus dwells; and flows in rivers of living water from the new creature who has learned to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour, by faith in Him who stood in the broad ways of the city, in the last great day of the feast, and cried, "If any man thirst, let him come unto ME and drink."

Christian Temperance Ideals.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

TUESDAY evening of last week, the first of the United Free Church of Scotland Assembly, was devoted to the question of Temperance. The Assembly Hall, which has been enlarged since last year, and now holds something like 2,000 people, was full.

Principal HUTTON, in the absence of Lord Overtoun, occupied the chair, and said that in regard to the need of temperance reform we were all deeply impressed with the need, but not too deeply. The ravages of strong drink should lie heavily on our consciences, and the remedy was total abstinence. Slight applause having followed this remark, he said, "I would like you to be more enthusiastic." The demonstration made in response was much more lively. The public-house he declared to be a manufactory of vice; and, as licences are from year to year, he could not see where compensation should come in. He was against any guarantee for compensation by the Legislature, even from the publicans. We were acting as if it were a vested interest, and as if we were obliged to compensate; but there was

NO OBLIGATION, EITHER LEGAL OR MORAL.

Sheriff GUTHRIE, who followed, said they were told that temperance people have changed their principles. His answer was that they had modified their views of policy; but he denied that they had changed their principles, and he held that next to religion no question was so urgent at this hour. He contributed to help on other reforms, such as the suppression of vice; but the drink evil lay at the root of vice, and for the sake of our country we should seek, as life is short, to make some progress in dealing with it. He had come to the conclusion that a half loaf was better than no bread, and while all on the platform might not agree with him, he felt that in seeking reform of the licensing question he would like to carry the predominant partner with him. In regard to the Home Rule Bill it was the interests of the predominant partner that led to it being thrown out; and, as in the matter under consideration, the moderate drinker was the predominant partner, he would like to carry him along with them in their endeavours to stop the granting of new licences where they were not needed. In the matter of progress the U.F. Church must not be in the rear, but in the van.

Mr. T. W. RUSSELL, M.P., said the condition of 40,000,000 people at home ought to count for as much as 10,000,000 abroad, and the temperance question, involving so much, underlies all social and political progress.

ADDRESS BY DR. HENRY.

Dr. HENRY, who was the chief speaker of the evening, gave a magnificent address, in which he expressed his appreciation of the opportunity. Granted a programme and a man, he said, with the blessing of God all things are possible. He was grateful for all that had been accomplished, but more must be done. To begin with, we must transfer the emphasis primarily to the Church, as the organization that must lead in solving the problem of temperance reform. The Church must lead, and not follow, in all moral and social progress; and to it we must look to remove from us the clinging curse of the century. A politician had said that "when evil men combine, the good must associate," and among all workers there ought to be interdenominational and non-partizan federation to arrest the drink's assassinating power.

The situation at the present time made an imperative demand for the better organization of all the Christian and temperance forces that are already existing, and the pulpit has within itself great power. In the time of the American Civil War, Jefferson Davis said that "he feared the northern pulpit more than the boys in blue." But, if the ministers would take the lead, their leadership must be based on three things—(1) a deep sense of the need for reform, (2) profound compassion for the people, (3) sustained and self-sacrificing effort. We must have a wise and noble leadership in this movement, and if the churches are to lead, then the ministers are the ones to whom we naturally look to direct and perfect the organization of their own people. They must muster, marshal, and mobilize the Christian hosts, and lead them on to victory. Then the times demanded that there should be a widespread agitation regarding the whole question, and that there should be a well-defined plan that would give unity and progress to the work.

"NONDESCRIPT ENDEAVOUR!"

Something was needed to unify the Church. There had been too much nondescript endeavour. Light required to be thrown in on the whole matter. Someone asked John McNeill when he was in Australia what he would do with spiritualism, and he replied, "Turn up the gas!" So as to this whole question it was needful that we turn up the gas. We must marshal the Christian conscience and arouse public sentiment, for public sentiment was the bedrock of temperance reform.

The time had come for the federation of all good citizens to aid in securing the faithful enforcement of all liquor laws; and also to plan for better legislation by securing the nomination and election to public office of men who are in sympathy with temperance reform; and another element of success would be that of putting temperance work on a solid business basis, in order that adequate financial support might be secured; this to be supplemented by an aggressive campaign having for its end the promoting of total abstinence among the people.

THE SPIRITUAL ASPECTS of the temperance question must not be overlooked, and these must be pressed home, particularly among God's people, as never before.

Concluding his eloquent address, the speaker urged that a firmer grip be got of all the great fundamentals of the temperance problem, and affirmed that unless God, and the Bible, and the Spirit of Jesus Christ, were relied on to sustain and strengthen us in this great fight, we might as well give over at once.

It was a noble address, and falling as it did on the ears of many ministers of the Gospel, one dare not doubt but that splendid results will follow. A lofty moral tone pervaded every syllable of it, calculated to touch the heart-chords and spur the endeavours of those who seek the deliverance of their fellow-men from drink's debasing power. J. C.

Another correspondent writes:—The address was full of telling argument, supported by an array of splendidly marshalled statistics, and the appeal at the close breathed the loftiest Christian sentiment. Dr. Henry also preached three stirring Gospel temperance sermons in three of the largest Edinburgh churches on the previous Sunday, and along with Mr. Russell, M.P., spoke at the annual temperance breakfast, where he gave a little gem of a speech showing what had been accomplished in the United States by the combined action of Christian temperance people. The position of the movement in the United Free Church of Scotland is very hopeful. About five-sixths of the ministers are abstainers, and the number of Congregational temperance societies exceeds 1,200, with an aggregate membership of 130,000.

Traits of God's Word.

"He authenticates himself," says one, in speaking of Christ; so say we of God's Word, it authenticates itself.

1. Firm and unalterable, for it is "settled in heaven" (Psa. cxix. 89).
2. True and reliable, for it is "true from the beginning" (Psa. cxix. 160).
3. Enlightening and guiding, for it is a "lamp" and a "light" (Psa. cxix. 105).
4. Expansive and searching, for it is "exceeding broad" (Psa. cxix. 96).
5. Pure and sanctifying, for it is "pure" and "tried" (Psa. cxix. 140, M).
6. Sweet and satisfying, for it is "sweeter than honey" (Psa. cxix. 103).
7. Divine and wonderful, for "Thy testimonies are wonderful" (Psa. cxix. 129).

London's Protest.

THE demonstration against the London Education Bill on Saturday was a singularly impressive scene. According to the count made by the Daily News census staff, upwards of 140,000 people entered the gates of Hyde Park from 2 to 5.30 p.m. Those who saw in the Bill proposals of a reactionary character attended to protest in the name of social progress; those who detected in its provisions an attempt to infringe popular rights made themselves heard as freeborn citizens; while others who saw behind the measure the hand of the priest engaged in an endeavour to indoctrinate the children in Romanism at the public expense, were present to utter the most emphatic veto in their power. On many hands the procession was spoken of as a Protestant demonstration, and such it was in the broadest sense of the word, for Protestantism stands for political freedom as well as Scripture doctrine. The following excerpts from the daily press show how the procession impressed general onlookers:—

Whatsoever may be the actual significance or value of the demonstrators, it could not be denied that these people were in grim and deadly earnest, that they knew something at least of the Bill which the speakers denounced with one voice, and that they believed, rightly or wrongly, that it would produce the evils which were prophesied of it, that it was framed in the spirit of sacerdotalism and obscurantism which was freely imputed to His Majesty's ministers. There are, of course, a vast number of persons, not present, who hold the contrary opinion, and a large mass besides who are simply indifferent. But the fact remains that the demonstration was the largest, the most earnest, and the most intelligent that has been seen in Hyde Park for a score of years.—The Times.

If ever a city spoke in terms unmistakable, that city was London on Saturday, when, packed together like maple leaves in Canadian woods after the passage of a storm, people met to tell the world that the power of the priesthood is a thing of the past in England. That, to my mind, was the keynote to the impulse that stirred the folk. They did not forget that they were the descendants of a populace that had once known how heavy the heel of the Church can be, and they made it plain that London is ripe for revolt. They felt the shadow of the Church upon their liberties, and were restive—thousands upon thousands of people, all looking upwards towards a dozen platforms, a forest of eager, expectant faces, the faces of a throng that had not come forth to see a reed shaken by the wind, or to hear some new thing. They were in earnest, these folk. They knew as well as the men on the platforms the details of the obnoxious Bill they had come out this bright May day to oppose.—A. G. Hales, in the Daily News.

There have been many processions to Hyde Park, but never, probably, one in which the top hat was so much in evidence. City men in frock coats and shiny leather boots came straight from their offices to support their pastors. At the other end of the sartorial scale were artisans and operatives, but even these were in best bib and tucker. To the eye accustomed of late to associate public processions with the dingy outlines of the unemployable, the sight was agreeable, and it was rendered more so by the presence of feminine Nonconformity, studious in aspect for the most part, yet gaily and brightly arrayed. These ladies were church members or Sunday school teachers, or both; and despite the fagging walk from the Embankment, they carried themselves with an air of resolution which spoke well for their sincerity. They were evidently of the sort which, for a cause deemed just, would demonstrate till they dropped. To the young men—and Hyde Park rather negatived the idea that Nonconformity has lost its hold on young men—the heat and the dust were trifles. They came up beaming, in big battalions, apparently with no regrets that the loss of an afternoon's cricket or cycling was the penalty of the promenade.—Daily Telegraph.

West End Evangelistic Choir.—The inaugural meeting took place at Exeter Hall on Monday evening, about thirty-five being present. A provisional committee was formed, and Mr. J. A. Wakefield Blenkhorn was asked to assist Mr. Clapperton in the leadership. The next practice will be held at Exeter Hall on Monday, June 8, at eight prompt. Christian singers are heartily invited. GOSPEL HYMNS AND SACRED SONGS (Morgan & Scott) will be used. Forms of application may be obtained by sending stamped addressed envelope to Mr. C. I. Clapperton, Exeter Hall, Strand, or at the practice.

SUNDAY, May 31. Psalm. xiii.

The Psalm of Long Patience.

FOUR times over we meet the ejaculation, How long? (1, 2). It is as though patience were almost spent, and the long-strained tension of the soul could hold out no more. We may be thankful, if our souls are alive to the loss of the light of God's face. Some there are who never know what it is to lose it, because they never have it. "Lighten mine eyes, Lord." Bring again the sunlight into my heart, that my life may be lit up, and my eyes sparkle in its beams!

The devout soul turns to prayer—"Consider and answer" (3, 4). Through the dark night let us never cease to look up, and never cease to accost God as our God still. See how faith holds fast to Him, saying, My God! for His own credit's sake, He may not let the enemy overwhelm us.

"I will sing" (5, 6). Mr. John Philpot was consigned to the Bishop of London's coal-house, whence he wrote to a friend, saying, "Though my lord's coal-house be very black, yet it is more to be desired of the faithful than the Queen's Palace. The world wonders how we can be so merry under such extreme miseries; but our God is omnipotent, who turns misery into felicity." So it shall be with you; be of good cheer. God shall turn the water of your tears into the wine of joy. Trust Him.

MONDAY, June 1. Psalm xiv.

The Judgment of the Atheist.

The word, Atheist, is somewhat out of fashion. Professor Huxley invented another, as more suitable—Agnostic. Men cannot say that there is no God, because, even if they could not find traces of Him in this world, they could not be sure that He is not in some other; so they call themselves agnostics, implying We do not know. "In the wisdom of God, the world in its wisdom does not know God."

The word for fool comes of a Hebrew root, used in Isa. xl. 7, of the flower that fadeth because it has lost all the juice or sap that made it lovely and useful; so one of the old commentators says that the fool is a sapless fellow, the carcase of a man, in whom all religion and right reason are withered and wasted, dried up and decayed.

Men begin by leaving God, the fountain of living waters, for cisterns of their own. Then, as the Apostle says, when they glorify Him not as God, neither give thanks to Him, they become vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart is darkened; "professing themselves to be wise, they become fools." Next, when they have turned their back on God, He gives them over to a reprobate mind (Rom. i. 21-28). They become corrupt in God's sight and abominable in man's.

2, 3. Quoted by the great Apostle (Rom. iii.) to show how urgently man needs the Gospel. There is no difference; we are all flawed. We may not all have gone equally far from the fold, but we have all left it. Only one Man that ever walked our world was sinless and perfect.

4, 5, 6. Men who reject God are apt to be merciless to the children of God. They have a natural antipathy to them; but they cannot persecute them without an inward trembling as to the results. In his heart of hearts, Haman dreads Mordecai, and Herod John the Baptist. God is very near His suffering people.

TUESDAY, June 2. Psalm xv.

The Morality of Sainthood.

The saints should have a higher code of morals than the world, and only when the life which is hidden with Christ in God flowers out in becoming behaviour before men, is it justified. The man of the world, for the most part, does not aim at a higher standard than is given in the Ten Commandments; but the child of God regulates his conduct by the Sermon on the Mount, and aspires to be inspired and moulded by the love of God.

The question (1). For us this means surely, Who shall live in daily fellowship with Thee? Who shall dwell in that blessed elevation of soul that is lifted above the fret and turmoil, the storm and stress of life, drinking in the light and love of eternity? We have a right to this through the propitiation and intercession of our Blessed Lord; but we can only actually enjoy it when we have consciences void of offence towards God and man. The same question, receiving much the same answer, is put in another form in Isaiah xxxiii. 14.

The answer (2-5). The upright walk, so that a man can look his brother in the face; the righteousness that deals honourably in all manufacture, trade, and service; the true and charitable spirit, which forbears to take up a reproach; the uncompromising bearing towards wicked men; the integrity, which never swerves when once it has passed its word, though the heavens may fall—these are the characteristics of the holy soul in its dealings with its fellows. Ver. 5 clearly refers to the usury which a money-lender, or one who traded on his friends' necessities, might extort.

WEDNESDAY, June 3. Psalm xvi.

The Goodly Heritage of the Saint.

If michtam means golden, it well befits this Psalm (see also lvi., lvii., lviii., lix., and lx.). It is of rare gold from end to end; and its key is given by the Apostle Peter, who, when under the special influence of the Holy Spirit, said, "David speaketh concerning HIM (Acts ii. 25-31). Paul also quotes from this Psalm, and asserts that David wrote of the Divine Man, through whom is preached the forgiveness of sins (Acts xiii. 35-38).

1. The believer's prayer. How pointed and personal it is! And how sure of an answer! Those who are called are being kept for Jesus Christ (Jude 1 and 24).

2-6. The believer's contentment in God. He does not need to travel outside God to find the satisfaction which his soul needs. "I have no good beyond Thee" (2, R.V.). And because the soul is satisfied with God, it takes great pleasure in His saints. "They are the excellent in whom is all my delight." The believer can have no complicity with anything that dishonours God; and finds his portion in God.

When a settler in the Far West reaches his allotment he begins to prospect it, to ascertain what it contains, and then proceeds to develop its resources. But how shall we ever be able to realise all that is ours in having God? All that God is, is for us; but let us go up to possess this good land, which flows with milk and honey. Ah, what a goodly heritage is ours! Though we push out our fences to all eternity, we shall never reach the outer limit of the love or power of God.

7-11. The believer's outlook. Surely our Lord may have thought of these words when He was dying. As He went down into the grave, He said, "Thou canst not leave Me here." So with us all. There will be times when we fall into the ground to die, not to remain there, but through the dark grave to emerge into a wider, fuller, and more glorious life.

THURSDAY, June 4. Psalm xvii.

A Cry for Vindication.

1-5. The Psalmist appeals to the Divine judgment-seat. "Hear . . . attend . . . give ear." But to the urgency of prayer we must add a just cause—"not feigned lips." Happy is the man who is so sincere and transparent in his heart and life that he is open to a visit from God, at all hours, even in the night; whose mouth does not trangress; and whose feet are kept from the paths of the destroyer. But there is only one way of keeping right—it is only by the Word of His lips. When the believer is sure that he has lived up to his light, so far at least as he knew, he has great confidence in appealing to the High Court of the King's Bench.

6-12. The Psalmist describes His enemies. They were wicked men, and deadly in their hatred. They thirsted for blood, with all the greed of a hungry lion. But what a title he coins for God in v. 7! He is the God who saves by His right hand; and He looks on His saints as the apple of His eye (8). There is no part of the human frame more carefully guarded than the eye. There are the hedge of the eyebrows, the socket of the great frontal bones, the curtain of the eyelids, and the fence of the eyelashes. Moreover, if the eye be threatened, the right arm is at once lifted to defend it. But God will not do less for His saints. Yes, and as the tear-water pours over the surface of the eye, cleansing it from grit and dust, so the precious blood goes on cleansing from all sin.

13, 14. The contrast of the ultimate destiny of the Psalmist and his foes. The latter shall be cast down. Though they have been used by God as His rod of chastening, they shall be cast away from His hand, because they took an unholy joy in the sufferings they inflicted. Their portion is wholly in this world; but the saint, when he has escaped from their toils, will be more than compensated and satisfied with his vision of God.

FRIDAY, June 5. Psalm xviii.

A Song of Victory.

This is practically the same as 2 Sam. xxii., and is one of the most magnificent triumphant lyrics of the Old Testament.

Notice the exquisite and repeated alternation of I and Thou. "I will love Thee;" "I will call upon the Lord;" "He sent from above;" "He took me;" "Thou wilt light my candle." Would you be wise, says one, read the Proverbs; would you be holy, read the Psalms. And, we may add, Would you learn the secret of peace and victory, it is in the recognition of that union of the soul with God which enables it to count on Him with absolute certainty.

1-3. Because of what God is, and what He has done, should we not love Him? Heap on God all the sweet names you can devise, and be sure to prefix the little word, my.

4, 5. The dangers and perils of our lot. "Snares of death," "Floods of ungodly men," "Sorrows of hell." There are times when these seem to rain on us in thunder-showers.

6. Prayer and its immediate entrance to the ear and heart of God! "My cry came into His ears." Such is our only resource!

7-20. The rescue of the hunted, harried soul by the mighty advent of the Almighty! Attended by earthquake and tempest, He comes, "flying all abroad" (as Sternhold puts it), to the rescue of His child!

21-50. The Psalmist realized that there was no impediment or hindrance on his side to the co-operating grace and power of his Almighty Friend. Notice and ponder the burst of holy ecstasy which succeeds. All things are possible to him that believeth. Troops and walls cannot arrest our progress; and God, whose way is perfect, makes ours perfect also.

SATURDAY, June 6. Psalm xix.

The Works and Words of God.

1-6. If the eighth was composed at night, this must have been composed in the morning, when the sun was coming forth from His chambers. It seemed to the Psalmist as though day were welling forth speech to day, and night breathing out knowledge to night, passing on from lip to lip and age to age the story of God's wondrous works.

And they do this silently (verse 3, R.V.). There may not be a ripple on the waters, no movement in the leaf of tree or blade of grass, no tremor in the air; but the silence is eloquent of the presence of God. And yet how far-reaching that voice! (4, and Rom. x. 18). O blessed Sun of Righteousness.

7-11. Six names for the Word of God—six characteristic qualities, and six Divine effects! Would you be converted, and restored? Would you be made wise? Would you have a rejoicing heart? Would you have enlightened eyes? Would you realize the permanent and enduring? Would you discover infallible truth and unimpeachable righteousness? For all these, you must come to the Word of God, reading it prayerfully under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and seeking the Word in the words (12, 13, 14). How eagerly the Psalmist desires to be kept from sin, that it may not grieve God; and to be made acceptable to Him!

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

QUITE recently a subscriber to the funds of the St. Giles' Christian Mission called the attention of the superintendent, Mr. Wheatley, to a young man who had been convicted of theft at the Mansion House. On the expiration of his sentence he was met at the prison gates, and three days afterwards was placed in a situation—his salary to commence at £1 per week, and to increase within a few months to £1 10s. per week.

After he had been in his new situation nine days, the young man wrote Mr. Wheatley in the interest of another clerk who had been convicted of a like offence. He said: "Even in my deplorable state of mind, I was greatly struck by the poor fellow's manifestation of grief at the degradation he had brought upon his wife and child, and by his avowal to lead a different and better life in future. His last words to me were that I would go and see his wife and child, and this I have done, and find he has a thorough good wife, little deserving the trouble brought upon her. She is managing to keep the home together (receiving a small allowance from her father, which stops on her husband's release). We may well imagine her state of mind as to the future, for he has not a friend in the world who will assist him to get anything to do. May I, therefore, beg of you to assist this fallen man to obtain employment and redeem his character?"

Without delay the second sad case engaged the heart and hand of the superintendent of the Mission. The poor wife of the imprisoned man was visited and helped; and he himself was met on release. A situation was got for him at a commencing salary of 30s. a week, and in a few days he wrote to Mr. Wheatley:—

"I cannot express to you how grateful my wife and I feel for the great kindness you have shown us, and can only ask you to accept our best thanks. It will be my earnest endeavour to prove to you, by doing my utmost to give every satisfaction, how much I appreciate your goodness."

It is a pleasure to report that both these young men are comfortable in their new places. They have learned a hard lesson, and the St. Giles' Christian Mission has kept them from going under in the painful ordeal.

Mrs. Booth's New Undertaking

AN interesting ceremony took place last week, when the "Oriolet" Cottage Hospital, Loughton, which has been known as the pioneer vegetarian hospital, was opened as a Hygiene Home of Rest and Open-Air Sanatorium. Its owner, Mr. Arnold Hills, has handed over the property to Mrs. Bramwell Booth, under whose auspices the Home will be conducted for the benefit of Salvation Army officers and other Christian workers needing rest and renewal of health.

The open-air ward is to be used as a hospital for receiving mild cases of chest complaints. Visitors and patients will be required to conform to the rules of the institution, which exclude the use of flesh food of any kind whatever. There will, of course, be a plentiful supply of natural diet—nuts, fruit, grains, wholemeal bread, milk, butter, eggs, &c. Mrs. Booth hopes to demonstrate as fully as possible the beneficial results of a right use of a natural diet, combined with fresh air and the curative properties of water. "Oriolet" is delightfully situated in its own grounds, near Epping Forest, within easy reach of any part of London.

In the Home of Rest there is accommodation for twenty visitors, while the open-air ward is capable of receiving eight patients. Both buildings have been renovated and refitted at an outlay of £350, and every department is replete with modern conveniences. The charge for entertainment will vary according to the accommodation given. It is hoped that it will be possible to reserve a few beds for those who are unable to pay. Toward the support of such cases Mrs. Booth will gratefully acknowledge help from those who are interested in the spread of the principles and practice of hygienic living.

The City Temple Pulpit.

A SERIES of remarkably enthusiastic gatherings took place at the City Temple on Thursday last, when Rev. R. J. Campbell was formally recognised as Dr. Parker's successor. Throughout the day the great building was thronged, and the welcome extended to London's new pastor was a spontaneous expression of kindly feeling on the part of Anglicans and Nonconformists alike. While it was a day of rejoicing, Mr. Campbell acknowledged with emotion that to him it was a sacred occasion, the influence and memory of which would abide for many days to come.

Rev. J. H. JOWETT conducted a service in the morning, and preached a powerful and impressive sermon from the words, "Unto me who am less than the least of all saints is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." It was intended to hold the reception in the Lower Hall, but the room soon proved too small, for over a thousand guests were received.

The first speaker was Canon HENSLEY HENSON, who assured Mr. Campbell that his appearance in London was regarded with the greatest friendliness by the mass of Anglican clergy in the Metropolis. Addresses were also given by Revs. J. H. Shakespeare, C. Silvester Horne, and Dr. Horton.

Although every available space in the Temple was occupied in the evening, hundreds were turned away. Lord KINNAIRD, who presided, spoke not only as a member of the Church of England, but on behalf of all young men's societies, in welcoming Mr. Campbell. Canon FLEMING said that for forty years he had striven and prayed for a closer union between Nonconformists and Churchmen, and expressed the hope that London's new minister might live to see the day when their separation would be bridged over, and their differences melted down. Rev. W. L. WATKINSON and Dr. ROBERTSON NICOLL having voiced the greetings of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches, Mr. CAMPBELL was received by the immense congregation standing. He had come to the City Temple because the Spirit of God had drawn him there. It was not easy to shake off his first love at Brighton, and the presence of some 200 of his former congregation that day had been a source of great encouragement. It was his hope that the City Temple would become the young men's church of the Metropolis.

How We Get the Men.

WE do get them. Our front gallery is almost full of them, and among them are many who have never until quite lately attended any place of worship. The Gospel has certainly not lost its power to attract and hold them. This is how they were led to come.

The pastor wrote a letter of invitation, saying that the front gallery was reserved for men, and that a warm welcome would be given to them. The letter was cyclostyled, and fifty copies were put into the hands of the workers, each undertaking to distribute the letters to certain men whose names he gave, so as to avoid overlapping. Each letter was put into an envelope, and addressed, and went to fifty men as a letter from the pastor containing a definite invitation. All did not accept, but many did, and having come once they come regularly. That was our method. We don't say that it would have the same result in all places; but God has certainly blessed it with us.

Of course we try and make the services attractive to the men. We have given up anthems. Instead of these we have bright Gospel messages sung, either as a solo or by the whole choir, many of them from Sankey's collection. We have hearty singing—Diadem, Nativity, Cranbrook, Praise, Calcutta, are favourites; and latterly we have introduced the Glory Song and "Hallelujah for the Cross." And not only the people but the pastor is helped by the singing of such hymns as these. G. W.

The "Welcome Home," Canning Town, E.

SOME interesting particulars of the work at the "Welcome Home for Sailors," Canning Town, E., are given by Miss Child, who says:—"Heavy gales and collisions have thinned our ranks among the sailors, but others are constantly filling up the gaps; and many among them, we are thankful to say, are pressing into the Kingdom, and joining the numbers of those who are on their way to the haven above. One, who had been sadly giving way to drink, writes:—'I am pleased to tell you we arrived quite safe after a long voyage of over five months. Through God's merciful goodness I am quite another man since going to see you in March last. I need scarcely tell you that I have strictly kept the pledge I then took, and firmly intend keeping to it. By your extreme kindness I have been indeed led to live a new life.'

"All the varied agencies for the good of sailors have been carefully kept going. The Home has been well used, temperance work being kept to the front. Nightly meetings in our mission-room have had much of God's blessing. 'I came in here,' said a young American sailor, 'feeling very low and depressed, and while I listened my sins seemed to me more than I could bear; but as I was preparing to go out, a man by my side said to me: "Why don't you get saved to-night, brother?" The thought flashed into my soul and I knelt down there, and soon had the knowledge of sins pardoned. I have been telling my shipmates to-day; they only laugh at me, but they cannot take away my peace.'

"Many come among us who have been sadly addicted to drink and terrible evil habits; but prayer and effort work wonders, and many are the miracles of grace we have the joy of seeing God work in our midst; some are thoroughly destitute, they have been in the "far country" and spent all in riotous living, but we thank God when we see the devil's outcasts made new creatures in Christ Jesus.

"The work is many-sided. We have a Home for those who are far from their childhood's homes, where the utmost is done to throw around them good and holy influences, and where temperance is at all times advocated. Our 'musters,' the first Tuesday in every month, as well as our nightly meetings, and the ship visiting and correspondence with men and workers in various parts of the world, help to make the lives busy of all engaged in this work."

A Y.M.C.A. for Crouch End.

THE premises which have been acquired at Crouch Hill for the Crouch End and District Young Men's Christian Association were formally opened recently in the presence of a large attendance of local ministers and friends interested in the movement. The need for a Y.M.C.A. at Crouch End has long been felt, and it augurs well for the future of the society that it commences with eighty members. The premises have been entirely rearranged to suit the needs of the Association. There are classes for Bible study on Sunday afternoons and Tuesday evenings, and numerous organizations are being set on foot. The late mission by Gipsy Smith did much to arouse interest in this movement.

The host of the evening was Mr. W. C. Parkinson, who referred to the great scope there was for such an institution at Crouch End, since so many youths remain untouched by the churches. He mentioned that it will be managed by young men of accredited Christian character, as it is desirable that they should feel the responsibility of the work. Among those wh took part in the proceedings were Rev. Dr. Rowland Rev. H. Laurence (Christ Church), Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. J. Dix Lewis, Mr. Jesse Page, and the Secretary (Mr. J. Muir Beddall), to whose zeal and energy this branch of the Y.M.C.A. mainly owes its existence.

Mr. F. Woodcock who left England some thirty-three years ago, is shortly coming among us on a visit. He expects to organise a camp of Gideons, an organization of Christian commercial travellers. Mr. Woodcock hopes to be in London from May 26 to June 8; and letters may be addressed to him at 42, Anson Road, Tufnell Park, N.

Medical Mission at Sousse.

EIGHT years ago, Sousse was opened to Gospel effort, after a thousand years of Moslem darkness. Colportage and tract distribution not being permitted, there is a special call for the medical mission. All the same, many "Wordless Books" and copies of the Gospels have been circulated, and the medicine bottles bearing Gospel messages. The Moslem, proud in his faith, suffers much in sickness, and longs for relief. Christian medicine can give this, and each year about 4,000 visits are recorded; over 30,000 since the station was opened; and during the last twelve months, 4,584.

Soon the need of some shelter for serious cases from a distance, was felt, and the kind gift of a Christian gentleman in England enabled a wooden shed to be hired. As time has gone on, a better place with five rooms and two outhouses has been secured. In this simple hospital or baraka, the very poor and the stranger are welcomed with typical Eastern freedom, and get medicine and sometimes food. It affords an admirable opportunity for getting into spiritual contact with the people, because here lady missionaries can visit and instruct them, and every evening at sunset they are gathered for a Gospel service. Here questions can be asked and answered, also difficulties removed. It is remarkable how much the people have to unlearn. They are taught that all Christians are bad, idolators; that Jesus did not die, and is not the Son of God; that to say, "There is no God but God, and Mohammed is the prophet of God," will admit them to heaven—no matter what evil they may do.

Gradually we see a change in these baraka patients; the opposer becomes the quiet listener, and not unfrequently the listener becomes the verbal confessor and believer. He who searcheth the hearts alone knows the true and the false; but we believe the day will reveal many who have touched the hem of His garment by faith, and have been made perfectly whole. "I was like a beast and knew nothing till I came here," said a woman, as she began to explain the Gospel message to the other patients.

Widespread, indeed, is the influence of this Medical Mission. Kairouan, a holy city about forty miles inland, has been visited every fortnight during the past winter. As we have walked down from the railway station there has been a crowd, ever increasing, of sick folk waiting for the opening of the door; and how attentively now the white robed men and again the black robed women have listened to "the old, old story," all so new to them! The lease having run out, we recently had to tell them that we should not be able to come again for a time. How sad they were!

Djemâa, or the camel market, is another place we have been visiting fortnightly. Here people are gathered from far and near to buy and sell their wares, but specially camels and other animals. Here we have a hired place. At first we went round the fair-like market, with a crier shouting before us, "The doctor from Sousse is here! Who needs doctoring? And may God give healing!" Now, the street is full of people waiting for us, and we need no advertisement. Very encouraging it was the last time we were out, when a man among the patients silenced an opposer with "No; Jesus is the Saviour." We believe we have good and numerous results; but we have none to talk about, because after a thousand years trusting in and repeating untruths, the Arab is a man whose word is of no account, and the truth about whom it is extremely difficult to fathom.

One thing we know, that God is true, that Jesus is worthy, that He has said "go and make disciples of all the nations," and that if we are His witnesses, whether the field prove hard or easy, fertile or stony, in person or by proxy, we shall not lose our reward.

Wanted! those who will share the good work and the "Well done!" The great expense of consultation and treatment elsewhere have, in the past, made the villager and the Bedouin rely upon the devil dancer, the ignorant quack, in the hope that somehow things will come right. What happens now is, someone from a village hears of the Medical Mission, comes and gets benefit, and ever afterwards is ready to advise other sufferers to come. So that there is hardly a district in the whole country from which patients have not been received.

Before the medicine for the body comes the medicine for the soul, and profoundly interesting are the services before each Medical Mission meeting. The workers often feel the solemnity of speaking—a dying man to dying men—to those who have never before heard and may never again hear the Gospel message. How often the sick one says: "I want good medicine, medicine which will cure me." The doctor, conscious of many limitations, is anxious to do his very best, and often a fortnight's medicine is none too much to begin a cure. Hence the expense is very heavy; frequently 20s. worth of one drug (Iodide of Potassium) is used every week.

About half the expenses are met by the poor people themselves by a small charge (first made to keep down the crowds who came), and God has graciously supplied the rest through His servants. Once, after a letter in The Christian, a lady sent a gift of £100, which was a grand lift, and we went in the strength of it many days. Again there is need, and the baraka is closed to patients; the sending of them away last week was a sad experience. The poor things could not understand it, and thought we were unkind, when we only were unable. The good news and work is spread, too, by visits away from Sousse. A Worker.

Mrs. Churcher writes:—"You will be glad to hear that the balance on our drug fund is on the right side again—thank God. It was a great joy to us and to our poor people when we were able to reduce the fee to half-a-franc, and reopen the Baraka."

FROM KABYLIA.

A friend who had sent a little help to a mission station in Kabylia, received the following reply:—

"Your gift came as a remarkable answer to our prayers. The heat last summer was so great that the figs (the staple food of the Kabyles) were partly burnt by the sirocco. The famished poor come now to our station begging for food. We have been praying much in their behalf, these last few days, and the Lord has heard and answered."

The Queensland Kanaka Mission.

ON the sugar plantations in Queensland, thousands of South Sea Islanders have been employed for many years, being brought to Australia and sent back at the end of their term of service by recruiting vessels. For some years past, a most interesting and successful work has been carried on among these dusky labourers, resulting in the conversion of many. Fifteen missionaries, male and female, spend their lives in teaching the Kanakas and winning them to Christ.

At present it is estimated that there are over 6,000 of these islanders in Queensland; but the Commonwealth Parliament, at the instance of the Labour Party, passed a law ordering the deportation of all the South Sea Islanders from Queensland by 1906. It is the earnest wish of the missionaries that these three last years of opportunity in Queensland may be times of great blessing and revival among the Kanakas, and they would plead for the prayers of God's people to this end. They are intensely anxious that the Christian men may be firmly established in the truth, and that many may return to their native islands to witness in the power of the Spirit for the Saviour.

Among Jews in Russia.—2.

AFTER leaving Wilna, I made a short stay at Minsk, the chief town of the province of the same name, a town of about 120,000 inhabitants, more than half of them being Jews. In Minsk, since 1888, the Mildmay Mission to the Jews has had a Bible depôt in the house, and under the charge of Pastor Meyersohn. Since its opening, 156,119 New Testaments and portions of Scripture, as well as 25,000 tracts and tract magazines have been distributed, partly in the depôt itself, but mostly in missionary journeys to a number of towns in Poland. During the same time eighty adults and thirteen children have been baptized into the Christian faith in Minsk.

A long and tedious journey from Minsk brought me to this great mercantile port of half a million inhabitants—Odessa. It is as unlike Russia as anything in Russia can be, being thoroughly cosmopolitan. A large part of its mixed population is Jewish, 185,000 being the figure for the town, and 300,000 the computation for the town and vicinity. It ranks third, therefore, in the cities of the world for its number of Jews, New York being first and Warsaw second. The Jews are of all classes and shades, and there is very little to be seen here of the Ghetto courts in Polish and West Russian towns.

I preached yesterday to the Baptist community here, with whom were gathered a number of Jewish Christians and friends interested in the work among Israel. The pastor, Mr. Fülbrandt, had just returned from a journey in the Crimea; and, later, I heard with great interest his account of the thirst for Divine things, and the spiritual communion he was able to have with both Mennonites and Stundists. The old Mennonites being, in the eye of the Russian Government, a foreign sect (originally Dutch), enjoy full liberty in worship; they are pure in doctrine and life, warm-hearted and earnest. Their leading tenets are—(1) Baptism by pouring; (2) refusal to use the sword, i.e., to enter military service; (3) divorce not allowed; and (4) refusal to take oaths.

In the Baptist community here in Odessa, the effects of a recent revival are still to be seen. One evening in November last the pastor went to the meeting with a load on his heart. His prepared address was forgotten; he spoke under a strange impulse. A pause was made for prayer, and a young Berlin sculptor, till that moment an atheist, was heard to exclaim, "O God, if Thou exist, and these things be true, reveal Thyself to me!" The power of God was upon all, and, unconscious of time, they did not break up till half-past one in the morning. Still, none actually yielded to Christ that night. During the following days forty-two men and women, mostly young, accepted Christ as Saviour and Friend, and on Good Friday last twenty-three of these were baptized.

On the evenings of April 28 and May 11, we hold (D.V.) a specially convened meeting, and trust to have both Jewish and Gentile hearers. To-morrow, if God will, I pass on to the scene of the recent massacre. I feel as if one were about to enter a city of murderers still red-handed. So serious an outbreak against the Jews has not occurred since the Middle Ages. The need and suffering are great, and I hope to see what is being done and can be done to staunch with Christian philanthropy the wounds that Christian (?) cruelty has once more inflicted on the suffering race.

Malaga, Spain.—Mr. William Greene (3, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.) writes:—"There is a debt of about £30 on the Matamoros Gospel Hall. It would be a great relief to receive this amount soon. We are much encouraged by the work at our new centre at Villanueva del Rosario, in the province of Malaga. A site on which to erect a hall there, has been given. Besides the excellent spiritual work going on, there is growing opposition to the priests and their superstitions."

In the "Neglected Continent."

A TALK WITH PASTOR OLSSON.

PASTOR EMILIO OLSSON, well-known for his missionary labours in South America, is staying in London for a few weeks in order to make known the needs and opportunities of evangelistic effort among both Romanists and Indians in his dark and difficult field.

In the course of a chat with a representative of The Christian, Mr. Olsson stated the other day that he has spent, in all, twenty years in South America. In that time he has carried the good tidings into all the Spanish-speaking countries, and has circulated no fewer than or portions. Recently he concluded an adventurous journey through central Brazil, penetrating into the very heart of the continent.

"What is the spiritual condition of the people, Mr. Olsson?"

"In many respects lamentable. Thousands have never heard the Word of God. I travelled 3,000 miles, and met not one Christian. Yet, there is a hungering after God. In the towns one experiences no difficulty in getting listeners, and everywhere it is easy to arouse interest in the Word of God. For example, I met one man who told me he had been looking for a Bible for three years. Another old man, eighty-six years of age, listened as I told of Christ's love for sinners, and then cried, 'Blessed be God for such good news! It is the first time I have heard this glorious story.'"

THE PRIESTS' ATTITUDE.

"And how do the priests treat you?"

"They are, of course, bitterly opposed—at least, until I secure an opportunity for a little talk. One priest, to whom I offered a Bible, said, 'I would like to burn the Bible, and you with it.' We must remember, however, that many priests speak in ignorance, never having read a Bible. Another priest said in Spanish, 'Atras, atras, tu Satanas' ('Get thee behind me, Satan'). I smiled, and spoke kindly to him, pointing out that if I was in error it was his business to convert me. He said, 'Sit down,' and we read the Gospel together. Presently he exclaimed, 'How beautiful, how good!' 'Yes,' I replied, 'I told you it was the best book in the world.' We became fast friends, and after begging me to give him some copies, he said, 'God go with you. Go on and sell your books.' If possible I avoid controversy, endeavouring rather to direct attention to the atoning sacrifice of our Lord."

"The common people; how do they receive you?"

"They, too, are bound by superstition but I have much to praise God for in the way of encouragement. For instance, at one town in the North of Chile I visited 4,000 people. That is, I in the town, endeavouring to sell copies of the printed Message of Life. At one house, I told a man that I had a book of God to sell. He replied, 'I have no need of it, for my religion is the best in the world. Come in and see.' I entered. He had on his walls many pictures and figures of saints. In front of one of them a light was burning. 'Look at my religion!' cried the man. I allowed him to talk until he was tired. Then I asked permission to speak to him on my religion. I tried to present the pure Gospel of Christ, and to explain salvation by faith. He drank in the water of Life. 'You are right,' he said at length; 'you are right, it is beautiful.' I then invited him to extinguish the candle in front of the image, pointing out that it was a dead thing, while he could have the living Christ. He trembled, hesitated, and then blew out the light. Then we prayed, and I believe he emerged from darkness into the light of God.

KNOCKED AT EVERY DOOR

"In my last journey, northward from Buenos Ayres to the Amazon, not a letter from my wife and family could reach me for six months. There are many savage tribes in the vast interior whose existence is scarcely known, and the work was necessarily of a pioneer character."

"And your immediate object is——?"

"To arouse interest in the work, which, by the way, by no means consists of itinerant preaching. We have a permanent station at Adrogué, Buenos Ayres, where Mrs. Olsson remains in charge. The premises, however, are too small to accommodate the people, and the efforts, upon which a gracious blessing is being given, are hampered in consequence. We hope to erect a suitable chapel and schoolroom, at an estimated cost of £1,000."

Pastor Olsson will be glad of opportunities to tell his interesting story, in public or at private gatherings. His address is—Foreign Missions Club, 149, Highbury New Park, N.

The Melbourne Revival.

THE story of the recent revival in Melbourne has been re-told by Mr. Thornton Pearson (secretary, Melbourne Y.M.C.A.) at the noon-meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A.

At the outset Mr. Pearson paid an earnest tribute of recognition to the praying band of faithful men who for years devoted themselves regularly to prayer, the burden of their cry being, "O Lord, send a great revival." Their example, happily, was by no means thrown away. When it became known that Dr. Torrey, Mr. Alexander, and Mr. Edgar Geil, were prepared to undertake missions, the churches organized praying bands, twelve to twenty, in connection with each church, and all meeting in small numbers in the homes of the leaders. For seven weeks prior to the commencement of the great Mission, there were 17,000 people thus meeting week by week, still to pray, "Lord, send a great revival."

The effort was launched in faith in a gathering entitled, "The Inspirational Meeting," in Melbourne Town Hall, which was densely crowded. The ministers had taken action, and devoted themselves both to organization and preaching. In addition to the evangelists named, and Mr. J. J. Virgo, there were many effective soul-winners at work. There was, indeed, a general condition of preparedness. First, fifty outlying districts were missioned, chiefly by means of tent meetings, and everywhere they were packed, and many souls turned from darkness to light. There were 47,000 people assembled night after night, and a deep hungering for God was manifested.

Then, all effort was directed to the centre of the city. The Town Hall was filled thrice daily. A striking feature was the "double-barrelled" service, as it was called, when the women assembled for an hour's meeting and then filed out at one side as another great crowd, of men, came in at the other in time for their service. There were 8,000 persons gathered at the final meeting for converts, and the total cost of the mission, £3,200, was raised without difficulty in the city meetings alone, no collections being taken at the suburban gatherings.

Mr. Pearson attributed much of the good effect, under God, to the strength and comprehensiveness of the central committee, which embraced Evangelical believers of all denominations, and also representative of undenominational organizations.

A splendid example was set by Christian employers, who in some instances closed their factories and sent their people in 'buses to the meetings. "One large draper's establishment," said Mr. Pearson, "was transformed for the time being into a Gospel meeting house."

Substitutes to Keswick.—The response to our appeals last year was most encouraging and generous, and enabled assistance to be given to many clergymen, ministers, and deaconesses to attend the Convention. Many applications for this year are already coming in. Those who cannot go to Keswick themselves in July, are invited to send a "substitute," or to help those who cannot afford to go at their own charges. Communications should be addressed as early as possible to Mr. J. T. Budd, 23, Pembroke Crescent, Hove, Brighton.

A Progressive Work in Rome.

Rev. WILLIAM BURT, D.D.

SINCE Elizabethan days the heart of many a lad in Cornwall and Devon has thrilled to the cry of "Westward ho!" and he, too, has set sail across the seas in search of a career, if not in search of earthly fame. It was, therefore, but natural that a lad, sixteen years old, in quiet little Padstow upon the Cornish coast, the son of a widowed mother, and the eldest of her four children, as he looked across the sea toward that great far-away Continent, resolved that he, too, would seek his fortune there. His father, the captain of a sailing vessel, had died when he was eight and a half years old. The lad felt himself the head of the family, and that it lay with him to provide for his mother, brothers, and sister; but he was God-reliant rather than self-reliant.

One day a good woman had invited the choir boys of the village church to the little Wesleyan chapel, and then and there the heart of William Burt had been won for God. How Providence would shape his steps, first westward to America, and then back to the Old World to contend with the forces of the Vatican at its very citadel, he did not then know. He did "know" whom he believed, and felt himself definitely called to God's service. The family altar was set up in the house, and he threw himself ardently into Sunday-school teaching and Band of Hope work. Two years after this spiritual crisis of his life, in June, 1870, he started alone for America, and, landing at Boston, went to live and work at Warren, Mass. It was not long before he had earned enough to send for the other members of the family, and make a home for them.

As soon as they were comfortably settled, and could provide for themselves, with the quiet purpose which characterized him from the first, William Burt began his own school life. Till then all his spare time in the early morning and in the evening had been given to study, and often the lad had sat bending over his books by firelight, too poor to buy a candle.

Four years from the time of his leaving England he graduated with honour from the Wesleyan University at Middletown, his university expenses having all been paid by working at his trade during the vacations. In 1881 he graduated as B.D. from the Theological College, and became pastor of a small Methodist Episcopal mission church in Brooklyn. About this time he married, and his wife has ever since been his true helpmeet, always ready, with Christian devotion, to give up her husband to the claims of Christ's kingdom. Two years of very happy and successful service terminated with his call to a much more important church in Brooklyn.

God continued to use him greatly, making him a means of blessing to hundreds. In 1885 he recrossed the Atlantic, visiting England, Scotland, and Ireland; but, perhaps, in no place was his heart more deeply stirred than when he found himself once more in the home of his childhood, and the little chapel at Padstow where he had been won to Christ, now himself preaching from its pulpit!

It was not until 1886 that William Burt's real life-work was made clear, when he was transferred to Italy, and began work at Milan. His friends in America parted from him with deep regret, but with the full belief that God had called him to the evangelization of Italy.

At Milan Dr. Burt was able to build a new church; and two years after, on going to Florence, he organized the Theological School, which later on was transferred to Rome. In 1890, eighteen years after his conversion, he and Mrs. Burt went to Rome, and the work done there speaks for itself. God has used his organizing capacity and his gift for setting others to work, to establish educational centres on a varied scale. A noble block of buildings at the corner of the Via Firenze and the Via Quirinale is the result of his efforts. It comprises the American and Italian churches, the new and important publishing house, the Theological School, and the Boys' College, from which four pastors and five theological students have been sent out. All the sons of General Ricciotti Garibaldi, grandchildren of the national hero, have been educated here.

Besides these, two fine buildings represent the Young Ladies' College and the Girls'

REV. WILLIAM BURT, D.D.

Home School. The latter numbers fifty-four pupils, and some who have been trained there are now the wives of pastors and missionaries. The work carried on at the Young Ladies' College is full of promise. It is under the direction of Miss Vicary, a woman of wide sympathies. Roman Catholic girls belonging to the upper class—amongst their number other grandchildren of Garibaldi—receive a liberal education, and are taught, without entering into the field of controversy, to read the Bible and to look on it as the law of their life. Here Dr. Burt delights to hold a short service every Sunday morning, and his kindly face and smile inspire confidence in the pupils.

In the midst of his arduous labours he found time, when the Home Refuge for Converted Priests was founded five years ago, to undertake its directorship; and he has borne the brunt of this work also. It means much for these men—breaking often with their entire past, unlearning the training of years in the ways and doctrines of Rome—to have a friend to watch over them, bearing with their failures and inspiring them with hope for their future. Dr. Burt's words of counsel, always kindly, are sometimes the more incisive because of their brevity; as, for instance, when to an ex-priest about to leave for England, he merely repeated two words emphatically: "Be sincere! Be sincere! Be sincere!"

"We look upon Dr. Burt as our father," wrote one ex-priest lately from the Home Refuge, and he expressed the feeling of all. At the present moment the Italian Church under his direction, in charge of Rev. A. Taglialatela, is being thronged on Sunday evenings, and the latter writes with deep joy of the way God is using the ministry.

A popular English writer, two of whose books have since been placed on the Index, was visiting some of the sights of Rome, several years ago. A priest who occupied a prominent position acted as his guide. "It is the work of that man, Dr. Burt, which we fear most," this priest remarked gratuitously to his companion. It is, in fact, chiefly against the Methodist Episcopal Church in Rome that the clerical party has instituted the society known as the "Preservanda Fede." Not long since a newspaper, the official organ of the Church of Rome, stated, "If things go on at this rate, in twenty years all Rome will become Methodist."

The present king of Italy, like his father, the late king, has accorded several audiences to Dr. Burt, and a short time since made him a Cavaliere of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus in token of appreciation of his work.

Dr. Burt also superintends the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in northern Italy, in Switzerland, and in Austria. He has undertaken the responsibility of the Boys' Protestant Industrial Home in Venice with its fifty inmates. Many of the boys educated in this Home are now doing well as pastors and schoolmasters, and the whole merits liberal support.

During the seventeen years that Dr. Burt has been in Italy, seventeen new churches have been inaugurated, which mean as many new centres of evangelization. During this period also the Methodist Episcopal Church has done much for the evangelization of Italians in other countries, having sent four pastors and two evangelists to Switzerland, two pastors to Trieste, eleven to the United States, and one to Buenos Ayres. Many have been converted through the instrumentality of these men, and, returning to their own country, have become in their turn fervent preachers of the Gospel.

The joy of the Lord is his strength, and he has learnt to cast away care as it comes upon him. He sees the immense possibilities that lie before the Italian nation if the Gospel overthrows the chains of superstition. "Christ loves Italy! Christ will lead Italy!" So said his friend, James Wall, on his death-bed, after giving the best years of his life to work in Rome. William Burt believes this too. The blessing has begun, and those who have "come to the help of the Lord against the mighty" in the City of the Vatican expect to see great things.

A Licensing Scandal.—At a temperance meeting held recently at Treherbert, Glamorganshire, the Mayor of Cardiff, in the course of an address, declared that there were forty public-houses in his town which were not paying concerns to either landlord, tenant, or brewer. The reason why they were kept on was the hope that the magistrates might be prevailed upon some day to consent to the licences being transferred to other parts of the town where there would be prospects of better trade and financial success.

3.—EARLY LESSONS.

AFTER the call to definite ministry (Luke v. 1-11), involving constant and close association with Jesus, we have to consider the special training of Peter leading up to, and immediately following, his choice as one of the Twelve. It is necessary to study every passage very carefully and to try to realise the particular impression made on him by our Lord, and what special aspect of Peter's character is revealed. Ever bear in mind the continuous influence of our Lord on Peter by reason of continuous fellowship, even though now we study only those incidents where Peter is particularly referred to, and thereby watch some of the results of the training.

I.—A SERIES OF EVENTS.

1. The healing of Simon's wife's mother (Matt. viii. 14*f*; Mark i. 29-31; Luke iv. 38*f*). Suggestive as to domestic life and personal associations. Peter a married man (1 Cor. ix. 5). (Curious that Rome should have singled him out as their founder, seeing they insist on celibacy for priests!) Evidently the disciples already had confidence in Jesus as a healer, for at once "they tell Him of her." Note the homely side of His ministry. A Saviour for the individual, for the needy, for the home.

2. Our Lord's popularity (Mark i. 36-39; ii. 1-12). Note in i. 36, "Simon and they that were with him." Clearly he was already a leader among them. Leaders will always come to the front. Our Lord's popularity manifestly impressed His disciples (i. 37), and His reply, so deliberately avoiding popularity, must have surprised them.

3. The choice of the Twelve (Matt. x. 2-4; Mark iii. 13-19; Luke vi. 12-19). A landmark in the history. The third stage in Peter's history: (a) Discipleship (John i. 41*f*); (b) Ministry (Luke v. 1-11); (c) Apostleship (Luke vi. 12-19). Hitherto our Lord had been working almost alone. Work increasing, and division of labour necessary. Organized band, and sent them forth. Of the Twelve, eleven from Galilee, only one (Judas Iscariot) from Judæa. Four fishermen. Two pairs of brothers. At least one pair of friends. Names recorded in four lists (three Gospels and Acts i.). Peter's always first, and Judas' always last. Why Peter first? Force of personal character which fitted him to lead disciples and early Church. Choice made after a night of prayer (Luke vi. 13); evidently of deepest importance. In Mark iii. 14, we see the twofold purpose of the appointment, "that they might be with Him" (Fellowship), "and that He might send them forth" (Service). The second depends on the first. Contact with Christ qualifies for work for Him. Keep this order and preserve due proportion. "Abide" in order to work. Work as proof and expression of fellowship. The work was twofold (Mark iii. 14 and 15), preaching and healing, words and deeds.

4. The woman healed (Luke viii. 45). Peter, the spokesman. "Somebody hath touched Me." What an impression of the clear perception of their Master. A great lesson for Peter.

5. The raising of Jairus' daughter (Mark v. 37 and Luke viii. 51). Only "Peter and James and John" went in. Why these and not Andrew? Probably men of exceptional power and needing exceptional training. Certainly they became the three most prominent of the original Twelve. Another display of their Master's power. A beautiful combination of tenderness and strength, "Talitha cumi"—"My little lamb, arise." The second occasion of raising the dead (Luke vii. 11-16), though some think Jairus' daughter comes first.

All these and other events went to make up the "Training of the Twelve" and of Peter in particular. Consider now

II.—A SUMMARY OF EXPERIENCES.

1. The Disclosures of the Master.

(a) His Power. Over sickness, sorrow, and even death.

(b) His Sympathy. Human needs ever touched Him. Distinguish sympathy (feeling with) and pity (feeling for). Sympathy is only possible when we put ourselves in the other's place.

(c) His Humility. Imagine Peter's delight at the crowds following his Master. "All men seek Thee" (Mark i. 37). How surprised Peter must have been at the Lord's avoidance of popularity. Caroline Fry's definition of humility is "unconscious self-forgetfulness." See how and whence Peter learnt the lesson (1 Peter v. 5, 6).

(d) His Knowledge. Peter was constantly being made aware that he was in the presence of One whose knowledge was deep, full, far-reaching, Divine. Cf. Knowledge of woman's touch.

2. The Impressions on the Disciple.

(a) The need of help. So much sorrow, suffering, need, death. A constant call to sympathy and help. Eyes open to see men's need of the Gospel, and hearts longing to give them the blessing, are two necessary marks of true discipleship.

(b) The value of earnestness. How deeply must Peter have been struck with our Lord's strenuous life (Mark i. 39, 45).

(c) The duty of work. The "choice" men in Old Testament and New Testament were always hard workers, always chosen for special service. Abraham, Moses, David, Daniel, Paul, would have had an easier life if they had not been called of God to special work. "Many are called, but few are choice." The "choice" men always "toil terribly."

(d) The deepening of trust. This is the profoundest impression made on Peter. He must have been growing in trust at every step. The chief lesson to learn. The way to learn it is to live in the presence of Christ. The better we know Him the more we trust Him. Peter grew in faith as he lived with Christ. "Faith cometh by" the direct revelation of Christ to the soul as we study His Word and abide in Him. In proportion to our fellowship will be our faith and then our faithfulness (Rom. x. 17).

An Evening with Polynesian Missions (Isa. xlii. 1-12).

THE Scripture chosen is referred to our Lord in Matt. xii. 18-21. It is peculiarly appropriate to the Polynesian Missions, because of its special reference to the isles of the Gentiles (4, 10, 12).

Polynesia is the general term used for the archipelago of islands which lie between the shores of Asia and America, across the Southern Pacific Ocean. In this group of islands there are three divisions—the Friendly Islands, to east, the Gilbert Islands, to north-west, and farther west, Fiji, the New Hebrides, &c. The entire area of these islands only equals that of England and Wales. They are all due to the labours of the coral insect, are surrounded by coral reefs, and are covered with a rich, tropical growth.

The state of these islands before Christianity was introduced was terrible. The testimony of Darwin, the great naturalist, is conclusive on that point. He says, speaking of the critics of missionary work, "They forget, or will not remember, that human sacrifices, the power of an idolatrous priesthood, a system of profligacy unparalleled in any part of the world, infanticide (a consequence of that system), bloody wars, where the conqueror spared neither women nor children—that all these have been abolished, and that dishonesty, licentiousness, and intemperance have been greatly reduced by the introduction of Christianity."

The pioneer worker in these islands was the renowned John Williams, who was sent out by the L.M.S. in the beginning of last century. He had been a wild London lad, and been brought to Christ by an invitation to church given him by a Christian woman. He was only twenty years old when he reached the Society Islands, and learned to preach in the language of the people in ten months. His apprenticeship to an ironmonger stood him in good stead, as he taught the natives the secret of many trades. At Rarotonga he built his famous vessel, the Messenger of Peace, in which he prosecuted his missionary work as far as Samoa, which, it will be remembered, Robert Louis Stevenson made his home, regarding it as the nearest approach to Paradise of any spot on earth. The Samoans eagerly received His word, and put away their idols. When he left Rarotonga in 1834, after eleven years of work, there was not a house where family prayer was not observed morning and evening.

His work in Samoa was equally successful, for when in 1839 he left it to take the Gospel to the New Hebrides, where he was martyred at Eromanga, 50,000 out of 60,000 were under Christian instruction.

What a story that is of Fiji, the natives of which were degraded cannibals, when Cross and Cargill took them the Gospel in 1836; but in 1876 every village in the eighty islands had build for itself a church and a manse! It has been said, that if a Fijian to-day wishes to see the idols his ancestors worshipped, he must visit the British Museum, where they are kept as relics of the past ages of barbarism.

Think of the Sandwich Islands, with 27,000 converts, the churches presided over by native pastors, and sending missionaries out to the neighbouring unevangelized islands!

One of the most wonderful stories in the world is that of the New Guinea Mission, during the first twenty years of which 120 native teachers died of fever, were poisoned or massacred—and the heroic and sainted Chalmers heads the martyr roll.

And what shall be said of Dr. Paton's noble labours in the New Hebrides? It is a great privilege to have grasped his hand, and looked into his face—it is the face of an apostle.

Whilst speaking of this group, we cannot forget Aneityum, where every kind of evil was rampant in 1848, when Dr. Geddes began his work; but, under his ministry, and that of Dr. Inglis, the island became completely transformed; and the tablet put up in the memorial church states—"When he landed, in 1848, there were no Christians here. When he left, in 1872, there were no heathen." Such have been the victories of Christ, but how much more needs to be done! Each time we draw a breath four souls pass into eternity without Christ. F. Paul's Voyage and Shipwreck (Acts xxvii. 33-44).

Golden Text—Psa. cvii. 28.

THE motive of Festus in suggesting another trial at Jerusalem was to conciliate the Jews in his own favour. The Apostle's aim was to reach Rome, and again using his right as a Roma citizen he claimed appeal to Cæsar, and secured his transfer. June A.D. 60. Festus had no power to refuse, but found difficulty in drawing up a charge against his prisoner. There was no transport service, war vessels were seldom so used, hence prisoners from the provinces were frequently conveyed to the capital by trading vessels. Two months after (Acts. xxvii. 1) Paul, in the charge of a centurion, sailed from Cæsarea in a coasting vessel. Touched at Sidon (3), changed ships at Myra (Egypt was one of the chief granaries for Rome), sailed slowly, five weeks; waited three at "The Fair Havens," drifted two, wrecked on the Island of Malta, November A.D. 60. Three months spent there, used in the Lord's service (xxviii. 11).

Ship's Company. Julius Priscus, one of the bodyguard of the Emperor, who with his corps was honoured with the distinguishing title of "Augustan." Prisoners, passengers, officers and crew, 276; v. 20, compass not invented; v. 29, a picture found in Herculaneum shows a ship casting anchors out of the stern. Paul's experience (2 Cor. xi. 25).

God's promise given (v. 24; Isa. xliii. 1, 2).

God's promise fulfilled (v. 44; Psa. xxxvii. 5).

Necessary means used (vv. 31, 34, 38, 43).

Paul's influence was felt throughout the ship as a "Man of God." Practical, common sense, bright, busy and wise (v. 9, 10).—1. Strong faith—"I believe God," his voice rang out in the darkness (20), stirring hope in every heart (25). 2. Faithful (26). 3. Alert, watchful (31). 4. Active (19, 35). 5. Sympathetic (33). 6. Willing to share his own rock of confidence (34). 7. Example (35).

"Grace Before Meat."

"The darkest hour is just before the dawn" (33). Breakers roaring, rocks near, quicksands feared, boats cut off, tackling overboard, a crew of angry, thwarted sailors, a regiment of desperate soldiers. Captain and ship's officers "at their wit's end" (Psa. cvii. 23-27). Passengers fearful and hopeless. All faint, drenched, hungry, weary—after watching (29). Paul's voice is heard begging all to come to breakfast, and on the tossing vessel, surrounded by terrified heathen, he "took bread, and gave thanks to God in the presence of them all."

I. Trials develop character like the process which develops the photograph on the negative. Sailors—cowardly, selfish, deceitful. Soldiers—desperate and selfish. Paul's real colours shone out well—unselfishness and bravery.

II. The voyage was rough and dangerous; conflict with the elements, advice neglected, hard toil for the crew, loss of goods, anxious fears and wreck at last. Life's voyage is sometimes all this. Boys and girls follow the advice of those who are in touch with God in prayer early in your voyage, and you will be saved much buffeting and temptation as well as wreck at last. (Note—vv. 10-21; Prov. xii. 15.)

III. It was a rough path Paul was treading, but the Lord scattered some flowers in his way. The centurion was kind (xxvii. 3, 43), had probably heard his address before Agrippa (xxv. 23).

IV. "Gave thanks," even if no one else at table did so (Psa. xlvi. 10). Not an exclamation only that you may be made thankful, but praise as in Luke xxii. 19. The Lord honoured the man who honoured him (Acts xxviii. 30, 31).

V. Paul prayed (Rom. i. 10). Answered, but not quite as expected. Rough passage, which brought faith that honoured God. Wreck on Malta opened a new field for the Gospel. Secured a friend at court in Julius (Eph. iii. 20).

VI. Paul's was faith, not fatalism. "If I am to be saved I shall be" are not Bible-words, but Satan's lie. "Believe God," and use the means he appoints (xxvii. 31).

The May Meetings.

Tract Society Breakfast.

VERY important testimony was borne last week by the chairman of the Religious Tract Society's annual missionary breakfast (Lord Alverstone, Lord Chief Justice) to the value of Christian work accomplished through tract circulation. Speaking of the efforts put forth as they strike a layman, and one who is in no way connected with the Society, he expressed his personal thankfulness that it still continues to devote close attention to the main object indicated by its name. After long experience of persons who had not always been obedient to the law of the land, he said that while one might think very many of them had not been under the influence of religion, in this, as in many other matters, it was dangerous to judge from the outside. It had been his privilege to come into contact with the inner life of such people, and in this connection to see something of the good that tracts may do.

On more than one occasion when men, apparently the most callous and indifferent to religion, had died or been incarcerated for a period, there had been found folded up with other treasured papers a leaf of some tract or religious book, which had been long carried about from place to place; and, in his judgment, none could estimate the effect which would be gathered after many days from such seed sown upon the waters. Even men and women can be induced by its attractive presentation to read something which will bring the eternal verities home to hearts and souls. Paraphrasing the well-known motto on Bagster's Polyglot Bibles, he said that, while many tongues were spoken by the publications of the Society, the language was one, for it was the language of heaven.

Speaking of the difficulties of missionary work in China, Rev. Ll. Lloyd (Fuh-Kien Province) said that while many wondered at the continued hostility of the people to foreigners, it should be remembered that this was not universal; and if the literati continued to treasure such feelings, he believed that his hearers would do the same if they were placed in similar circumstances. He trusted that relations between European nations and the Government would bear closer investigation in the future than they had done in the past, and that would be the case if they were even marked by justice.

After a clever description of the importance and needs of Bengal as a mission field, Rev. W. H. Hart (Calcutta) said missionaries there were in a much more favourable position than elsewhere, for they could actually provide one Christian publication of some sort for every sixtieth person in their great district. The missionary band is the fighting line of the army of Christ, and as an agency for bringing up the ammunition the Society is one of the most important auxiliaries to every man among them.

Pointing with confidence to many signs of evangelical progress in Hungary, Rev. J. T. Webster mentioned a movement which is developing at present in the south of the country, which may be mainly traced to the dissemination of the publications of the Tract Society by a believing Bible colporteur.

"Living at the back of things," in a land without literature or civilization, Mrs. Stephens (Congo) and her colleagues found that the people ran away from the first books they saw, and had no idea till they were taught how even to look at a picture. But much progress had been made. Most of all they were thankful for the "Pilgrim's Progress," which the missionaries found to be as understandable to their people as to English readers. Valuable in every case, tracts and books were of exceptional use for converts who went away back to live in villages where there were no missionaries. Roman Catholicism is aggressive among their people, and the books have a very high educative value against error.

Having had his left arm broken last year, Rev. John Lazarus (Madras) said it was no small compliment when he described the Tract Society as standing in the relation of that limb to every missionary. The needs of Zenana women were presented by Miss Schroder (India). Mr. Thomas James said he and other China missionaries laboured as colporteurs and distributors wherever they went. "It helps us to sow the best of all seeds with a very liberal hand," was the compliment paid to the Society by Rev. J. Pearse (Madagascar). Among others who took part in the proceedings were Bishop Taylor Smith (Chaplain-General), Rev. A. R. Buckland, and Rev. R. Lovett.

Barrack-Room Witnesses.

THE Soldiers' Christian Association has special claims upon the sympathy of believers by reason of its spirit of fervent evangelism. Since its establishment in 1893 the organization has proved an incentive to Christian soldiers to band together in seeking to win souls, and has been the means of leading many unconverted men to forsake evil paths and serve the Lord Jesus Christ.

At the annual meeting, held on Thursday last, Sir George Williams presided. The secretary, Mr. S. E. Burrow, expressed profound thankfulness to God for the experiences of the past year. Now that the days of peace are returned, many difficulties, arising from a state of war, have passed away, and there are now 400 branches pursuing active work for the Master.

In personal talks and by the distribution of Gospel literature many men returning from Africa were spiritually impressed, and not a few time-expired men were helped into appointments in civil life. In connection with the Coronation, specially-prepared testaments were given away among the 7,000 men camped in Kensington Gardens, for whose comfort a tent was erected and writing material provided.

WITH THE VOLUNTEERS.

Among volunteers at Aldershot, too, an Association tent proved highly popular, and in addition to manifold social gatherings evangelistic meetings were held nightly, when there was a marked spirit of hearing. Reviewing the history of the decade, Mr. Burrow said that the growth of the organization has far surpassed the expectations that had been formed. No fewer than 9,000 members have been enrolled, and in their weekly meetings the study of the Bible is the chief feature, while representatives of various denominations have combined for Gospel work. Indeed, the Association has become a Foreign Missionary Society; it wins young men as they enter the Army, so that when they are drafted abroad they witness for Christ. In view of recent expansion it has become necessary to create sectional councils in India and South Africa. Above all, God is praised for the grace given to the men who have come out on the side of Christ. The motto of the Association remains, "We rest on Thee."

As president of the Y.M.C.A., the Chairman spoke words of cordial encouragement to "this valuable auxiliary;" and Lieut.-Col. Cleeve, R.E., followed with a note of praise. The Association has been directed on the right lines; it has opposed none but Satan; it has steadily upheld the principle of individual effort, the soldiers being missionaries and the barrack-room the mission field.

The next speaker, Miss Sandes, spoke of the work of her Soldiers' Homes as "inter-locked with that of the Soldiers' Christian Association;" Miss Maguire told of conversions in connection with the Home at Quetta; and the concluding address was given by Rev. F. S. Webster.

"Silent Gospel Messengers."

THE effectiveness of evangelization by means of tract distribution received fresh illustration at the annual meeting of the London Monthly Tract Society, which was held last week at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A.

Mr. John McFarlane, secretary of the organization (which is now affiliated with the Stirling Tract Enterprise), urged that the growing disregard of public worship entails fresh responsibilities on Christian people. One ready means of putting the great facts of Christianity before those outside the churches is by sending them tracts, and this work the Monthly Tract Society undertakes, particularly among the upper classes. To youths at schools and colleges, tracts have been sent on the subject of gambling, and undergraduates have received copies of the late Bishop Ryle's "What think ye of Christ?" In Ireland, as in England, tracts have been posted to the nobility and gentry, and another undertaking has been the dispatch of suitable booklets to persons bereaved of relatives or friends. A new field has been opened among farmers in South Africa, whose dwellings are situated far from any place of worship. The tracts are much appreciated by these lonely people. Tracts have likewise been distributed on board steamers in British ports, and the cause of Protestant truth has been helped by the dissemination of a life of that saint of God, Manuel Matamoros.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. J. E. Mathieson said that the Society does a great and blessed work. He spoke reminiscently of friends who have devoted themselves to tract preparation and distribution, such as the late Mr. Drummond, of Stirling, Brownlow North, Bishop Ryle, and Mr. Bewley, of Dublin. The speaker added an interesting story of an officer in the Guards who was brought to Christ through a tract which he accepted as he was entering a theatre in Paris. This officer has since become an earnest preacher and soul-winner.

Dr. George Hanson, who followed, said this is the only Society which has for its special object the bringing of the subject of personal religion before the upper classes. Dr. Hanson spoke of the paucity of evangelistic efforts among the rich. The upper classes became less and less disposed to receive pulpit instruction. Luxurious living, pride, and indulgence lead many into lives that are frankly pagan. The Lord's Day, through motoring, golf, and cycling is a day not of sacred memories, but of mere selfish pleasuring. The character of theatrical plays, and the shameful stories of the divorce court, show into what a gulf the upper classes are descending. This points to national ruin, for no people can maintain greatness except by the people loving righteousness. This Society's efforts are, therefore, of great value, especially as Christ is made the centre of all.

The next speaker, Canon Fleming, said that while we are beset by national perils, yet there are great opportunities opening out in this age of voracious reading. The power of writing, too, is being much used for good. Where one man assaults the truth, a hundred spring forth to defend it. As to the Monthly Tract Society, it stands out with a distinct work. It makes known "the Gospel which is music to the heart as well as to the ear," and clearly sets forth the "three R's—Ruin, Redemption, and Regeneration." There are many who will refuse a tract when it is proffered them, who will yet receive one gladly when sent courteously through the post.

Mr. Charles Cook also testified to the useful character of the Society's tracts, appealing as they do direct to the consciences of men.

"Friendless and Fallen."

IN 1857, the work of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution began in a small house fitted to receive sixteen inmates; at the present time its operations comprise a Training Home for fifty respectable friendless girls rescued from dangerous moral surroundings; four Rescue Homes for betrayed and outcast young women; and an Open all-night Refuge for the immediate succour of destitute young women and girls found homeless in the streets at night.

At the annual meeting held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday last week, Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE, presided. Mr. W. J. TAYLOR, the esteemed secretary, presented a report which was at once pathetic and encouraging. Some striking illustrative cases were given.

THE BITTER CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

P. A. was, at the time of her admission, one of the most ignorant girls who have come to the notice of the executive for a long time. When taken to the Training Home, she thought the girl who answered the door (one of the inmates) was "the lady of the house," because she looked clean and respectable. She could scarcely believe that she was to have a bed "all to herself," or that she would have "a dinner every day." It is doubtful if her mother was married to the man who passed as "step-father," but they were both drunken people. They occupied one small back room only, in which the man and woman and five children lived. This girl was sent out to clean steps or beg, and was cruelly ill-used if she did not bring home money. She had been nearly starved, and was known to pick up scraps out of the gutter to eat. In many respects she was a bright girl, but brow-beaten and crushed, and almost destitute of acquaintance with things decent.

"A PITIABLE CASE."

These are the words used by the matron of one of the Homes when referring to H. D., who was only sixteen years of age when admitted. Herself an illegitimate child, deserted by her parents, whose whereabouts were unknown, she was led astray at the age of fourteen. Through a charge of dishonesty she came to the notice of a missionary at one of the police courts, and was brought by him to the Home. She was in a very neglected condition, and was at first a great trial on account of her conduct. She, however, improved, and was placed in service, where she has remained for nine months. In a letter to the matron she says:—"I will try my best to be a good girl and be a credit to you. I must confess you have been very kind to me; it is more than I deserve. I was a very bad girl in the Home. What my end would be I did not know. It is sad to say, but I don't believe I knew what kindness was until I came to the Home. I have had a very hard life. No tongue can tell what I have had to go through."

During the dark and dreary hours of the night, many and many a wanderer has been welcomed and sheltered, and helped. Irrespective of eighty-six young women and girls who were re-admitted to this open-all-night refuge during 1902, there were no fewer than 344 new-comers, and it is worthy of very special note that of this number 188 were unfallen. Every effort is made to bring earnest spiritual influences to bear upon all who are admitted. Morning and evening prayer, with the reading of the Scriptures, is conducted by the Matron, and a Gospel service or Bible class is held almost every night. It is therefore impossible for any poor creature to be sheltered here, if only for a very few hours, without hearing God's Word read and joining in prayer.

The CHAIRMAN, who followed, spoke of the wonderful difference which Christianity has made with regard to women, and compared first the views of the Pagan world, then those of the Jews in the time of our Lord, with the pity of Christ as manifested in the stories of the woman of Samaria; the woman who washed His feet with her tears; and the woman taken in adultery. Proceeding, the speaker showed that the Society acts on truly Christian principles, manifesting not a hard condescension but loving sympathy.

LONDON'S SOCIAL PROBLEM.

"For forty years," said Rev. W. H. DAVIES, rector of Spitalfields, "the Society has been receiving girls from that district. In all, it has helped over 30,000 from various parts of the country, and if these could be marched past in one long procession, not one but would have some word of gratitude to express." Proceeding, Mr. Davies spoke of the evils of the "furnished room" system in East London, by which a great building, let out in single furnished rooms at one shilling per night, becomes an immoral resort, and yet is so managed as to evade the law. A terrible picture was also given of the sordid vices which prevail in Spitalfields. To deal with such conditions and undertake the rescue of the women is a difficult work; but it is possible owing to the efforts of this and kindred organizations. In the words of Archbishop Benson, "we must cultivate a magnificent hopefulness."

AN APPEAL TO CHRISTIAN DUTY.

Rev. R. CATTERALL, vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury, reminded his hearers that there are thousands of fallen women on the streets of London, and urged that the churches should be more sensitive to the evils around. We are face to face in London with a condition of things that should not be tolerated, from a legal point of view, for a single week. If we allow this stream of iniquity to flow on we are surely wanting in Christian duty. Again, there is an inequality of law as between men and women. Men ruin women, and no law touches them; the women have to bear the whole burden. That is wrong before God. We want a Christian consciousness that will affect the law and hold up a betrayer to shame. Moreover, there is the relation of the drink traffic to this shocking sin. The public-house is the foster-mother of all filthy iniquities, and in the maintenance of purity there is the urgent need to deal with this evil traffic. In conclusion, Mr. Catterall referred to the harmful effects of the pernicious literature which is so common to-day upon railway bookstalls and in almost every newspaper shop, and to the desirability of wise instruction and warning being given by parents to their boys and girls.

The last speaker, Captain KEY, R.N., Superintendent of Portsmouth Town Mission, testified that many poor, degraded women, sent up from Portsmouth, have been cared for by the Society. The work is arduous indeed, and true success can be attained only in the strength of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Bessbrook Homes.

THE annual meeting of these useful institutions was held a few days ago in the large hall which has been recently built in the rear of the premises at 39, Queen Square, Bloomsbury. (Some £250 still remains to be paid off on the building fund.) The chair was taken by Mr. G. P. H. MAYNARD, who had a most interesting story to tell of the progress of the work during the past year. The advertising business was greatly increased, and employs a large number of men, who in the shelter of these beneficent institutions are beginning to climb back again to respectability. They are not only able to obtain respectable accommodation, but to get work under the roof of the Bessbrook Homes. In a single year the envelopes addressed in one department run into millions. Mr. M. H. HODDER bore hearty testimony to the character of three men, who had proved themselves worthy to be taken into the service of his firm.

Rev. F. B. MEYER followed with a few words of thankfulness for the noble work which is being accomplished by Mr. Maynard Hare and his helpers. He specially commended them for studying the individual characteristics of the men, and promoting their self-respect. The best of all was that so many men were led to be true followers of the Lord Jesus. The hall was quite full, and the interest maintained to the end. At the close a handsome book was presented Mr. Meyer from the staff and the men for the interest he has taken in them.

Zenana Missions.

THE annual meeting of Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, held at the Queen's Hall a few days ago, was largely attended. The general review of the year, read by Rev. GEORGE TONGE, showed that while the income had amounted to £42,549, the expenditure had been £41,459, in addition to £4,051 for special objects.

Special attention was called to a recent letter from Canon Ball (corresponding secretary at Calcutta) dealing with the serious situation in the foreign field. "It is difficult for friends at home to realize the position out here. The climate of Bengal is trying at all times; but plague and cholera around us, combined with overwork and anxiety about means, make it more than many can bear. The work increases, the workers decrease, and the results are constant breakdowns. In my opinion you have reached a position in which you can reduce no more, and the difficulty can no more be met by making a general reduction. The Church at home should realize this. What makes it more trying is that at this time there is a far more general drawing toward Christianity, combined with a very active opposition, than there has ever been before."

Twenty-one baptisms were reported at Baranagore, including a Hindu babu, with his wife and two children. Medical work was being carried on from thirty centres, at eight of which the hospitals were under the charge of ladies with a full qualification.

In the face of manifold encouragements and open doors, only nine ladies had been added to the staff of missionaries in home connection. Four were fully qualified doctors, two being assigned to the Punjab and Sindh, one to South India, and one to Foochow. The net total of missionaries in home connection is 210, as against 214. Four of these had given notice of retirement, and there were others whose ultimate return to the field was very doubtful. Not more than ten candidates had at present been recommended as available for next autumn. The Society has also upon its staff fourteen missionaries in local connection, as well as about 100 assistant missionaries, and nearly 800 natives employed as Bible women, school teachers, nurses, and compounders.

From the chair, Sir WILLIAM MACKWORTH YOUNG vigorously repudiated the "shameless falsehood" that zeal for foreign missions interfered with interest in home mission work.

Describing her experiences at Foochow, Miss LESLIE said that seven years ago there were four stations, spots of brightness in the gloom of the densely-populated city; now there are five, and the operations at each centre are largely extended—station classes for women, preaching, teaching, and visiting being in full swing. She concluded by urging her audience to go themselves or ask their dearest to go.

An Indian lady, Miss KHEROTH BOSE, said that India had "a new woman, and a very nice new woman, too. She read, and was anxious to make the best of her own life, as she saw what a woman might do." Some of these ladies wanted all the good of Christianity without Christ, others were willing to receive Him too. Miss Bose had had a letter from an Indian gentleman, who sent his wife to the hospital, and begged her to teach the lady and turn her into an "Indian Christian lady." So successful was the teaching that the lady (who was cured as to health in a month) was anxious to be baptized. The husband wrote, "Not yet; come home, read with me, and we will come out together."

Miss Bose considered that enough was not done for children, and especially young children. Even very spiritually-minded people, native Christians and pastors, fail to realise their duties towards the young. One who had recently been to a conference came back and told her, "I have learned something to-day." She listened expectantly, for he was an advanced Christian. "It is really useful to get hold of children," he said.

Rev. C. G. MYLREA (Bhagalpur) said the voiceless suffering of the womankind of the world claimed attention, pleaded for help, and the voice of God demanded with insistence that the work should be increased.

Deep Sea Toilers.

AMID many indications of continued vitality and sustained enthusiasm, the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen celebrated its anniversary on Wednesday of last week. Exeter Hall presented a festive appearance, being gaily decorated with flags representing almost every nation, and numerous trophies symbolizing the varied operations of the Society; while the singing was led by a choir of warm-hearted fishermen.

The history of the Society shows that each succeeding year has been marked by advancement. From having one vessel, working in one fleet only and without a doctor, the Mission now owns eleven vessels of various kinds, employs six doctors, and sends out in the summer months (the only period of the year when special services can be held) clergymen and laymen of all evangelical denominations as volunteer missionaries as well as maintaining various efforts in nine fishing ports. The developments which have taken place are a clear indication of the wide field which opened up almost immediately before the Society.

A FLOATING MINISTRY.

Last year's record indicates that over 10,000 patients were treated medically and surgically; 2,092 missionary visits were paid; 1,492 religious services held; 2,030 copies of the Scriptures sold and freely distributed, as well as fifty-two tons of wholesome literature. The Society's sphere of work embraces the North Sea trawling fleets and single boaters from the Straits of Dover to the Shetland Isles and Iceland; the mackerel fishers of the Channel and South West Coast of Ireland; the trawlers and herring fishers of the West Coast; the cod fishers of Labrador, from Blanc Sablon, in the Straits of Belle Isle, to Hopedale in the North, a distance of some 6,000 miles of coast line, as well as in the North of Newfoundland. The hospital steamers are used for nursing men who are disabled by accident at sea, and carry doctors for treating such cases; four dispensary vessels are able to render first aid to the sick and wounded; one old vessel is used as a harbour mission station; two small dispensing and one hospital steamer are at work at Labrador, and three hospital steam trawlers, built specially for the Mission, are replete with every convenience for fishing operations and medical and spiritual efforts. On all of these vessels evangelistic services are held, and every form of Christian work is carried on.

The shore agencies at home comprise mission halls, institutes, and Bethels in almost every fishing port. The mission has a thriving temperance branch with 3,400 enrolled members; a united Fishermen's Christian Association in vigorous operation; upwards of 1,600 volunteer letter-writers corresponding with cabin boys and men at sea; and a branch of the Scripture Union has lately been added.

PAST AND PRESENT.

The Mission was fortunate in securing as its chairman on Wednesday afternoon one who was associated with the movement in its earliest stages, and Sir Francis Hopwood, K.C.B., claimed to be a "sponsor at its official baptism." He recalled the period of chaos and crime of the early eighties, when the North Sea was infested with floating grog shops, a state of things which demanded some other efforts than those of the Government. The Chairman spoke of the launching of the Ensign, the first boat of the Mission, which was followed by the incorporation of the Society, and remarked that the Mission gives to the toilers of the North Sea the best for their spiritual needs, and the best for their physical requirements. Sir Francis read a telegram from Queen Alexandra, expressing sympathy with the work of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, and her Majesty's hearty wishes for its continued usefulness. A cordial acknowledgment of the message was telegraphed to Buckingham Palace.

Some of the outstanding features of the year were set forth by Mr. G. A. Hutchinson. The adaptability of the Mission has been seen in extensions in many of the branches. On shore forward movements have been inaugurated at centres as far apart as Aberdeen and Cornwall. The efforts of the society are appealing more forcibly to the toilers of the sea, and their appreciation was never so hearty as it is to-day. Rev. F. S. Webster, spoke more as an advocate than a witness. While he had not seen the beneficent ministry of the steamers on the North Sea, he was nevertheless familiar with the work, which he commended in hearty terms. A word of earnest exhortation was spoken to any who were not exercising faith in Christ and relying on His finished work.

From the Northern regions, Dr. W. T. Grenfell brought tidings of a far-reaching work. He remarked that the problem ever before the mission is to bring men into a saving contact with Christ, and so stimulate and foster their spiritual life that they shall have not merely a theoretical belief, but a strong and vigorous faith, enabling them to live before the world as true sons of God. The Doctor showed how this principle is being carried out in the efforts among the fishermen of Canada, particularly on the dreary coast of Labrador.

First things are kept first in all the operations of the society, and the speaker related many instances of those who have sought medical help being led to accept Christ. Dr. Grenfell urged the necessity of wider sympathy being shown toward the Society in view of the ever-increasing opportunities which open up before the workers in their ministrations to the spiritual needs and physical necessities of fishermen.

Dr. Willway having briefly addressed the audience, a number of skippers added hearty testimony concerning what is being done on sea and land for the smacksmen and lads engaged in fishing pursuits. Mr. T. B. Miller and Dr. Gilbart Smith also spoke. In the evening another large audience assembled, under the presidency of Mr. T. B. Miller. The chief feature of this gathering was a display of animated pictures, illustrating the experiences and dangers of a fisherman's life.

National Protestant Church Union.

THE annual meeting of the National Protestant Church Union was held recently at Exeter Hall. Lord Llangattock, who presided, said he had felt for some years that the extreme ritualism practised in many churches is most detrimental to the interests and to the unity of the Church. There are many schools of thought, and we cannot all expect to see everything in the same light, but all moderate and loyal Church people can be asked to join in opposing doctrines and practices which are contrary to the traditions and the teaching of the English Church.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe went very thoroughly into the whole question of prayers for the dead. After expressing his thankfulness that, owing to the great outcry on the part of both clergy and laity, the Army Guild service at St. Paul's had to be abandoned, he proceeded to show that prayers for the dead have no place in the Protestant Church of England, and that this nation was delivered purposely from such things at the Reformation. It will be a sorry day when England reverts to the depravities which are inevitably connected with prayers for the dead. He went on to urge that the time has come when plain speaking is required; if any man, layman, or clergyman does not like what he finds in the Prayer-Book, in the Homilies, and in the Articles, let him leave the Church of England. The Archbishop of Canterbury has told us that stern and drastic action is needed to stop the existing lawlessness. The sooner that stern and drastic action is taken, the better it will be for the Church of England and the nation.

Rev. E. A. Stuart said that truth will prevail. Englishmen will never give up what they have won at great cost. Some people think the fight is for trivialities, but there are far deeper things at stake. It is said, "We must leave the bishop of the diocese to decide what is to be done." He, the speaker, was willing to do so, but there must be one law for all and all must obey it. An address followed from Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton.

Missions to Seamen.

THE annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen Society was held a few days ago at the Church House, Westminster, under the presidency of Lord Llangattock. The annual report reviewed the spiritual provision made for sailors and fishermen of all creeds and nationalities, in fifty-five harbours at home, and twenty abroad, on board ship and ashore.

Attention was devoted during the year to the promotion of Divine worship at sea on board British cargo ships, and through the help of two sisters the Society was able to supply an additional 200 cargo ships with "service boxes," each containing a Bible and sermon-book, and hymn-books, &c. As many as 8,946 services and Bible-readings, with 93,568 attendances of seamen, were conducted with crews afloat in 1902, by chaplains and readers, whilst the aggregate of visits paid to ships at anchor or in dock was 139,000.

The growth of sobriety amongst seagoing men has led to a great reduction in the total abstaining pledges taken by them. Last year 3,819 seamen and fishermen took such pledges from the Missions to Seamen, being little more than half the annual average of the last twenty years. But 6,408 seafaring men bought Bibles, &c., last year from the chaplains and readers out of their hard-earned wages.

The Chairman said he was proud to have his name connected in any way with the Missions to Seamen, which was doing such a great and good work; and Rev. W. Bryant Salmon, Vicar of Shoreditch, pointed out that the one aim and object of the Society was to supply the ministrations of true religion to sailors. In other words, they desired to preach Christ to them. It was because that was the aim of the Society that God had been able to own and bless the work, and that it had found such a real place in the hearts and sympathies of God's people.

The Gospel in Paris.

IN presenting the annual report of the Paris City Mission, at a meeting held in the Memorial Hall on Wednesday of last week, Mr. W. J. Lockie was able to give an encouraging account of the year's operations. The somewhat difficult task of giving the Gospel to the inhabitants of Paris has been followed with unflagging devotion. No fewer than 2,500 meetings were held, and nearly 8,000 domiciliary visits were made during the year, while the tracts and gospels distributed number over 2,000,000. One serious difficulty, viz., that of preaching the Gospel in the open-air, has been overcome by Rev. S. H. Anderson, who has conceived the idea of going to the back streets of the city with large diagrams illustrating Bible stories. These are an attraction to the children, who gather round in large numbers, often accompanied by their parents. By this method the Gospel is effectively preached, though not without opposition. Much importance is attached to the house-to-house visitation. The missionaries gain access to the homes of French ouvriers—Catholics, Protestants, Jews, &c., as well as to hospitals and prisons.

Many of the reports received from the missionaries indicate the widespread need for their ministry. The following are typical of numbers of cases in which they have interested themselves:—"A year ago we were able to procure employment for a man who was out of work, a Roman Catholic, who was meditating suicide, but has been saved body and soul. He has married the woman he was living with, and he, with all his family, attend our services regularly. The eldest daughter is a member of our Girls' Christian Union, and the son, aged about thirteen, regularly attends our Thursday and Sunday schools. A young Roman Catholic girl, having a brother in the Seminary, where he was preparing for the priesthood, was greatly disposed to become a nun and enter a convent; but on hearing the Gospel message became converted, and rejoices our hearts by her consistent piety and Christian life."

Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and urged that Christians visiting Paris should use every opportunity for witnessing for Christ. The influence of Rome in France is one of the greatest difficulties with which the missionaries have to contend. He voiced the thanksgiving to God of the friends of the Mission for the harvest that is being gathered in the capital of France. Mr. Cantwell, who works among French in London, gave some interesting particulars of his labours.

Speaking from observation of the efforts of the missionaries in Paris, Rev. R. H. Noble bore personal testimony to the acceptance with which the Gospel is being preached, and the appreciable change that has taken place in the attitude of French people towards the Gospel. Rev. J. Anderson, brother of one of the Paris City Mission workers, detailed many of the operations which are being carried on. Particular mention was made of the devoted labours of Mons. Blaess. There is a future of great usefulness before the Mission.

Irish Church Missions.

A HOPEFUL spirit pervaded the annual meeting of the Society for Irish Church Missions held at Exeter Hall a few days ago. The secretary (Rev. N. F. Duncan) reported that Rev. P. B. Johnson had been called upon to reply to three different series of Romish controversial sermons; and he was now free also to give special attention to the itinerating and colportage work of the Society. During the winter the lantern itinerants had held 213 meetings in eight different counties, with an estimated attendance of 4,929 Roman Catholics, and of 10,627 Protestants. When working in the fairs and markets, and visiting the people in their homes, they effected during the year a total sale of 6,486 books, of which 2,483 were copies or portions of the Holy Scriptures. They had proclaimed the Gospel to large numbers of Roman Catholics, and had had many most interesting conversations with individuals. Three mission book shops effected a total sale during the past year of 25,935 publications. The sale of Scriptures and of missionary publications had exceeded 40,000, in addition to a very large free circulation of tracts. A review was given of the work at Dublin, Belfast, Limerick, and other towns.

The Dean of Norwich, who presided, said the Society had good reason for giving thanks to God, for the work was growing, and was only limited by want of funds. It was carried right into the heart of Roman Catholic centres. The missionaries addressed mixed audiences. It was sometimes thought that they only worked among those who were willing to receive the Word. Roman Catholics bought their literature, and read it. He believed in publishing the truth, and he also believed in bringing together people of different religious opinions.

During a recent tour in Ireland, Rev. E. W. Moore had realized more than ever the need and the admirable character of the work that was being done. The secret of the success attained lay in the fact that the missionaries were spiritual men. It was in a very special sense necessary that they should also be men of controversy, and for dealing with Roman Catholics in this way they were well qualified.

As superintendent of the Dublin mission, Rev. Henry Fishe spoke of the efforts to reach intelligent Romanists. He did not believe that Messrs. O'Donnell and McCarthy would have published their books had they not been assured that this was a very large class. It was necessary to educate the Protestants of the country, for there were thousands of them who could not make a protest. Another very important work was to instruct converts in controversy, because they had to argue with their relatives and friends.

Mr. J. H. Bradshaw, evangelist, described the work he was engaged on, both at the fairs and markets in the summer, and at the Mission halls in the winter. For the last six months he had been conducting lantern services in the south and east of Ireland. It was the second visit he had made, and on this occasion the clergy welcomed him.

London Female Guardian Society.

LORD KINNAIRD presided a few days ago at the ninety-sixth annual meeting of the London Female Guardian Society, held at the Training Home, Stoke Newington.

Mr. E. W. Page, secretary, stated that seventy-nine new cases were admitted during the year. The record of work shows that thirty-five girls were placed in service, eight restored to their friends, and the remainder helped in various ways. Seventy-two remained in the Home at the end of the year. A guinea reward was handed to each of eight domestic servants who had stayed in their respective situations not less than a year.

The Chairman, who followed, said that there is no royal road to success in such an institution, and such work must always be somewhat expensive, because the girls must be trained and supervised for a considerable time. The speaker expressed his belief that an increase of rescue work must be looked for rather than a decrease, and gave as his reasons the increase of leisure and the multiplication of places of amusement. In conclusion, his lordship spoke of the importance of spiritual work being kept to the front in connection with philanthropic effort.

Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of Ram's Episcopal Chapel, gave an earnest address, in the course of which he mentioned that during the existence of the Society no fewer than 2,229 girls have been restored to their friends.

London Medical Mission.

DR. WARREN and his helpers must have been cheered by the number of friends who assembled on Tuesday of last week for the purpose of rendering thanks to God for the blessing which has attended the work of the London Medical Mission through another year.

The primary function of the organization is to preach the Gospel to the poor, while at the same time making every effort to meet the needs of the sick and suffering among them. After the meetings on Monday and Thursday, the patients are interviewed individually in the consulting room, and these opportunities for personal dealing are fruitful in decisions for Christ. In the case of wounds and sores, these are attended to daily by the young nurses (who are in training for missionary service at home and abroad) under the direction of the lady superintendent and doctor. Those who are too ill to attend at the dispensary are visited by doctors and nurses in their homes, and this affords opportunities for personal dealing, not only with the patients, but other members of the household, and it is gratifying to hear of fruit appearing in this direction; quite recently in three instances near relatives confessed their acceptance of Christ before the suffering ones had done so.

At the Lambeth branch there has been much that has emphasized the need for permanent premises. The numbers attending the Tuesday morning and Thursday evening have greatly increased, and the urgent appeals of the suffering poor have prevailed even when the room is crowded. Captain Cundy occupied the chair. Such an institution, he remarked, is necessarily associated with pain and suffering; but it is not without its bright side, for in numbers of cases patients have been led to yield themselves to Christ.

As treasurer, Lieut.-Col. G. Mackinlay, gave particulars of the financial position of the institution, and referred to the grant made by the Hospital Sunday Fund, which is valuable in a pecuniary sense, but is a public testimony from an independent source that the Mission is conducted on sound economic lines. The more the work is looked into, both from a spiritual and business standpoint, the more it calls for thankfulness to God.

The numerous agencies of the Mission were described by Dr. Warren. For thirty-two years this "door of mercy" has been open without intermission. Special mention was made of the useful purpose served by the clothing store, and the doctors related some touching instances in connection with this branch; and also the kitchen which supplies specially prepared food for patients, as well as providing meals for the starving poor. The daily rounds of nurses and doctors bring them into touch with many cases where poverty and sickness are being borne with fortitude.

A review of the operations at Lambeth was given by Dr. R. F. Owen, who showed how the ministry of the nurses and doctors opens the way for the visitors of churches in the district.

Dr. Bridgford, an honorary lady doctor, who also labours at the Lambeth centre, told how the poor come to the doctor and nurses not only for medical assistance, but also to bring their family difficulties, seeking counsel and help on almost every conceivable subject of domestic life.

Women's Protestant Union.

FORMED in 1891 owing to a deep sense of the peril to which the country is exposed from the ever-growing encroachments of Romanism and Ritualism, the Women's Protestant Union has rendered valuable service to the cause of religious truth. It has nearly 200 branches, and during the past twelve years has enrolled no fewer than 16,244 members. This year, too, nearly 500 members have joined the Young Protestants' Union, a branch especially for young people. Two monthly magazines are issued—the Protestant Woman and the Young Protestant—in both of which the simplicity of the Gospel is steadfastly maintained.

The annual meetings, held last week at Exeter Hall, were full of encouragement, and in them were exemplified the appealing words of the president, Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot: "Let us who, by God's grace, are free from the bondage of Romanism, stand fast and stand together. We will not fight with weapons of abuse or party spirit, but with the weapon of God's Word—submitting to that alone, and endeavouring to see truth as truth, and error as error in the light He gives."

The proceedings began with a gathering for prayer on the afternoon of Wednesday week, when so large an assembly of friends came together that an overflow meeting was necessary. Pastor R. Wright Hay spoke on "Contending earnestly for the faith" (Jude 3). Subsequently a conversazione was held, in the course of which Pastor Emilio Olsson gave a bright and informing address, in which he drew, from his ripe experience, some interesting particulars regarding the Romish position in South America. In the evening, Sir Andrew Wingate presided over a public meeting, at which the chief speakers were Rev. N. F. Duncan, on "Ireland under the Roman Yoke;" Mrs. R. C. Morgan, on "Personal Experiences as a Roman Catholic Child;" and Dr. Warren (now of the London Medical Mission) on "The Protestant Cause in Australia."

The second day's sessions again commenced with prayer, Lady Agnes Anderson presiding over an assembly which listened earnestly to the address by Madame Leiter Rozas on "The Church's Conflict and Victory" (Eph. vi. 10-18). In the afternoon Mrs. Arbuthnot was herself able to preside, in spite of physical weakness. Rev. F. B. Meyer, the chief speaker, gave a telling address, in the course of which he said that while the Union is a spiritual association, its spirituality is manifested in practical work for the benefit of the community. He referred to the withering, blighting, blasting influence of Roman Catholicism in France, and urged that Romanism and High Anglicanism should not be taught in the public elementary schools at the public expense.

At the evening meeting Dr. Barnardo referred to the evils of sacerdotalism, and made a vigorous appeal to Evangelical Christians manfully to defend the truth and Word of God. Other speakers were Baron Porcelli, the keynote of whose address was "Lest we Forget"—the lessons of history; Mrs. W. P. Lockhart, whose recent visit to Italy furnished plentiful topics for exposing Romish error; and Rev. H. C. Wisdom, who spoke of "Sacerdotalism in Tasmania."

LITTLE KING DAUDI CWA.

HYMN—Sacred Songs and Solos. No. 18.

IN this month's The Round World, there is an interesting letter from Mr. C. W. Hattersley, of Uganda, which tells about a little king of one of the tribes in that country. As you may not be able to read this letter for yourselves, perhaps you will like me to pass the story on to you.

King Daudi is a little boy of chocolate-colour skin, with short, black hair, who lives in Central Africa. He is only six and a half years old, but he can read and write. Here is the translation of a letter which he sent last year to Mr. Hattersley when in England. If you could see it you would say that the handwriting is excellent for such a little fellow.

How are you, sir, my friend? I am writing this letter to you to salute you, if you have reached home safely. And also to show you what my handwriting is like, which I am able to write nowadays. Well, now, good-bye. May God take care of you always. I am your great friend who loves you much in Jesus Christ. DAUDI CWA KABAKA.

Daudi means David; Cwa was this little boy's name before he was baptized; and Kabaka, King.

At present King Daudi does not go to school, but has private tuition at home. Later on he will join the other children at their lessons, for rich and poor learn together; and you can picture him squatting on an antelope skin on the floor and spelling out such words as "Teweralikisisa," "Kikyekyakunjagaza," and "nkuwandikide!" Rather hard words for a little boy to learn, are they not? But the missionaries say that the boys in Uganda are anxious to learn, and come to school with a real desire to be taught. That makes the teacher's work easier and far more interesting, for it must be very trying when the children are inattentive and lazy.

King Daudi will begin school at 8 o'clock in the morning, being summoned there by the beating of a great drum. After hymn and prayer, some Scripture will be repeated to be learnt by heart, and then will follow a Bible address. Next comes a break-up into small classes. You would find it rather disturbing to have a class next to you in the same room repeating quite a different lesson, the children shouting it out at the top of their voices; but Mr. Hattersley says the natives of Uganda do not seem to notice the noise at all.

It is said "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," and little King Daudi finds it so, for though only six years old he has sometimes to sit in state for hours, receiving the homage of his chiefs. His robe on these grand occasions is Arab pattern, and was sewn for him by a lady missionary. He wears an Indian gold-embroidered cap, and holds his gold-mounted cane, which was a present to him from our late Queen. He looks a very grand little fellow in the picture, but I am sure he must be much happier when he can run about and play like other children.

He is now learning English, and is very proud to shake your hand and say, "How do you do?" He is described as a rather quiet, but a very nice, happy little boy; and he is being well brought up.

Mr. Hattersley asks that we will pray that God will help little King Daudi to grow up to be a good Christian king, so that he may influence his people and lead them in the ways of righteousness and truth, as did his great namesake, King David of Israel. He will have many temptations and difficulties to meet when he gets older; but if, when young, he learns to love and follow Christ, all will be well. What a happy day it will be when children the wide world over shall know and love Christ! In order to hasten that day—

We who have the message
Must send it far and wide—
How Jesus loves the children,
How for their sakes He died;
How He would fondly fold them
Within His arms of love,
And lead them onward! upward!
To brighter worlds above.

A Lonely Sufferer.

SOME time ago I inserted on this page some extracts from a letter written by one of our searchers, who is also a member of the Guild of Brave Poor Things. I am sure you will all sympathize very deeply with him in his sad affliction. He says:—

"I am going through a great deal of pain just now. The glands of my two diseased thighs are swelling and inflamed. My doctor told me that it was very extraordinary how I live to support so much pain. It keeps me so weak. The doctor said yesterday that it is impossible for me to get strong whilst so much nature is continually wasting.

"I have a great trial to bear, but I am thankful for the consolation Christ is to my soul. I would have sunk under the turf years ago had He not smoothed the rough way of life, and anointed the sore heart with His healing balm.

"I live on here a quiet life, where there are no real kindred spirits to enter into my life. In my loneliness the spirit of God broods over me, or else I would faint. I take keen interest in the grand work which THE CHRISTIAN informs me of weekly. It rejoices my heart to see that Christ is being glorified by the ministering souls who labour for love of Him.

"The lady friend who wrote to you about me last year took me into her home seven weeks. It was like living in Paradise. All this joy I owe to the kindness of UNCLE TOM'S introducing us to each other through THE CHRISTIAN."

Stockwell Orphanage.—A very elegant little booklet descriptive of this excellent institution for saving young lives and fitting them for a useful Christian career has just been issued. The illustrations are numerous and attractive, but even better is the record of work done, and of helpless children set in the way of life here and hereafter. The memory of the beloved founder, C. H. May I, through your columns, extend a most cordial invitation to officers and teachers of any Sunday school in the United Kingdom, who may desire to be represented at these gatherings, to appoint a delegate or delegates who may be assured of a hearty welcome? THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

THIRD WEEK OF MEETINGS IN BELFAST.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

THE first of Dr. Torrey's week-day engagements was the conducting of a second meeting for ministers on Monday, at 11 a.m. This meeting, convened at their own request, was much larger than on the previous Friday, the tone of the proceedings being still more chastened and solemn. After prayer, Mr. Alexander sang with much pathos "In the secret of His Presence," and Dr. Torrey spoke with singular faithfulness on the enduement and continuous filling of the Holy Spirit. The address called for great searchings of heart, and a considerable time was spent in waiting on God, one after another leading in earnest supplication.

The daily noon meeting followed, after which three different parties, consisting of ministers and others, left to conduct open-air dinner-hour meetings in widely separated districts—one at Queen's Island, another at York Street Mill, and a third at Sandy Row. The Mission is thus infusing fresh energy into evangelistic effort over the city, by means of which multitudes hear the Gospel who cannot attend the indoor services.

At 3.30 the Bible reading was conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness, Mr. Alexander taking part in the meeting. St. Enoch's Church was again filled in every part long before eight o'clock. A large portion of the ground floor had been reserved for men, who availed themselves of it to the full. Mr. Alexander and the Fellowship Choir drew out the great congregation in hearty singing. Pastor Gunn led in prayer and Dr. Torrey founded his sermon on John v. 40. "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life," which, he said, was one of the saddest things Christ ever uttered. He insisted that men are themselves wholly responsible for being unsaved, going on to speak of the things which keep them from coming to Christ. A large number of anxious inquirers came forward to seek salvation.

The Lord's Day services being generally followed by a slight reaction, the overflow in charge of Dr. Harry Guinness was not quite so large as on some former evenings. There was, however, no lack of earnest spirit, and a goodly number declared for Christ. At the later meeting for men in Clifton Street Church several yielded to his earnest appeal.

BROUGHT BY THEIR GRANDCHILDREN.

At the noon meeting on Tuesday several persons testified to blessing received by themselves and friends. Dr. Guinness referred to the conversion of an old man and his wife who had been brought on the previous evening to the overflow meeting by some grandchildren. Rev. Wm. Witherow, Mr. Wm. Grove, Mr. W. H. McLaughlin, and others told of God's gracious dealings with souls; and the spirit of thanksgiving and prayer pervaded the assembly. Open-air meetings were again held at the same places as on the previous day, the largest being the one on Queen's Island. At least 2,000 workmen from the shipyards eagerly listened to Miss Froste's sweet singing of the Gospel, and the pointed addresses of Dr. Guinness, Mr. Wm. Grove, and others. Not less interesting was the meeting at Sandy Row, where Miss Donaldson, of Aberdeen, sang, while Pastor Gunn, Mr. W. H. McLaughlin, and others spoke the Word of Life. At the close a poor fallen girl came to the lady, whose singing had evidently touched her heart, and begged her, with tears, to visit her in her home. Miss Donaldson did so, and in the evening accompanied the poor girl to St. Enoch's Church, where she took her place among the penitents, and professed her trust in the Saviour of sinners.

The meetings for business men, which had proved so popular during the previous week, were resumed to-day, from 1.5 till 1.50. There was a large assemblage of men, who evinced a deep interest in the subject of Dr. Torrey's lecture, viz., "Did Christ Rise from the dead?"

At 3.30 Dr. Torrey gave a Bible reading on the Holy Spirit in Fisherwick Church to a very large and appreciative audience.

The evening meeting at St. Enoch's was again a dense mass of men and women. Dr. Torrey preached from Matt. xxvii. 22, "What shall I do, then, with Jesus who is called Christ?" The question, he said, was the most important any man ever asked or answered. The address concluded with an appeal to all present who were not Christians to decide there and then for Jesus Christ. Many remained for the after-meeting, and there must have been about 100 who eventually stood up to confess the Saviour. The overflow in Carlisle Memorial Church quite filled the building. Rev. William Witherow and others assisted at this meeting, and Dr. Guinness's address and earnest appeal to the unsaved were followed by many decisions for Christ. Dr. Guinness also addressed a large number of men at 9.15 in Clifton Street Church.

MEETING THE FACTORY WORKERS.

It should be mentioned that in addition to the dinner-hour meetings, an open-air gathering, numbering at least 1,000, was held at 6 o'clock p.m., at Tennent Street, Crumlin Road. Workers issuing from the adjoining mills, and naturally anxious for rest and refreshment, crowded in their hundreds around a lorry which served as a platform, from which Rev. Wm. Witherow and Mr. Wm. Grove spoke with much impressiveness and effect. Rev. Lindsay Cullen, Rev. Edward Cullen, Rev. Samuel Simms, Rev. R. Teasey, and others took part in the service. As the sun went down on the quiet neighbouring hills and the crowd looked up to the speakers with eager faces, and sometimes moistened eyes, the light surely entered many a soul from a sun that shall no more go down. At the earnest desire of the people, another meeting was arranged for.

A SECOND DAY OF HUMILIATION.

At the request of a deputation from Lisburn, Wednesday of this week had been set apart as a second day for humiliation and prayer. Accordingly, at 11 o'clock a.m., the first meeting of the day was conducted by Dr. Torrey, who spoke on the importance of prayer, reading and commenting on several passages in the Acts. Testimonies were given, and prayer continued till the noon meeting supervened, when Pastor Gunn presided, and submitted a large number of requests for prayer. The victims of drink were conspicuous in these requests, many of which were burdened with sighs over our national curse.

Dr. Torrey again met at one o'clock a large number of business men in the Y.M.C.A. hall, and, Mr. Alexander having sung, "When the mists have rolled away," continued his subject —"Did Christ Rise from the Dead." Dealing with the internal evidences of the truth of the Gospel narratives, he triumphantly argued that they could not have been written by other than eye-witnesses.

Dr. Torrey's second Bible-reading drew about 1,300 persons to Fisherwick Church, which is situated in one of the principal suburbs. The service was much enjoyed by many who cannot attend evening meetings. The preacher does not seem to feel the pressure of his abundant labours, and was once more at his best in the evening meeting at St. Enoch's, which was quite full an hour before the time of service. A considerable number had come from surrounding districts, and the influence of the Mission is thus spreading far and wide. At the request of Mr. Alexander, two ladies from Glasgow told of the great blessing enjoyed there through the late Mission, and how the good work was still going on.

Dr. Torrey preached on Acts xxii. 16. "Why tarriest thou?" Some, he said, were waiting till fully convinced that the Bible was the Word of God, and Christ the Son of God; some till they had enjoyed the world enough; others waiting for their friends, and others still for feeling. Emphasising his several points with striking illustrations, he concluded with an appeal to the unsaved which brought a large number to their feet. Mr. Alexander sang "Our Mother's Way," after which many others stood up for prayer. The number of anxious inquirers exceeded that of any former meeting, being about 150. Among these were two bright twin boys, who were dealt with by Rev. Henry Montgomery, while their mother remained praying for them close by. Both gladly accepted God's gift, and entered into the joy of salvation. In Carlisle Memorial Church, which was also filled in every part, Mr. William Grove assisted, and Dr. Guinness spoke for the last time before leaving for Dublin to commence a mission there. Mr. D. A. Black expressed the gratitude of the people for the doctor's visit, the entire congregation rising to endorse his words. About sixty anxious souls were subsequently spoken with, and the 9.15 a.m. meeting for men in Clifton Street Church was addressed by Rev. T. R. Ballantine and Mr. D. A. Black, when several indicated their decision for the Master.

In his Thursday lecture to business men Dr. Torrey dealt with the circumstantial evidence in proof of Christ's resurrection from the dead, in the course of which he grappled with the arguments of sceptics in a masterly and convincing manner.

Fisherwick Church was again filled at 3.30 p.m. for the third Bible reading on the Holy Spirit. The audience was a highly respectable and most attentive one. Mr. Alexander having sung "My Father Knows," Dr. Torrey read a letter from one who had received great blessing through the Mission, after which he referred to his own experience in connection with the promised baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire (Matt. iii. 11).

VISITORS FROM OTHER CENTRES.

The evangelistic service at St. Enoch's again drew an immense audience, which filled the building about 7 o'clock, and the gates had to be closed against hundreds who sought admission. A party of between two and three hundred travelled from Londonderry; also companies from Coleraine, Larne, and elsewhere attracted by tidings of the Lord's doings. Mr Alexander evoked a hearty spirit of praise, and prayer was offered by Rev. James Cregan Dr. Torrey spoke from Luke xiv. 18, on "Excuses," setting forth the manner in which God's love and invitations are being treated by multitudes. A powerful appeal was made to those who had hitherto made excuses to do so no longer, and the large numbers which remained to seek salvation proved that the appeal had not been in vain. Many definitely confessed Christ, and went away rejoicing.

The friends from Londonderry afterwards held an open-air meeting in the vicinity of St. Enoch's, at the close of which they were accompanied to the railway station amid songs of joyful praise.

The overflow meeting was in charge of Rev. T. R. Ballantine, Mr. William Grove, and others, and at 9.15 the meeting for men was conducted by Pastor Gunn and Mr. D. A. Black.

A large open-air meeting at the Boyne Bridge, Sandy Row, was addressed at one o'clock by Revs. James Cregan, T. R. Ballantine, and Pastor Gunn, Miss Donaldson singing a Gospel solo. At the Queen's Island a crowd of men was addressed by Rev. Edward Hazelton, Rev. William Witherow, and others. A third gathering, numbering at least 1,000, took place at 6 p.m., at Tennent Street, Crumlin Road, where several local ministers and Mr. William Grove engaged the earnest attention of young and old. At the close a number professed their desire for salvation.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver at Wishaw.

The mission of Messrs. BEWLEY and FRANK WEAVER at Wishaw, which came to a close on May 11, was conducted under the auspices of the Primitive Methodist Church. The whole town, as well as the surrounding districts, have been influenced in a remarkable manner. Throughout the north of Scotland just now, the Lord is manifesting His power, and these parts are evidently sharing in the Divine visitation. Though it cannot be said that extraordinary preparation was made for the mission, yet from the very first service souls were blessed. Not a single night passed without from ten to forty seeking help and guidance in the inquiry room. The touching spiritual solos of Mr. FRANK WEAVER, and the impassioned, yet true, sane addresses of Mr. BEWLEY WEAVER, made a deep impression upon the large audiences that gathered from night to night.

The meetings increased in numbers and power. Quiet and staid members of other churches confessed they could not stay away; non-church goers were also brought in by the interest everywhere excited. It really became a mission for all the churches of the town instead of for any particular denomination. The inquiry-room witnessed the abolition of all sectarian barriers, members of different sects lending a helping hand. An outstanding feature has been the large number of young men who have decided for Christ. A meeting for men only was held on the third Sabbath, when some 700 thronged into a church which comfortably seats 500. Mr. CLARK, an ex-convict from Peterhead Prison (who was converted there when the Weaver Brothers visited the prisoners, by special Government permit), was present, and sang and spoke to the delight and edification of the audience. Mr. Clark is now in a good position in Glasgow, and eminently useful in the Master's service. On the Sabbath evening the church was packed to its utmost capacity, and a glorious day finished up with thirty-four souls seeking salvation. A most helpful Conference for Christian workers had been held the previous day, when addresses were delivered by Mrs. JOHN COLVILLE, Mr. CHALINER, of Glasgow, and Mr. W. W. DUNN, who has also just conducted an effective mission in connection with the Baptist church. On the Monday, a farewell meeting was held, when Mr. Bewley Weaver delivered a wise and timely address to the new converts, which would do much to confirm and consolidate the work that had been done. Some 250 persons in all have passed through the inquiry room, and practically every church in the town is having names sent in of those intending to ask for membership.

WALTER STOTT, Minister.

Chatsworth Tabernacle, Clapton, N.E.

A great blessing has been realized at Chatsworth Road Tabernacle, Clapton, through the visit of Messrs. W. OLNEY and F. SPENCER JOHNSON. The Tabernacle is situated in a neighbourhood which, from a variety of causes, was supposed to be peculiarly unresponsive to such a mission. The church, however, had prepared the way by special prayer meetings, as well as by a persevering canvas of the neighbourhood.

Blessing came through this preparatory work, before the date of the mission. But when the evangelists arrived a tide of blessing set in, which grew in volume, until at some of the later meetings many were unable to obtain admission to the building, although the Tabernacle seats between 700 and 800 people. Mr. Olney, in clear and forcible terms, declared the glad tidings of salvation, appealing to his hearers at the same time; while Mr. Spencer Johnson greatly impressed and won the people by his singing. The Spirit's power was manifest, and "the Word of the Lord grew mightily and prevailed." Many are still inquiring, and without mentioning these, at the close of the mission 113 persons had pledged themselves to decision for Christ, not only in the inquiry room, but subsequently, when the excitement of the moment had passed away. The converts were of all ages, several being over sixty-five, and one at least eighty years of age, the whole number being about equally divided between young persons and adults.

Children under twelve were dealt with separately in addition to these, and upon the invitation of the evangelists very many of them wrote letters, telling in childlike, yet intelligent language of their faith in Jesus. At the mothers' meeting, some 250 women being present, twenty-four of the mothers yielded themselves to the Saviour. A midnight meeting was arranged and attended by about 120 adults, some being "compelled to come in" from the public-houses around. Several of these are now rejoicing in Christ's power to save and to keep. A real blessing has come to the church and to the neighbourhood. Those who had before sown and the evangelists who were privileged to reap rejoiced together, and the nine days of the mission proved a gracious season to all. "To God be the glory; great things He hath done." M.

Mr. W. R. Lane's Missions.

Mr. W. R. LANE paid a second visit to Ramsgate, conducting a mission from May 9 to 18. The week evening services were held in Cavendish Baptist Church (Pastor T. Hancocks), and the Sunday services, afternoons at three and evenings at eight, in the amphitheatre. Large gatherings assembled both week days and Sundays, and a number of persons professed conversion. Mr. Lane's Scriptural preaching, great earnestness and manly Christianity were much appreciated, and we are endeavouring to continue the mission after his departure. T. H.

The Hastings and St. Leonards Free Church Council are entering upon a strong open-air campaign for the summer. Mr. Lane inaugurated it last Lord's Day with meetings, afternoon and evening, at a prominent place on the beach. The night meeting was attended by an enormous and most attentive crowd. Mr. Lane was well supported by ministers and members of different churches. A good choir took part, and the opportunity for Gospel testimony was splendid.

At the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. Mr. Lane gave last week a striking series of addresses to business men. On each occasion there was an encouraging attendance, particularly of young men from City offices and warehouses. Mr. Lane's happy method of mingling Scripture instruction with evangelistic appeal rendered his earnest, uncompromising words particularly effective. In an early issue we hope to give notes of the address on "Temptation."

Hyde Park Services.

We have begun our thirty-second year's campaign in what has been called "The Cosmopolitan Cathedral"—the open air. In these days of indifference there is no better way of getting at the people than by going where they congregate.

At the close of the demonstration on Saturday we held a Gospel service, having a splendid audience, which augmented our usual Saturday meeting, and at which there were anxious souls seeking Christ.

We are having a special mission in the park nightly through June, at which Mr. J. B. Wookey and myself hope to be present. The meetings will be held near the Edgware Road gates at 8 p.m. on week nights; and on Sundays, at 6, on the grass opposite Brook street gates, the ground we have always occupied on Sunday evenings since 1872.

The following striking case of conversion was related at the Littlehampton Convention last week. A few years ago a carriage was driven through Hyde Park containing a South African millionaire and his niece, who was his heiress. Passing several meetings the voices of the preachers caught the ears of the occupants of the carriage, and a sentence with the word "Eternity" in it struck the heart and conscience of the lady. Retiring to her room on reaching home she fell on her knees in prayer, and eventually sought and found Christ as her Saviour. The uncle became very angry, as she at once confessed Christ. Returning to South Africa, she refused on one occasion to go with her relative to the theatre, and he at once declared that if she persisted in her refusal to go into society, and did not accompany him to the usual round of worldly amusements, he would disinherit her. She remained faithful to her Lord; was disinherited; and joined the South African General Mission. To this day she knows not who was the preacher, but she blesses God that the message of "eternity" reached her soul. CHAS. COOK.

Work in Queensland.

For the past two years steady, patient evangelistic effort has been going forward in the City of Brisbane. Since October of last year tent missions have been conducted around the suburbs touching almost every part of the outskirts. To follow up all this preparatory work a great united mission was arranged by the Council of Churches, which commenced on March 15. About fifty congregations joined for the movement.

During the four weeks that the mission lasted the most delightful harmony prevailed. For months before, prayer meetings were held daily, and many home prayer gatherings were arranged. The evangelists engaged were Messrs. HUGH PATON, JAMES CUMMING, JOHN C. SLOAN, and ANDREW STEWART, all from Scotland. From the first deep interest was evident, and a wonderful spirit of prayer poured out.

Meetings were held all over the city—in factories, in the open air, and in the centre, in the largest hall and theatre. Some of the striking features of the mission were the long and pathetic list of prayer requests sent in every night, the mass gatherings of men in the theatre on Sunday afternoons, at some of which dozens of fine young fellows leaped to their feet in response to Mr. Paton's powerful appeals to accept Christ, and the great prayer meetings which filled the Centennial Hall on Saturday nights, when the presence of the Lord was manifested.

The mission closed with a week of service in the Opera House, when the large building was packed again and again. The results of the mission promise to be of incalculable benefit to the spiritual life of the city and to influence the whole State. Hundreds of anxious souls were dealt with in the inquiry rooms, a remarkable proportion of them being men. Every congregation felt the impetus of the movement. On the last three Sundays of the mission, by unanimous consent, the congregations interested made their evening service evangelistic, and in many cases and from all over over the city, tidings of power and salvation came back to the centre. The mission was felt to have been in many ways the most remarkable that Brisbane has ever experienced.

A short series of evangelistic services has been conducted at Millport by Rev. JOHN MCNEILL. The attendance at all the services was large, and an evident impression was made by the fervour and power of the appeals. All the Presbyterian ministers of the town, along with the Baptist pastor, were united in the mission; and all feel their deep obligations to Mr. McNeill. The meetings during the week were held in the parish church, as being the largest building; and on Sundays the evangelist preached in the three Presbyterian churches to large audiences.

FALKIRK.

FURTHER particulars of the recent mission at Falkirk are given by Mr. D. E. McINNES, who says, in the course of an interesting report:—"At the close of the first meeting a goodly number of young men came forward and acknowledged that they had taken Christ that night. A worker reported that a young girl in one of the principal schools, who had been blessed during the previous mission, had brought over six other girls to the meetings, and all were now trusting Christ. On the Wednesday night another opportunity was given for testimony, when quite a number rose all over the building to thank God for blessing. At the close ten seekers came to the front. On the Thursday, which was practically the closing night of the evangelistic meetings, the Spirit of God was present in a marked way. From various parts of the hall ten men and women came of their own accord to the front, and while Mr. Armon Jones was singing 'Looking this way' seven more seekers came voluntarily from their seats. Over one hundred cards have been handed in with the names and addresses of those who have received blessing."

ENFIELD.

Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones began a mission at Enfield on Thursday last, meeting an assembly of well-known ladies and gentlemen interested in Gospel Temperance work, at Chase Side Hall at 6 p.m. The missioners were introduced by Rev. H. STORER TOMS.

At the public meeting which followed Dr. Henry spoke powerfully, contending that "the kingdom of drink is the relentless foe of God's kingdom of righteousness, which is one of justice, whereas the kingdom of drink is one of injustice. Again, does drink promote the peace of the family, the individual, the church, or the world? No, it means the opposite. It is the disturber of the public peace and the enemy of God."

Pursuing his comparisons between the kingdom of God and that of drink, the missioner based some earnest words on the prayer "Thy Kingdom Come." If prayed as Christ intended, the Christian must mean it as a petition for the righteousness and joy and peace of the people. Can a man pray it and promote the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, when drink is the relentless foe of Christ's Kingdom? In conclusion, Dr. Henry answered the question, "Who is to save the thousands of victims of strong drink?" There is only one force, and that is the Christian Church.

Mr. F. J. LOUDIN, owing to a severe illness, has felt compelled to disband for a time the Fisk University Jubilee Singers. As his illness is caused by rheumatism, Mr Loudin does not anticipate being permanently disabled from continuing his work.

SISTER VERA, whose work is in connection with the "One by One Working Band," is open to engagements for "three days prayer missions," or single meetings, to set forth the "One by One work." Her recent meetings at the Gospel Hall Wood Green were blessed and appreciated. Friends wishing to secure her will please address themselves to the founder of the "One-by One Band," Mr. Thomas Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

Mr. CHARLES E. FAITHFULL, of Madrid, Spain, writes that he purposes to spend this summer in England, and would esteem it a favour if friends and fellow-helpers would kindly address all communications for the present to our care. After a brief season of rest, Mr. Faithfull will be glad of opportunities of speaking about the progress of the Gospel in Spain, in many parts of which the Spirit of God is evidently moving, both in the conversion of souls and in the quickening of His people. He expects to be in London during the month of June.

Obituary.

PASTEUR ARNOLD BOVET.

THE death is announced of M. Arnold Bovet, pasteur of the Free Church of Berne, a devoted servant of Christ during a life of strenuous activity. To Gospel preaching he conjoined labour for the temporal good of the people; and was a great supporter of temperance effort and agencies in the interest of the fallen and weak, the ignorant and erring. Many mourn his loss as friend and benefactor; and his funeral was a demonstration of widespread esteem, a manifestation of public sorrow and mourning.

REV. HUGH MACMILLAN.

Reference was made at the Assembly of the United Free Church on Monday last to the death of Rev. Hugh Macmillan, D.D., LL.D., which took place early on Sunday morning at Edinburgh. Dr. Macmillan was born in 1833 at Aberfeldy. His first charge was the Free Church, Kirkmichael, Perthshire, to which he was called in 1859, and in 1864 he moved to Free St. Peter's Church, Glasgow. Since 1878 he had been minister of Free West Church, Greenock, though he had not been in active work for the last year or two. In 1897-98 he served as Moderator of the Free Church Assembly. He was a great traveller, and was well known in this country as well as in Scotland for his many interesting writings bearing on the analogies between the natural and the spiritual world. These began with his "First Forms of Vegetation" in 1861, and he continued to publish up to 1901. The most popular was his "Bible Teachings in Nature," and several of his publications have been translated into many Continental languages. He was a man of great personal charm, with an interest in many forms of art and knowledge.

MISS ANNIE SHARP, AMRITSAR.

We praise Him for all that is past,
And trust Him for all that's to come.

Such was the last message sent to her fellow-helpers at home early in April by Miss Annie Sharp from Amritsar (Panjab) soon after her return to India to take up the blessed work for the blind, carried on by her in that city for over fifteen years. A week later the blind institute was removed to the new and healthier home at Rajpur, where in improved buildings in ten acres of land the large family of blind were happily settled down. All promised well for a fresh and happy advance in the work. But God's ways are not our ways! Only two weeks later the Master came and called for His servant; not for one of the poor helpless blind ones, but for her, upon whom, humanly speaking, the charge of all was laid. The seventy, "blind for all practical purposes" (save only five), were suddenly, by cholera, bereft of the devoted friend and helper and teacher, who had so truly been in every sense "eyes to the blind." For her it is "far better," as those who loved her best well know.

One of her last efforts was to draft a letter to THE CHRISTIAN, in which, speaking of the present needs of her work among the blind in India, her strong confidence in God was manifested: "He will provide; He is never forgetful of His own, and if we were up above, we should see His beneficent preparations. It is better to walk by faith, else we might not know the joy, kindled in the heart, when His preparations are realized." E. S.

Is Christ's Coming Imminent?—Mr. Henry Varley calls his booklet "A Prophetic Study for the New Century." Therein he considers actual conditions in the Church and the world, as well as among the Jewish people and their fatherland, associating them with sayings in "the sure word of prophecy." Hence there is in these pages much that should prove helpful to the student of Holy Scripture. As an introduction to the study of dispensational truth, this booklet should serve a very useful purpose. (3d. Holness.)

About Books.

THE CHURCH AND THE MINISTRY.

What discussion has been waged round these terms? How they have been confused, and yet how divergent are they in meaning when narrowly scrutinized! Primitive institutions and the multiform developments of quite early times present striking contrasts in many respects, and one only needs to study them comparatively to be impressed with their important lessons for all ages of the Church. Great help in any such investigation is rendered by Principal Lindsay's interesting and valuable work, The Church and the Ministry in the Early Centuries, which is the result of much thought and wide research.

In the preface to his volume, Principal Lindsay prepares us for what follows, by announcing three postulates that cannot but command the assent of Evangelical believers. In the first place, he believes that there is a Visible Catholic Church of Christ consisting of all those throughout the world who visibly worship the same God and Father, profess their faith in the same Saviour, and are taught by the same Holy Spirit; but he does not see any Scriptural or even primitive warrant for insisting that catholicity must find visible expression in a uniformity of organization, of ritual of worship, or even of formulated creed. In the second place, he holds that there is, and must be, a valid ministry of some sort in the churches which are branches of the one Visible Catholic Church of Christ; but he does not think that the fact that the Church possesses an authority which is a direct gift from God necessarily means that the authority must exist in a class or caste of superior office-bearers endowed with a grace, and therefore with a power, "specific, exclusive, and efficient," and that it cannot be delegated to the ministry by the Christian people.

Dr. Lindsay's third postulate belongs to an entirely different sphere, but is likely to appeal very strongly to thoughtful observers. It is—that analogies in organization illustrative of the life of the primitive Christian communities can be more easily and more safely found on the mission fields of our common Christianity than among the details of the organized life of the long-established churches of Christian Europe. Inasmuch as in the early centuries and on the mission field one may study origins in practical working, this conclusion is one that requires little argument for its presentation or support. When, several years ago, Dr. Lindsay spent some twelve months in India, examining there the methods, work, and results of missions, he seemed, as he tells us, at times to have been transported back to the early centuries, and to hear and see what the earliest writers had recounted and described.

The fruit of long and careful study of the literary remains of the early Christian centuries, as those remains may be studied to-day in the light of discoveries of which our forefathers little dreamed, this is a useful and stimulating work. The lectures are eight in number, and they are characterized by breadth of view and keen insight into the bearings of things. The chapters that deal with the prophetic ministry of the primitive Church, and with the change whereby that ministry was superseded by sacerdotalism, are among the most readable and practical in the book. The many footnotes are not only an evidence of the author's conscientious labour, but, as they embody facts that are not easily accessible, they add greatly to the substantial value of the work.

A Metrical Version of the Revelation of St. John the Divine. By C. H. B. Burlton. (Marshall Brothers.) Many who find great instruction and comfort in the perusal of the Apocalypse, will read these pages with interest. The author has certainly given much thought to the versification of the marvellous book of vision.

Helps to Faith. By Rev. E. Griffith-Jones, B.A. (2d. Young People's Union, Memorial Hall, E.C.) This booklet forms No. 3 of a very useful series of "Hints and Helps for Bible Classes," and comprises outline studies on the Being and Attributes of God, Creation, Man, Sin, Miracles, the Humanity and Divinity of our Lord, the Future Life, &c. It is not always easy to place these and kindred topics in a manner attractive to young people (or old ones either, sometimes); yet they are of paramount importance. The author has undertaken a difficult task, which from his standpoint he has carried to a successful issue in a concise, intelligent, and interesting manner, although we do not accept all his positions.

LETTERS BY BOTTLE-POST.

On a group of islands to the south of Iceland, the inhabitants have a strange method of communication. When the wind blows from the south and one of the islanders desires to send a letter to the mainland, he writes the message, places it within a well-corked bottle, and commits it to the ocean. People are on the look-out for bottles, and the communication is in due course passed on to the proper quarter. The prayers of the people of God are wafted to the Divine ear (Golden Text). The angel of the Lord who stood by Paul and said, "Fear not," is just as ready to cheer and sustain to-day.

A CONTROLLING HAND.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, in his book, "Many Infallible Proofs," likens the controlling hand of God to the management of a grand orchestra. He says: "See how, as that bâton rises and falls in the hand of the conductor, from violin, bass viol, cornet and flute, trombone and trumpet, there comes one great harmony. You have no doubt, though the conductor be screened from view, that one master mind controls all the instrumental performers." So God, in the affairs of the Apostle, was overruling the shipwreck, and Paul, who believed God that it should be even as it was told him, was able to assure the men on board that there should not a hair fall from the head of any of them (v. 34).

PRAYER AND POWER.

It has been said that in the long struggle preceding the abolition of the slave trade, the leaders of the good movement never took any step until God had been approached in prayer. On any night, when the chief of the abolition party was speaking in the House of Commons, a band of praying men might have been seen pleading with God for the victory of right over might and unrighteousness. Paul, who really commanded the vessel, was the means in God's hand of saving all the souls on board. He found strength in prayer, and the confidence came from the Lord Himself.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

Rev. George Grenfell, who has recently succeeded in crossing Central Africa, traversed some five hundred miles in order to connect the Baptist missionaries with their brethren of the Church Missionary Society; and his journey, like that of the Apostle, was extremely hazardous. A river steamer took him part of the way; then canoes were used for the smaller streams, and at last the mighty forests had to be tramped by the intrepid explorer. Mr. Grenfell knew no fear amid the equatorial natives, for with a strong confidence in God, he was able to leave the issue in His hands. The faith of the missionary has been honoured; and in the words of the lesson, it has come to pass that all the party have escaped in safety to the land whither they journeyed (v. 44).

Fallen Asleep.

The Presbyterian Church at Burton-on-Trent has just lost by death its oldest and one of its most respected members, Mr. ROBERT INGLIS. His influence was felt in the congregation both by young and old, and he has left a vacant place which will be hard to fill.—Miss MARGARET A. REID, formerly was for many years matron in the Rescue Society at Woodford, &c., a true Christian, a humble disciple, a sympathetic friend, and a faithful worker among young girls, many of whom were warmly attached to her; she watched for their souls as one who should "give account" (Heb. xiii. 17).—Rev. ARTHUR BROWN, Rector of Catfield. A scholarly clergyman of wide literary repute, and an earnest and diligent pastor.—Aged eighty-two, Rev. CHARLES ILLINGWORTH. In his prime he was one of the most influential of Congregational ministers. In 1870 he undertook the pastorate at Lendal Chapel, York, where he remained for seventeen years, and accomplished much good work.—Mrs. HOLT, a devoted Christian lady, for many years a contributor to the English Churchman.—Mrs. Fleming, the wife of Rev. Canon Fleming died on Monday last, at St. Michael's Vicarage, S.W. Two months ago she was thrown violently on her head by a motor-car, which backed on her as she crossed behind it, and though she had recovered from the shock, she was seized with paralysis on Thursday last. She had accompanied Canon Fleming on that evening to the recognition meeting of Rev. R. J. Campbell at the City Temple, and was seized with the attack in the building.

Church of England.

A long and faithful Evangelical ministry has lately been brought to a close at Essington, near Wolverhampton, through the resignation of Rev. George Hemming. For over eighteen years he has laboured with untiring zeal and love among the people in that colliery district.

On Sunday week, at St. Simon's, West Kensington, the new vicar (Rev. G. C. Williamson) started an open-air service outside the church at the close of the ordinary evening service. The greater part of the congregation stayed to the meeting, including both the churchwardens, and a vast crowd gathered around, windows being thrown up on all sides, from which many listened to the hymns and address. The meetings will continue through the summer months.

Congregational.

In memory of the late Dr. Parker a marble tablet is to be placed near the door of the deacons' vestry at the City Temple.

Mr. W. F. Morgan, chairman of the executive committee of the Wilts and East Somerset Congregational Union, has promised £100 towards the fund in aid of the extension of Congregational work on Salisbury Plain. The Congregational Union of England and Wales has now promised a gift of £200 towards the same object.

Rev. William H. Towers (Oldham Road Church, Manchester) has accepted the invitation to succeed Rev. Frederick Barnes, B.A., at the Northgate Congregational Church, Chester. Mr. Towers proposes to close his seventeen years' ministry at Oldham Road on July 19, and will enter upon the new sphere on September 6.

A new branch church has been opened at South Cliff, Lowestoft. Eloquent and spiritual addresses were given by Revs. E. A. Bennet (Wesleyan), president of the Lowestoft Free Church Council, and J. D. Jones, of Bournemouth. The history of the Congregational Church in Lowestoft dates from about 1655, when Independents from Yarmouth started holding meetings in a barn in what is now known as Duke's Head Street.

Baptist.

The centenary of the Sunday-school at Rugby has just been celebrated with a rally of past and present teachers and scholars. It was founded in 1803, when Rugby was but a village, by Sir Egerton Leigh.

At Abbey Road Church, St. John's Wood, N.W. (Pastor H. E. Stone), the thirty-ninth church anniversary services have been held. At a public meeting, presided over by Mr. W. Olney, encouraging reports of the various church agencies were submitted.

The Harrogate Church has lately held its annual meeting. Rev. Graham Tarn, in his pastoral address, presented two words for consideration in relation to the church—Environment and Evangelization. The church should provide for the spiritual life the environment necessary for its protection, its growth, and its fruitfulness. It should also be a great evangelizing agency, for no church is performing its divinely-appointed mission unless it is putting forth every effort to apply to the hearts of men the saving truths and forces of the Gospel.

The 265th anniversary of Devonshire Square Church, Stoke Newington, N., has just been celebrated. Sermons were preached by Revs. J. H. French and Archibald G. Brown. At the public meeting Mr. George Lampard, L.C.C., presided over a large attendance. Mr. H. Gerrard (secretary) pointed to the honourable history of the church and to the many stalwart men of God who have presided over it. He added interesting particulars of the activity prevailing under the present pastor, Rev. G. P. McKay. The chairman spoke of the church as "a hive of industry," and rejoiced in the many conversions recently reported. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. J. Bradford, C. W. Vick, W. Cuff, and the pastor.

After forty-two years' services have been conducted for the last time in Abingdon Street Baptist Church, Blackpool. The meetings were largely attended, and appropriate sermons were preached by the pastor (Rev. H. C. Wagnell). The chapel having become inadequate for the present congregations will undergo large alterations. The accommodation will be nearly doubled and the new building will be open and free to all alike. The object in view is to make the place a centre of aggressive evangelistic work. The estimated cost of the undertaking is £6,500. During the rebuilding the services will be held at the Grand Theatre until June 14, and afterwards at the Opera House, where for three years Mr. Wagnall conducted effective Gospel services.

Methodist.

The twelfth anniversary of Bowron House (Free Methodist Deaconess Institute) has been celebrated. Mr. Andrew Dickson, of Newcastle, took the chair. The sisters—forty in number—were nearly all present, and several of them spoke. Rev. William Redfern delivered an address in the evening.

The new departure at the east end of Newcastle in the shape of religious services in the Grand Theatre, Byker, under the direction of a joint committee from the Heaton Road Circuit and the Newcastle Mission, has been so far quite a success. Rev. Thos. Proudlove conducts the services.

Among the twenty-one Wesleyan ministers who contemplate retirement from active departmental or circuit duties at the ensuing Conference, the most notable are Rev. Dr. J. H. Rigg, Professor W. F. Slater, of Didsbury College, and Rev. Thomas Champness, of the "Joyful News" Mission.

The May meeting of the Children's Home Committee has been held at Farnborough. The developments of this branch are very satisfactory. Three large new houses have been opened, and in each a family of twenty-five boys is living, under the care of two Sisters. The total number of boys now resident at the Farnborough branch is 150. The majority of boys have been committed to this branch, which is a Certified Industrial School, by magistrates in many parts of the country, and some by County Councils.

The official returns of Wesleyan Methodist Church membership, as ready for presentation to the forthcoming annual conference, are as follows:—468,036 full and accredited members, net increase on year, 4,861. There are on trial for church membership, 33,877. During the year 43,419 new members have been admitted; 928 have emigrated, 5,538 have died, 14,162 have ceased to be members, 91,011 are reported as belonging to junior society classes. All the districts share in the increase except five.

Presbyterian.

At the Synod meeting the hymn-book question was postponed for a year, a strong committee being appointed to consider the matter from all points of view.

At Park Church, Highbury, N., the congregation recently had the pleasure of hearing Dr. J. Preston Maxwell, who is fresh from the mission field in China. Dr. Maxwell is an old member of the congregation, and his name appears on the famous "Roll of Missionaries," which occupies a prominent position in the lecture hall of the church.

The Foreign Mission Committee appeals to every minister and office-bearer within the Church to consider how, within their own congregations, they can best broaden the basis of their support to the work by perfecting their organization, giving every member a chance of contributing steadily and systematically, and, above all, by fostering, through much prayer, a vital interest in the Mission.

At Heaton Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, very inspiriting anniversary services in connection with the Sabbath-school were conducted on the 10th inst. by Rev. John Conway, of Hammersmith, who gave an attractive address on "Some New Things," and afterwards presented the Bibles awarded by the Instruction of Youth Committee to the twelve scholars who had qualified for them by answering all the questions in the Shorter Catechism with not more than five mistakes.

Society of Friends.

At a meeting of the joint committee for the building of a new meeting-house at East Harling plans were adopted, and it is hoped that the building will be available in September.

A meeting for young Friends, arranged by the Friends' Christian Fellowship Union, was held lately at Westminster Meeting House. Edward Grubb gave an address on "Quakerism: Its Inner Strength and Outer Weakness." The speaker specified remedies for present-day weaknesses in the Society of Friends. "The first remedy is a deeper spiritual experience. Where the presence of the Spirit is a living reality, there is no need either for rigid conservatism or for elaborate organization. Thought and much prayer should be devoted to meetings for worship. The eldership should seek to lay the ministry on those who have gifts and are neglecting them. We must train the minds of those with warm hearts, and warm the hearts of those mentally equipped. Our whole system of free ministry is on its trial, and with it the message that we have for the world."

At the thirty-fourth annual meeting of the Howard Street Gospel Mission and Ragged School, which was held recently, Mr. Percy M. Thornton, M.P., presided. The hon. sec., Mr. N. A. Soames gave an encouraging account of the work. The total number of meetings of all kinds held during the year was 692. The mission evangelists, Messrs. N. A. Soames and Charles Gilby, have visited many parts preaching and singing the Gospel with good results. Upwards of 168 open-air meetings were held, and over 41,000 Gospel tracts distributed. Mr. Soames added particulars of many social and philanthropic efforts in connection with the mission. In closing he said that he is retiring from the secretaryship on account of business responsibilities, and in future Mr. E. M. Soames will fill the position. An effort is to be made to raise £2,000 for a new building.

Pastor Gerald Coultas, of the Tabernacle, Whyteleafe, Surrey, writes:—"We have been favoured in this village by the visit of Rev. Francis Paynter, Pastor John McAuliffe, Mr. Herbert Thatcher, and Miss Amy Winterbottom, who began a series of meetings on Saturday, the 9th inst. For five days we have had three meetings a day. Some of Mr. Paynter's addresses on the 'Ministry of the Holy Spirit' were most helpful, and many were enabled by the Word to see their privileges in this pentecostal day. Mr. McAuliffe gave three Bible readings on 'Canaan,' and in telling language urged believers to leave the desert wanderings, and enter the good land.' The young people's services were conducted by Mr. Thatcher and Miss Winterbottom."

South American Missionary Society.—Owing to the sale of Clifford's Inn, E.C., the Committee of the South American Missionary Society have been compelled to seek new offices. At the cost of £3,185 a suitable site has been secured in Red Lion Square, Holborn, W.C. Here it is hoped to erect a suitable Mission House. It is estimated that the required building can be erected for £5,000. The entire cost will therefore be about £8,200. Other societies have built, or purchased, or had presented to them their Houses, without trenching on the funds that had been gathered for missionary work, and the committee earnestly desire that it may be so in this case also. The secretary's address is 1, Clifford's Inn, Fleet Street, E.C.

Christian Mission, Glasgow.—The Christian Mission, which grew out of an evangelistic effort established in the Bute Hall (near Gorbals Cross) in 1896, now carries on work at two centres in the southern district of Glasgow—Thistle Hall, 63, Cathcart Road, and Oatlands Hall, 36, Silverfir Street. Through the generosity of a friend it was made possible some months ago to place Mr. Neil McIntyre, "the blind preacher," in charge at Oatlands. A further step was taken in advance last week, when Mr. John Grahame (till now honorary secretary and superintendent) was appointed to devote his whole time to work in the Gorbals district. One of the most important branches of the work is that among the children, to about two hundred of the very poorest of whom a free meal is given every Sunday afternoon.

A Day in the Country. With the warm weather, many applications are reaching us for help in giving "a day in the country" to old and young folks from London. In past years our readers have enabled us to dispense their gifts in various directions, and Christian workers have been greatly assisted by the result. Upon those who hardly ever see the glory of God in country surroundings, a brief visit to field and forest, lane and hedgerow, exercises a wholesome influence; and in some cases still deeper impressions have been traced to the same simple experiences.

Interview with Dr. Torrey. The statement which we are able to give (see p. 12) of Dr. Torrey's personal impressions regarding his work with Mr. Alexander in this country, will have a deep interest for those all over the world who have been remembering them before the Throne of Grace. Many of the applications sent in, for missions after their return from America in September next, must be declined; but Christians are faithfully reminded that the responsibility for having a time of blessing or otherwise in their various centres, rests upon themselves. The matter does not depend on the presence of particular individuals. Wherever Christian people are prepared to pray unceasingly, and to go forth in the strength of God, an awakening is bound to follow. If the advice for coming months be laid seriously to heart, the centres of fruitful work next winter may be indefinitely multiplied. Believers of long or short experience will find in Dr. Torrey's words to young converts the secret of making barren lives to blossom like so many beautiful gardens. The leave-taking message to all who have helped, shows how strong is the bond of affection that has been formed.

The Christian Workers' Bible. Dr. Torrey leaves more than memories behind him. In addition to his excellent works on Bible study and Christian conduct, he has left materials for the preparation of the CHRISTIAN WORKERS' BIBLE, shortly to be issued from the Oxford University Press. Those who feel that the ordinary "Helps" are more voluminous than they need for constant service, will welcome this edition of the Holy Scriptures. In the course of twenty-four pages, bound up at the end of the book, Dr. Torrey supplies definitions and instructions, grounds of belief and methods of procedure, for the immediate use of practical workers. He arranges texts for presentation to the inquirer, suggesting reasons for the mind and appeals to the heart. Then follow the usual list of Proper Names, a compendious Subject-Index, a Concordance, and a series of maps. These suggestive Helps, though they survey a wide field, are remarkably pointed and compact.

Agnosticism among Students. Last Thursday, after the closing lecture of a series on Christian Apologetics, given at University College, London, one of the audience said:—

> I believe most of the students at this college are agnostics, not because they have found science contrary to religion, but because they have looked to the Christians around them to show their faith, and have been disappointed.

If this be true of that great body of young men and women (the majority being under twenty-one years of age), and it was applause rather than dissent which greeted it, the statement is one fitted to sadden every Christian heart. Of course, there are many more things keeping them away from God and Christ; but the Christian community must be living very far short of its privileges when such a charge can be conscientiously made, however lightly. Argument and discussion may have a place in the winning of students for Christ; but in the discussion referred to, as so often before, it was apparent that Christian evidence which men and women demand is the lifting of Him up in the individual lives of His professing followers.

"Progressive Revelation." It would be an excellent thing if those who champion the cause of "free religious thought" would be more precise in their use of terms. The double entendre may not be meant, but it certainly very clearly suggests itself in many of the phrases employed. "Progressive revelation"—the chief term employed in the manifesto of the Churchmen's Union—evidently means one thing to certain clerics and quite another to, say, Lord Avebury, who spoke at the annual meeting last week. The latter bade his hearers note that "the Bible was a book written by Easterns for Easterns," and must be read accordingly. We know what underlies that assumption. But, as a fact, the statement is not correct. Rome and Greece, to whom the Gospel came, and in whose countries most of the Epistles were written, were not Eastern countries in the sense intended by Lord Avebury. What is meant, of course, by these statements is that the West must interpret the Bible for itself. But "progressive revelation" cannot be allowed to cover such a movement as that. The history of the various attempts at accommodated interpretation might be better described by the phrase "progressive contradictions." Some of the human creeds might with advantage be amended, but with many people it is the fundamentals of Christianity that are really attacked under the plea of a revision of creed. There can be no "progressive revelation" which brands as untrue the most certain facts of history upon which the Church is built.

Philosophy or Life? The way in which most of the public prints deal with religious subjects is very significant. Most secular papers now have their column of "Church News." Not so very long ago this would have been impossible. It is noticeable, however, that religious subjects, as treated by men of the world, are regarded as pertaining to the realm of philosophy. Correspondence columns particularly make this evident. The Gospel is to be reduced to a syllogism. This way of treating it, is as fatal as the older way of ignoring it or sneering at it. For above all things the service of God is the very life of man. "It is your LIFE," said Moses to the children of Israel. To discuss spiritual things as a philosophy merely, does for the soul what a mere philosophical discussion of bread would do for a hungry stomach — the inner hunger remains unappeased. The demand of God is, first and foremost, for our heart. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."

The Sequence of Miracles. Rev. Dr. Dallinger, confessedly one of the ablest of English microscopists and scientists, preaching in London recently on Miracles, pointed out that while phenomena may be discovered, the causes of phenomena are utterly undiscoverable. The Gospel comes to us claiming to be supported by the mystery of miracles; but, as Dr. Dallinger says, the greatest miracle has been, how all that we see and search into should have come to be. Behind that come the miracles of Jesus, and they followed, it may be said, by reason of His Divinity, and His consequent supreme knowledge of nature and its laws—a knowledge not acquired, but inherited. So, it goes without saying, that > if man, in the process of centuries, discovers some o all the laws obedient to Christ's bidding, the priority of His act will, nevertheless, leave His miracles divine.

The Heart to Understand. Much of the religious confusion of our time is mirrored in three verses of the Gospel of John, where one of the decisive incidents of our Lord's life is recorded. There came a voice from heaven—an audible voice. Some in the crowd said that it thundered: others said an angel spake—but Jesus said "Father." That one Divine voice was interpreted in three different ways, and it was our Lord alone who truly perceived it. Thus it is to-day. God still speaks to men in an unmistakable manner, but His voice is interpreted by some in terms of natural phenomena—vague and uncertain, and by others in a sentimental sense. Only the heart which has received the Spirit of Christ can understand the Divine voice. The voice is clear enough—it needs the heart to understand it. When men rely wholly upon themselves for the understanding of Divine truth, they are fatally susceptible to error and to contradiction. When they surrender themselves wholly to the Spirit of God, then they clearly hear the Father's voice.

The Deeper Sensitiveness. A moot point for discussion between various workers is, whether the vices and sorrows which bulk so largely before our eyes to-day, are really greater, in proportion, than they were when less was seen of them. Some, as is well known, contend that the increase of vice is only apparent, and that its seeming increase is due to the modern way of recording everything that occurs. The newspaper, in fact, has made vivid what previously existed but was not so manifest. But this is by no means the whole truth, as statistics abundantly prove. There is another explanation, however, which makes the matter more clear. It is that upon which Rev. W. L. Watkinson has insisted with such force, i.e., that the Church of Christ has increased in sensitiveness with regard to the evils of the day. The Christian conscience is more acute than it used to be with regard to drink, slavery of all kinds and the like, and this makes the spectacle of evil the more appalling. We see better, because of clearer vision, the reality of sin. This quickening of conscience is the work of the Holy Spirit, and it is one of His means of dealing with the world's evil.

The Craze to Excel. The frenzy which Automobilism has recently developed in mad racing, is severely commented upon by that expert in mental matters, Dr. Forbes Winslow, who sees in the practice another illustration of men's desire to excel each other for no better reason than to boast of their exploits. Dr. Winslow points out that unreasoning rivalry of this kind leads directly to brain fag and to lunacy, and he goes the length of saying that unless a stop is put to such folly, mental aberrations will be more frequent than ever. There can be no doubt as to the truth of the observation that the spirit of our time is marked by vain and boastful rivalry. How different is that of which the Apostle Paul speaks so often! The desire to excel in love, in helpfulness, in good works, and in Christ-likeness! Such rivalry as this glorifies God and blesses men.

Peace or Stagnation. In a recent sermon upon "Unexplored Remainders in Christ's Teachings," Rev. Dr. Dwight Hillis draws attention to a somewhat nice distinction which may well have escaped the attention of many students. Touching upon the comforting assurance, "Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto" (John xiv. 27), he says:—

> Many think of peace as mere quietude. They do not understand what peace is. For them the pool that may become stagnant represents peace. . . . And yet peace, strictly speaking, is anything but quietude. If we seek the true image of peace, we find it in the moving heavens, where the planets speed round the sun, where the sun sweeps on his course. There is peace in the sky, because the movement is ordered and restrained, and controlled by law. Peace, then, is frictionless movement. Peace means the harmonization of all the faculties, the subordination of the lower to the higher.

Certainly this range of Christ's teaching never was more important than in this heated age of overwork and hurry. If religion is indeed "the eternal life, manifest in terms of time under the eye and presence of God," then it follows, as Dr. Hillis says, that "worry is a sin."

The Toll to Bacchus. Every year makes more apparent the frightful heaviness of the toll which men voluntarily pay for their drinking customs. Besides the vast sums directly expended in drink—money which is withdrawn from good purposes—we have to consider the crimes and diseases which afflict the country as the result. This toll is too heavy to be fully reckoned. Another item has just been added to the list by Dr. Alfred Wolff, who demonstrates, in an article in the Nineteenth Century, that beer-drinking has much to do with the alarming increasing of cancer during recent years. The districts where cancer mortality is highest are those in which the consumption of beer or cider is greatest. Other causes of cancer are given, but this one, in view of what we already know concerning the effects of drinking, ought to awaken men to thought.

Another Side to Compensation. Mr. Brodrick's opportunist utterance in regard to the compensation question would seem to suggest that the Government has at length awakened to the fact that the brewer and the publican are not everybody, and that thoughtful members of the administration have weighed Mr. Balfour's notorious utterance on the subject and found it wanting. Meanwhile, the claims of those whose property is injured by the granting or existence of a licence in the neighbourhood might be considered. One such case occurred recently in which the value of a house was reduced by £1,500 by the opening of a public house near it, which was, by the way, shortly afterwards sold for £10,000. A few days ago, at Worksop, a public-house at Dinnington was sold to the Masbro' Brewery Company, Sheffield, for £5,500, the district in which it stands having "been developed for mining purposes." Yet the rent of the house is only £16. Who will compensate the residents in the immediate vicinity when the brewery company "develop" their drinking shop?

Death in the Window. Now that several borough councils have taken measures in regard to suggestive and demoralizing posters, and to degrading literature, the next desirable step would logically seem to be an attempt to purify the exhibitions forced upon the public by numbers of unscrupulous tradesmen, "for death is come into our windows to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets" (Jer. ix. 21). Ten or twenty years ago the evil was to a great extent confined to back streets, somewhat out of the way of great traffic, but to-day in fashionable and thronged roads there are windows which no respectable woman can pass without a feeling of shame. The "slaughter weapon" often, it is true, consists in the "writer's inkhorn" (Ezek. ix. 2); but there are other snares and traps to catch men (Jer. v. 26) than those of impure literature, and from these vicious and debasing influences of the pathway our young men and women need protection.

The Two Coats. Miss Julie Sutter has, in a recently published passage, put the question of true charity into a nutshell; and the thoughtful consideration of her words may be helpful to some who are in doubt as to the standard of their gifts. She says, in enforcing the argument, that "the second coat" means a yielding of that which costs us dear, the deliberate putting aside of self:—

> At the very outset of Christianity the strange advice fell on the ear of the multitude: "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none" (Luke iii. 11). It is not, Give away the worn-out coat, the thing you do not want any longer, the thing you easily can spare. It is the unconditional spirit of unselfishness.

The Rights of Animals. We are glad to notice the rising tide of popular indignation against the legalizing of vivisection. The recent annual meeting of the Anti-Vivisection Society was one of the most influential ever held, remarkable for the plain-spokenness of many leading clergy, doctors, and literary men. In view of the admissions of such men as Sir Frederick Treves, who confessed that his experiments on living animals had misled him in the treatment of human beings (on account of the difference between animals and men), it is clear that, even from the scientific point of view, vivisection stands condemned. It can no longer be maintained that the agitation against vivsection proceeds from sentimental fanatics, when some of the most eminent surgeons condemn it on every ground. The best means of meeting the evil just now, doubtless, is that suggested by Sir J. Rolleston, M.P.—the withdrawal of subscriptions from the hospitals in which vivisection is practised. Happily there are numbers of hospitals where dogs and other animals are not tortured, so that the adoption of some such plan need only result in a diversion of charity.

"Chains." We have more than once called attention to the complications arising from the snowball system of collecting money; and it seems that the Chain of Prayer has not been more fortunate. A correspondent notifies us of the confusion to which the latter has led in her experience. She has even received abusive letters from correspondents! Prayer is such a sacred subject that it seems to us very undesirable that persons should be asked to join therein for a particular object without at least some personal knowledge that they are likely to be interested.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey.

In a letter to us, dated May 22, Mrs. Sankey says:—

"My dear husband is improving, but not so quickly as we had hoped. During the pleasant days we are now having, he is able to be out in the fresh air, and that is giving him a better appetite. The doctor gives us hope that as his bodily strength improves, there may be a slight improvement in his eyes. For this we are praying and hoping; but God's will be done in this as in all things. We know that His grace will be sufficient.

"Yes; it is a sore trial to my husband, who is naturally of such an active temperament; but 'some time we'll understand.' Until then, we trust Him who says 'All things work together for good to them that love God.' My husband joins me in love to you all.—Yours, &c., Fanny V. Sankey."

Writing with respect to his beloved father, Mr. Allan Sankey says:—"We are doing all we can for him, but his recovery is much slower than we had hoped for. Still, physically, he is gradually growing a little stronger, but as far as his sight is concerned, he is now not only totally blind in both eyes, but I fear permanently so. The oculists and specialists who are attending him give us now little, if any, hope of his ever being able to see again. As one of the physicians called in for consultation expressed it, 'We can do nothing. His sight is in God's keeping. To help or to restore is only for the great Power that is above us.' Father feels his loss terribly, but is gradually becoming resigned. His faith all through his sufferings has been sublime, and he believes that, as the Lord has seen fit to use him all his life in doing His service, if He now has a still greater lesson to impart, the teaching of which necessitates his suffering this terrible affliction, then the Lord's will be done. As he says, 'The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.'

"We have received letters of sympathy with him from all parts of the world, even from Australia. He knows all his many friends are praying for his recovery, and sympathizing with him in his suffering and affliction; and he wishes me to ask you to thank them for him, through the columns of your paper, as he is unable to thank them all personally, as he would like to do.

"I myself wish to thank you for your expressions of sympathy for him and for us all. It has been hard on us, particularly so on my mother. The sorrow of it all is terrible. Still, God grant he may yet be spared to us for many years to come, and even if it is His will that he should spend them in darkness, he is still everything to us. His affliction only makes him the more beloved. . .—Most sincerely yours,

I. Allan Sankey."

A Keynote for Evangelism.

By Rev. W. G. ANDERSON.

THERE is at the present time a widespread feeling that we are on the eve of another great revival. What is to be its keynote? What particular and distinctive truth needs to be brought into greatest prominence to-day by the evangelists who stand up to proclaim the Gospel of Christ?

To the vast majority of those whom we seek to reach, the older presentations of the Gospel no longer appeal. The scholasticism of the Middle Ages, which moulded the form of our Puritan theology, has passed away. The theological forms in which those who are familiar with them find the living truth which nourishes their souls, are absolutely unintelligible to the masses whom we seek to win. The announcement of an awful judgment, which struck terror into the sinner's heart a century ago, is now listened to with indifference or incredulity. And even the wooing note of the past thirty years is fast losing its power. Men no longer heed the invitation to "come to Jesus." They have become so familiar with it that, like an alarum clock to which a deaf ear is repeatedly turned, it ceases to arouse them.

To meet the changed conditions may we not give prominence to a conception of God and a note of appeal which hitherto have been but little emphasized. God has been proclaimed successively as Justifier, Judge, and Benefactor. We need now to lay special stress upon the truth that God is King; that the right to rule over our lives belongs to Him alone; that to do His will is the one purpose for which we have been created. We have been apt to dwell too exclusively upon what man may expect from God in response to faith; we need now to emphasize what God expects from man. The predominant truth in present-day Evangelism must be "the sovereign rights of God over men"; the keynote of its appeal, "Surrender."

Consider the adaptability of this message to the intellectual, social, and religious conditions of the age.

I. The Intellectual Conditions.—We may sum up present-day thought as practical, critical, and superficial. (a) Modern thought is intensely practical. Men are inclined to be very impatient of preaching which they suppose to be remote from daily life. This call to surrender to God's claims, by presenting the Gospel in its ethical, rather than in its doctrinal bearings, is manifestly adapted to meet the present need in this respect. (b) Modern thought is critical. Men are unwilling to accept as final the voice of authority, however venerable. That a truth is found in the orthodox creed, is no longer considered sufficient reason why they should receive it. They do not even admit the authority of the Bible itself. One authority alone remains unchallenged, and that is, Conscience. The appeal to surrender to God, depending primarily upon Conscience for its authority, is unaffected by the criticism which seems to shake all its other supports. Try this method of dealing with inquirers. Do not talk to them about believing facts, but seek to bring them to this heart-surrender to God, in virtue of His claim over them. If the surrender is made, they very soon will believe with all their heart, and will have the witness of God's Spirit that they are born of God. Follow our Lord's example, and reply to those who are in doubt about the authority of our teaching: "If any man willeth to do His will, he shall know of the teaching whether it be of God, or whether we speak from ourselves." (c) Modern thought is superficial. There is a strong aversion in the present day to great literature, or to any books requiring concentrated thought. The little reading that is done is mostly very desultory and of the lightest description. People gather their notions of theology from the religious weeklies, popular novels, and penny stories. The Bible is practically an unknown book, and we are constantly in danger of over-estimating the amount of knowledge on which we may reckon. Our aim, therefore, must be great simplicity. We must go back to that most elemental of all truths—the right of the Creator to rule His creatures; a truth which does not depend for its acceptance upon any acquired knowledge, but which commends itself to cultured and ignorant alike.

II. The Social Conditions of our Time.—Think of the indifference to religion, the disregard of the Sabbath, the worship of mammon, the pandering to appetite, the craving for excitement, the devotion to pleasure—all these may be traced to the fact that the majority of men ignore the sovereign claims of God. The call to surrender to these claims is the primary message needed to-day.

Think again of the discord that exists between classes, and parties, and individuals. The cause of it all is that men are not seeking to do the will of God, but only to further their own party or personal interests.

The duty of the Christian preacher at the present day is to trace all these evils to their root, and to call upon men to acknowledge God's sovereignty, and to yield themselves up to do His will.

III. The Religious Conditions of the Present Day.—Think of the ritualism which is spreading so rapidly all over the land. How are we to counteract it? Not by heated controversy and violent invective, but by lifting up our voices in the proclamation of positive truth, and saying after the manner of Paul, "Ritualism is nothing, and anti-ritualism is nothing, but obedience to the commands of God."

Think again of the multitudes of unconverted and unspiritual people who are regular attendants upon our ministry. They listen to beautiful words on religion, and count the pleasing impression these make as religious feeling. We are to them "as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice and can play well upon an instrument, for they hear our words but do them not."

Others substitute orthodoxy for real heart-submission to God. It is of no use preaching to them about the love of God, and the finished work of Christ, and the simplicity of faith. They will agree with all you say, and assure you that they believe in that love, and are resting upon that finished work; while their lives are full of worldliness, and pride, and jealousy, and selfishness, and all manner of things directly opposed to the will of God; and they are content to have it so.

We must emphasize the truth that obedience is the very essence of true religion. Dr. Andrew Murray has said: "True conversion is nothing but a surrender to live only to do the will of God." That is the truth to which special prominence should be given in present-day Evangelism. It is after all but a reverting to that proclamation of "the Gospel of the Kingdom," which occupied such a prominent place in the preaching of our Lord and His Apostles. The Lord Himself said, "The law and the prophets were until John; from that time the Gospel of the Kingdom of God is preached;" and again, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations."

The great facts of sin and salvation must be expounded in relation to this sublime theme. The root of all sin is self-will. The purpose which God has in view in all His dealings with our race is to overcome this self-will, and make man wholly responsive to the Divine will. The revelation of God's love, the atoning sacrifice and resurrection of Christ, and the gift of the Divine Spirit, are all directed to this one end—"That God may be all in all."

Are we not apt to dwell too exclusively upon those truths in which man's need and happiness come chiefly into view, and to base our appeals too much upon selfish considerations? In the proclamation of "the Gospel of the Kingdom of God," the Divine element prevails, and the whole scope of truth is embraced. While it is the most simple presentation of the Gospel, it is yet the most profound.

Let us make "Absolute Surrender" the key-note for present-day Evangelism. First yielding ourselves unreservedly to God, let us go forth to proclaim this message in the power of the Holy Ghost, ceasing to think of winning honour for ourselves, and caring for nothing but the extension of God's Kingdom and the final victory of His love; and we shall find that he is willing to do as much for us as He did for our fathers in the brightest periods of the history of the Church.

Not One Forgotten.

"Not one of them is forgotten before God." "For He is kind." (Luke xii. 6; vi. 35.)

i.

Our God takes thought for the little things of creation,
He considers each one;
World upon world, in their infinite complex relation,
Sun upon sun.
Yes, but each blade of grass, and each flower the field adorning,
Shine with the light of His love in the dew of the morning.

ii.

Our God takes care of the humble, valueless sparrow,
Planned the marvels of sight
In insects' vision (widen the outlook too often narrow),
Colour and light.
Myriad vibrations a second! Be a childlike spectator,
Consider the works of the hands of the mighty Creator.

iii.

"Our Lord takes time to be kind;" from the heights of His glory
He who numbers each star,
Calling them all by their names—oh, wonderful story—
Stoops from afar
To heal the broken in heart, and their woundings to bind,
For the God who is Infinite, yet takes time to be kind.

iv.

He who knoweth our frame, and counteth the hairs of our head—
So high and so holy—
Noteth the cup of cold water, the tears that are shed,
For He is lowly.
Poor and needy we are, but the King of kings, our Defender,
Thinketh upon us, each one, with a love everlasting and tender.

Tea-Shop and Gin-Shop.—Anything that is calculated to reduce the dread influence of the public-house is to be welcomed, and it is, therefore, pleasant to learn that one of the large companies owning a large number of the excellent places of refreshment in London where only non-intoxicating drinks, chiefly tea and coffee, are provided, has now under consideration the question of keeping those establishments open beyond the comparatively early hour in the evening at which they now are closed. If arrangements were made, and doubtless they would be, to safeguard the attendants against undue hours of work, the change would be an altogether desirable one. We have reached that unhappy period when, as Lord Rosebery once foresaw: "If the State does not control the liquor traffic, the liquor traffic will control the State"; and every movement bearing in any way against the drink curse should, therefore, receive the support of Christian men and women.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

DR. TORREY'S PERSONAL IMPRESSIONS AND MESSAGES.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

ON Friday last, Dr. R. A. Torrey and Mr. Charles M. Alexander arrived in London, leaving the following day for a visit to the United States, before undertaking further missions in this country. After their campaign of nearly five months in England, Scotland, and Ireland, a member of The Christian staff found the two evangelists in excellent health and spirits, praising God out of a full heart for the manner in which His mighty arm had been laid bare in the saving of souls.

Replying to an inquiry about the development of the work, Dr. Torrey described the tide of interest and blessing as having risen steadily throughout the missions at Mildmay, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Belfast. This, he felt sure, was due to an increasing spirit of prayer and expectation. Much might also be traced to the fact that the influence of such an effort is cumulative, each fresh centre profiting by the growing interest throughout the country, and especially in the places which went before.

THE BEST MEETINGS SINCE MELBOURNE.

On the subject of preparation there was, Dr. Torrey declared, very little to be said. The matter resolves itself almost entirely into one of prayer; and as the missions already held were arranged almost simultaneously the last place visited had the longest time for special waiting upon God. There had been more prayer at Belfast than in any other case; and, as a consequence, the outcome more nearly resembled the great time of revival at Melbourne than anything they had seen in the interval. Dr. Torrey was anxious, however, to have it understood that this implied no reflection on any of the other cities, being simply a result of the longer time available before the meetings commenced.

Rev. John W. Ballard, who closely followed the 1859 revival and every subsequent time of special blessing in the north of Ireland, testified on Thursday that never in his life had he seen a meeting like that of the previous evening. On Monday evening, in one gathering, 280 persons (only a few of whom were youths), were not merely dealt with, but publicly professed their acceptance of Christ. On Tuesday 387 more followed their example, and Wednesday saw nearly five hundred names added to the professing followers of the Reedemer.

The hearty co-operation of ministers of all denominations, which has been such a source of strength throughout the campaign, was specially marked at Belfast. In consequence of the large amount of help available, open-air work was carried on to an extent impossible before. Workmen were followed to the shipyards and other places of employment, and women to the linen factories. At one open-air meeting held as an overflow from St. George's Market twenty-nine women were converted, and in a single factory twenty-seven have taken a stand for Christ as the result of open-air work in the neighbourhood.

MEN AND WOMEN IN DEAD EARNEST.

When the closing evening came a procession of 200 men, headed by a Salvation Army band, marched over from their work at the shipyards, without having had their tea, and remained till nine or ten o'clock. A corresponding body of women came in from a great factory, with their shawls over their heads, many of them meeting the Lord there and then. All through the audience of 7,000 people who gathered in the great market, there were men and women not only ready but anxious to be dealt with about their souls.

About 10,000 converts' cards have been registered since the meetings began in January; and in every place the work has gone steadily forward after the evangelists left. In addition to these a large number of people have been converted entirely unknown to the leaders of the missions, including not a few who were never able to go to the meetings. As very much of the future development and usefuluess of the young believers depends on their guidance and training in the near future, Dr. Torrey spoke with deep satisfaction of the founding of a special fellowship meeting at each centre.

HOW TO OBTAIN REVIVAL.

As a result of his experience and close observation, Dr. Torrey feels that one of the greatest needs everywhere is for a body of Christian men and women, trained to do definite personal work. There is every indication of ripeness for a general revival of religion throughout the country. The evangelists have been flooded with invitations, only a comparatively small number of which they can by any possibility accept. But they are the less concerned on this particular point because they recognise as fully as any that the having of a time of revival in any district in no sense depends on such a visit.

A Christian community anywhere can, as they wish to remind many besides their correspondents, have a revival in their midst if they will (1) pray for it, (2) expect it, and (3) begin doing personal work. If those who really believe in God, and the Bible, and the power of the Gospel and of prayer will meet together in little groups, prepared to "pray through" and to go forth in the strength of God, an awakening is bound to follow. There has been no real sweeping work until the Christians in the community went to work leading individuals to Christ. The way to do this can be learned best by setting about it; and those who hear the call should begin in their own family circles, and with their own servants.

CHILDREN UNEXPECTEDLY READY.

The preparedness of large numbers of children for the offer of salvation has been a surprise even to those who had laboured among them for years. Sunday-school work has prepared the way for this, but Dr. Torrey feels strongly that much more might have been accomplished in the classes. The trouble is that teachers too seldom aim directly at the point of winning the children to Christ. After some of the Sabbath morning gatherings of workers, men and women have gone forth to their classes and led as many as four young people to Christ in one day, though they had never known before the joy of winning a soul to the Lord. The knowledge of the Word of God was already there, but the need for definite decision had not been pressed in the same way before. In one class twenty-three conversions had taken place.

ADVICE FOR THE COMING MONTHS.

Looking forward to work in Great Britain next autumn and winter, Dr. Torrey summed up his advice to those in charge of the arrangements—after the prime necessity of continual prayer—by urging the importance (2) of the organization and training of a band of workers. It would be well if every minister could have a class for the equipment of a selected company of his own membership. (3) All homes should be visited, the people being not only invited to the meetings, but spoken to about their spiritual condition. (4) Whenever possible—and it is practically everywhere—an open-air campaign should be conducted throughout the summer.

TO THE YOUNG CONVERTS.

To the young converts, who are very dear to his heart, Dr. Torrey's leave-taking message is, (1) keep right with God, (2) keep looking at Jesus, (3) keep confessing Christ, (4) keep studying your Bible, (5) keep praying, (6) keep working day and night to lead others to Christ. There is a great need for missionaries throughout the world, and all converts should offer themselves to the Lord Jesus Christ to be used in the foreign mission field, if He desires them. He will choose only a few; but all ought to offer themselves.

A MESSAGE TO ALL HELPERS.

In conclusion, Dr. Torrey said, "I wish before leaving these shores to say that the way in which workers have rallied round us in every city, including all classes of men and women, from the leaders in ecclesiastical affairs and in the social world to plain working men and women, has filled our hearts with joy and gratitude. We carry away with us the memory of very many whom we have learned to love. Pray for us. We intend to keep praying for you every day."

Many will learn with interest that a great reception meeting to Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander is being arranged in the great Auditorium at Chicago for June 23, while the following week will be entirely devoted to a conference of Christian workers. The Northfield conferences and other engagements will occupy much of their time and attention until they leave America again in the middle of August, to begin at Liverpool on September 1.

Future Arrangements:

LETTER FROM MR. SCOTT.

Under the hospitable roof of our mutual friend, Mr. James Robertson, of 39, Gordon Square, I had the pleasure, on Saturday morning last, of breakfasting with Dr. and Mrs. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, on the eve of their starting for home, when I had the opportunity of learning Dr. Torrey's mind as to plans for 1904.

Before coming to London he and Mr. Alexander are desirous of visiting a number of the provincial cities in England, where committees can be formed ready to follow in the footsteps of Liverpool and Manchester, from both of which hearty and united requisitions have been received from the Evangelical ministers, both of the Church of England and the Free Churches.

The Liverpool committee, being unable to find a hall of sufficient size, has resolved upon erecting a special building, as on the occasion of Mr. Moody's visit. The Manchester friends have been able to secure a hall capable of seating an audience of from 10,000 to 12,000, so that in these two instances the conditions required by Dr. Torrey and his colleague are exactly met.

Newcastle, Birmingham, Bristol, Hull, Bradford, and about sixty other cities and towns have expressed an earnest desire to secure a visit from the evangelists; and Dr. Torrey has authorised us to make definite engagements for such cities as see their way to fulfil the conditions. The claims of London they have promised to consider later on.

Robert Scott.

The meeting at eight o'clock on Lord's Day morning quite filled Grosvenor Hall; and to accommodate the increasing crowds the use was obtained of St. George's Market, for the remaining services. A meeting had been announced for 3.30 p.m., but by 2.30 the gates had to be closed. Dr. Torrey preached on Isa. xxviii. 17. Thousands who had been shut out formed open-air meetings, which were addressed by Pastors H. D. Brown (Dublin), Gunn, Hodge, Jardine, with Col. Hoggard and other Salvationists.

The Market was again crowded by 6.30 p.m., an hour and a half before the time of service. Mr. Alexander stated that he and Dr. Torrey had seen no such gatherings since they had left Melbourne. When the great congregation passed out, another equally large entered, to which Dr. Torrey gave a brief Gospel address, after which an exceptionally large number remained to seek a present salvation. It is estimated that Dr. Torrey addressed about 23,000 during the day, while many thousands more were spoken to in the open air.

SUNDAY, June 7. Psalm xx.

A Battle Song.

THIS Psalm surely dates from the reign of David, when the heart of the nation was knit to him as the heart of one man, and "whatever the king did pleased all the people."

1-5. The nation or army pours out its united prayer for victory. One name only—that of the God of Jacob—is mentioned as the talisman of strength. All real help must come from His throne and abiding place. For this, sacrifices are offered by the king, and intercessions by the people. Their oneness of desire culminates in the fifth verse, and is an emblem of the union between our Lord in the glory and ourselves His Church on earth. His victories are our victories; with His prayers, ours are blended; we wave our standards on the battlefield against Amalek, while He pleads for us on the mountain height.

6. Here, a single voice expresses confidence that these prayers and intercessions have been answered. Is it not the voice of the king? In faith he takes the victory, though as yet no blow has been struck.

7-9. This is the closing chorus of many voices, taking up the assurance of the single speaker. The battlefield is covered with horses and chariots, terrible enough to the Hebrews, to whom they were forbidden; but from these they look up to Him who rideth on the heavens to their help. The eighth verse, in a few terse words, tells how, even though faith is sure of victory, she raises her voice in one assured petition—"Save, Jehovah!" But in this the earthly king is overshadowed by the King of all kings—the enthroned Christ.

MONDAY, June 8. Psalm xxi.

An Ode of Exuberant Thanksgiving.

This Psalm belongs to the former one. There the people had prayed for their king, here they give thanks that their prayer was answered. There they asked that his desires be fulfilled, here they bless Jehovah, who has fulfilled them.

1-7. Praise. What a galaxy of gifts had been vouchsafed to the king in answer to the prayer of his people. Strength and salvation, the desire of his heart and the request of his lips, glory and joy, unmovableness through the loving-kindness of Jehovah. It was as though God had come to meet him, His hands full of blessing, as Melchizedek met Abraham with bread and wine and benediction (3).

This combination of gifts and graces is too glowing to be realized in any mortal. They are only true in their full extent of Him, who is crowned with gold, because once crowned with thorns; who lives for ever in the power of an indissoluble life; who is the effulgence of His Father's glory, and the express image of His Person. The Christ-ideal can alone fulfil and satisfy these rapturous ascriptions. And yet there is a sense in which they are fulfilled in each saint, who after a life of struggle and conflict enters into the joy of the Lord.

8-12. Prophecy. The people confidently predict complete victory. What a blessed certainty is ours, that our King shall ultimately conquer.

TUESDAY, June 9. Psalm xxii.

The Psalm of the Cross.

Our Lord quoted the first verse on the cross. Evidently, throughout his unknown sufferings there, He was following its successive phases of emotion and heart-break. The physical effects of crucifixion are described in vv. 14, 15; and the Lord's thirst is said by the Evangelist to have been a fulfilment of Scripture, with an evident reference to v. 15. Is not this one of those passages, specially referred to by the Apostle Peter, who tells us that the sacred writers sought to understand what "the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when He testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow"?

The Psalm obviously divides itself into two parts (1-21 and 22-31). "Thou answerest not" is the keynote of the former; "Thou hast answered me," of the latter. The one paints the sufferings, the other the glory that should follow. Both point to Jesus; the former by the desolation which it breathes; the latter by the world-wide consequences of those solitary sufferings which it anticipates.

What desolation is here! What hidings of the face of God! What a descent into the most abject humiliation! "A worm and no man!" Note how quick and hurting are the taunts and gibes which fall on His soul! Mark that sneer, "He rolled Himself on God," in allusion to the cry, "Father, into Thy hands I commit my spirit!" (v. 8, marg., Matt. xxvii. 43). Remember that attempt to cast a slur on God's character or His, as though the Father either did not delight in Him, or could not deliver, whereas the delight was the reason that deliverance tarried! O my soul, ponder the depths to which thy immortal Lover stooped for thee. Love Him for His love. Be not surprised if thou art called to follow His steps. This is the way to the glory. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die. . ."

But the singer sings himself into the assurance of victory. Sighs are replaced by songs. The shadow of death is turned into the morning. The Cross and Passion are succeeded by the joyous Resurrection and Ascension.

WEDNESDAY, June 10. Psalm xxiii.

The Song of the Satisfied Soul.

The keynote of this Psalm is satisfaction, whether of the flock, lying down in green pastures, or of the warrior sitting at the table which Divine bounty has spread. There are no fears or complaints. The soul is so confident that God will do His best, and that all He sends must be good, that it desires nothing in addition to His loving companionship and care.

1-4. The Shepherd and His Lamb. The first of these vivid, clear-cut, pictures is of the valley, where the brook softly murmurs amid the luxuriant herbage, and the cool shadows lie, while all the landscape is scorched by the burning heat. Thither the shepherd leads, not drives, his flock, and there he makes them to lie down. So God delights to give us rest, in outward circumstances and inward peace, if only we will trust and follow Him. There are moments of crisis and agony in all lives, but they are only moments; for the most part, the months and years are valleys of rest.

The soul, however, is fitted by repose for effort. The valley must be left for the paths of the mountain-side. There are ascents to be made, duties to be done, errands to be performed. The stones may lie thick and jagged, hurting the feet; but it is the right way, and the Shepherd goes first. Presently, the road dips down into the sunless gorge, where the rocks meet overhead, and the trees cast deep shadows. The wild beasts make their lairs in such places. But the soul that trusts God, only draws nearer to Him. It no longer speaks of God as He, but to Him as Thou; and fears not.

5, 6. Life is not only a journey; it is a fight. Yet even amid the strain of the battle it is possible to have seasons of refreshment, of which the bitterest foe is not able to deprive us. Yea, we may attain even to festal joy, to wit, "the anointed head." As we look back from life's end we shall see, what now we fail to perceive, that goodness and mercy have followed us all our days—then, HOME!

THURSDAY, June 11. Psalm xxiv.

A Processional Hymn.

This Psalm has been referred to the occasion mentioned in 2 Sam. vi.; and we need not go further for a sufficient explanation of its inception (1-2). As the procession climbs the ascent to the gates of the ancient fortress, which David had lately won from the Jebusites, the glorious character of Jehovah is joyously celebrated.

3. A solo voice asks whether they who ascend the steep have any right there. May they hope to stand in the holy place of Him who founded the earth upon the seas, and fills it with His Presence? It is a question for me and thee. May we, here in spirit, and yonder in person, abide in God's secret place?

4-6. The one requisite is a fourfold purity—of hand and heart, of desire and speech. You may know that such are seeking the face of God, and theirs is the blessedness of the beatitude spoken regarding those who hunger and thirst for righteousness—"they shall be filled" (5). As Jacob could say, "I have seen the face of God," so shall they. This purity is the gift of the Christ-nature.

7-10. The procession stands before the portals of the grey fortress, which seem too low-browed to admit the ark borne aloft on the shoulders of the priests. They are therefore bidden to lift up their archways. The old gates had not previously known Jehovah; they had witnessed only heathen processions; and their warders ask who this mighty king may be. The reply peals forth, "Jehovah of hosts," and this, like a trail of gunpowder, bursts the gates, and admits the glorious train. What words could better describe the scene at the gates of heaven, when, fresh from the victories of the cross and the grave, our blessed Lord swept up to heaven, and courier-angels summoned its ancient doors to admit Him? "Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ!"

FRIDAY, June 12. Psalm xxv.

The Psalm of the Uplifted Soul.

This is an acrostic Psalm. It is difficult, therefore, to denote the sequence or advance of the thought. "It is a loosely-twined wreath, rather than a column, with base, shaft, and capital."

1-7. Prayer. For protection from enemies, lest they exult (2, 3); for guidance in the right paths, lest the track be missed (4, 5); for forgiveness, lest the soul be overtaken and overwhelmed by a just retribution (6, &c.).

8-14. Meditation. The Psalmist sets forth the beauty of the Divine character and the blessedness of those who fear Him. What a conception has been arrived at by years of deep meditation that the very goodness of God is a reason for believing that He will teach sinners in His ways! It has been remarked that sinners are led in the way, whilst the meek are taught His way; and these will find that all His paths are mercy and truth.

15-22. Pleadings for deliverance from the power of the enemy. Turn Thee . . . Be gracious . . . Bring me out . . . Look on my affliction . . . Look on my enemies . . . Keep my soul! As the Psalm began, it closes—Let me not be put to shame (2, 20). "O Lord, in Thee have I trusted, let me never be confounded!"

SATURDAY, June 13. Psalm xxvi.

The Challenge of the Sincere Heart.

Notice the similarity of verses 1 and 11. We are reminded of the Apostle Paul, who said, "I know nothing against myself," and again, "I do always exercise myself to have a conscience void of offence towards God and men." We may be very conscious of being sinful men, who need the hourly cleansing of the precious blood; we may realise that when we have attained our highest ideal, we are yet infinitely below God's holy standard; but notwithstanding, when confronted by the insinuations and accusations of our foes, we may dare to say, "These hands are clean," and to appeal for the Divine vindication.

The holy soul walks with its eyes fixed on God's lovingkindness; how then can it take pleasure in associating with men of vanity? The more we are out of sympathy with this vain and ungodly world, the more we thirst for fellowship with the Most High.

Notice especially verses 6, 7. Each day let us wash our hands in innocency, and let us ask our Master to wash our feet. Let us approach the altar of consecration, and with songs present ourselves to God as living sacrifices. Let us cause the voice of God's praise to be heard! Let us so live that God may speak of us, as of Job, when He said that there was none like him on the earth, seeing that he feared God, and eschewed evil.

Other Lands.

Among Jews in Russia.—3.

THE KISCHINEFF MASSACRE.

AFTER my last communication from Odessa, you will look doubtless to hear something of the state of things in Kischineff. During my short stay there I gathered a quantity of material which I have not been able as yet to handle; but I will here set down a few impressions of the recent terrible outbreak against the Jews.

Some 2,000 houses (Jewish only) were rifled during these two tragic days and nights, and their contents piled up in the streets. Most of these are still tenantless. The streets, however, have been cleared, and in some cases the Jews, with their wonderful perseverance, are putting things in repair to commence again the battle of life.

The sufferers were mostly poor Jews. Ten thousand at least were in a state of chronic semi-starvation before the outbreak; that number is now more than doubled, but some of the more well-to-do suffered as well. I possess a photograph of the wanton havoc made in the shop of a jeweller: what was not stolen was bent, disfigured, and destroyed. In another house the plunderers worked for twelve hours on a gigantic safe until its contents, of 40.000 roubles value, fell into their hands.

BUTCHERS—AND WORSE.

But the pillage of the poor, inhuman as it was, is not to be compared with the mob's dread work of brutal attack, torture, and massacre. The accounts to which I have listened, from credible witnesses, suggest that Chinese Boxers and Turkish soldiers in their worst moments have been mild in comparison with the savage hate of the Kischineff murderers.

From the Jewish Hospital forty-four corpses have already been buried, and this is not the full total of the slain. Of those who escaped with their lives, most are now recovering, or have recovered, and been discharged from the hospital; but about twenty-five still remain. As the head surgeon, a quiet, resourceful young doctor, led me through its wards, he asked me to remember that what I saw could convey no idea of those terrible days when the dead, the dying, and the mangled were crowded within its walls. Several of whose lives he despaired are making good recoveries. Such is the case with a young girl, all but done to death; "but," said the physician, drawing me aside, "I have not yet dared to tell her that her father was killed."

Two men still lie in hospital with their eyes gouged out; women had nails driven up their nostrils and into their heads. The crowd entered the abode of a poor aged Jewess, her only fortune a cow. They took the cow, broke up her little furniture. "All I have, is gone," she said; "do what you please with me." A few blows, and she fell dead. As the mob broke into the synagogue, destroyed all within it, tore up, spat upon, and defiled the scrolls of the sacred law, the beadle cried, "Rather take my life—but spare that." He was

MURDERED IN THE SANCTUARY.

I could go on with the sad story. In the city where Rabinowitz and Faltin have borne their testimony for Christ, that blessed Name now awakens nought but bitterness among the Jews. As if to identify their butchery with their creed, the crowd have daubed or chalked rude crosses on the outside of many Jewish dwellings. The police and military, with a few exceptions, looked unabashed upon the work of pillage and blood. Eight hundred arrests, it is true, followed; but many of the prisoners are already free, and others let off with light sentences of one or two months. Recovery of stolen property or compensation is only a dream.

For a precedent of violence on such a scale one must go back to the Middle Ages. Manifestoes and official rescripts read well, but to the oppressed race they bring no assurance of protection. On Monday last the synagogues in Odessa were filled with weeping Jews of all classes. "She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks; among all her lovers, she hath none to comfort her; all her friends have dealt treacherously with her, they are become her enemies."

A VICTIM'S LETTER.

I translate extracts from a letter confided to me by a Jewish gentleman of standing in Odessa. It is from one of the Jewish sufferers at Kischineff, and was written on the 23rd of April (New Style)—three days after the cessation of the massacre. No statistics were then known of the number of sufferers, and the correspondent's estimates are under the mark.

A Street Scene in Kischineff.—Pianos lie in pieces, as thrown from windows. Some streets were rendered impassable through accumulations of broken furniture.

"In the midst of sobs and falling tears I write you these lines. My heart is wrung at the sight of this terrible destruction and riot, of which the Jews have been the victims during a continuous forty-eight hours. Till now I could not collect my thoughts sufficiently to put pen to paper, to describe the horrors of the sights we have witnessed for two days. Men, women, and children have been robbed and murdered. Three-quarters of the Jewish houses and shops have been plundered, women dishonoured, children thrown to the pavement from upper storeys. In the houses everything has been destroyed—nothing left undamaged. All these cruelties have taken place under the eyes of the police, none of whom lifted a finger to interfere. Only on the third day did the Governor ride out to inspect the scene. The number of dead is fifty, severely injured 100, and less severely 200 people, all without exception being Jews. The losses amount to several millions of roubles.

HOMELESS FAMILIES.

"It is impossible to describe the present need. Several thousand families are roofless, and lie under the open sky without food or covering. Have pity on us, and try to do something. Speak to the Odessa brethren, that they may not leave us in our need. Many widows and children have nowhere to go. I write disconnectedly, for I have not slept for five days. We fear a renewal of the attack, as the plunderers threaten us with worse still. The police are still idle. Till now I have escaped, but almost everything around me is destroyed. I have been saved by miracle. Help us, dear brethren."

Among the results of the outbreak I would specify two:—(1) A vague dread of further outbreaks, and a complete lack of confidence in the ruling authorities, who are believed, despite all official excuses and expressions of regret, to have encouraged popular prejudice against the Jews. (2) An awful set-back to the work of Christian testimony to Israel. Of this, perhaps, I have had better opportunities than others to witness in connection with the labours of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews and others in Russia.

THE WORK OF RELIEF.

For the moment, testimony for Christ by word is almost impossible—the excitement is so great. It is, however, eminently the moment for Christians to testify by practical sympathy. The Jews have done, and will do, much; but Christians worthy of the name should have some share in the work of relief.

If The Christian will receive offerings for this, as for the many other needs, philanthropic and missionary, to which it generously lends its aid, it will not be the loser in blessing. I am willing to see that money is administered by trustworthy and responsible hands. In this case, they must be Jewish. I know no better in Kischineff.

Mission Work in Berlin.

PASTOR C. H. SCHAARSCHMIDT, of Berlin, is at present in this country, seeking to stir up interest in the work of God committed to his hands. He greatly feels the need of the sympathy and help of English Christians, being at present over-burdened with financial cares and responsibilities in connection with his enterprise. A year ago he felt led to retire from the ordinary work of the ministry, in order to devote himself to work among the poor, which he had been carrying on with blessing.

He has been remarkably successful in reaching the unemployed men of Berlin, a class difficult to approach, and largely under the sway of Socialists. He has visited the "warming halls" where they congregate—places provided for their shelter during the winter; and has even been allowed, by favour of the authorities, to hold services in these halls, at which many hundreds of destitute working-men have heard the simple Gospel from his lips.

At these "warming halls" he has given suppers to the needy, also held Gospel services, at which he had the joy of seeing much fruit. Various other operations, of a distinctly spiritual character, as well as some having their social side, are in full swing, and altogether the outlook for a great work is most helpful and cheering, but for financial need. Mr. Frank Cockrem, 4, Foxbourne Road, Upper Tooting, S.W., who has seen the work, testifies to its great excellence.

Pastor Schaarschmidt will welcome invitations to address meetings with a view to enlisting still further sympathy. His daughter interprets his addresses.

The Industrial and Evangelistic Mission.

THE lack in India of honest toil among native Christians is the cause of much spiritual coldness in the Indian churches. The missionary society is the father and mother (ma bap) of all the converts, and to it they look for all their needs; but there is an increasing number of native Christians who are asking that something be done to instruct the converts to earn an honest living, thereby laying the foundation of future self-support.

There are also hundreds of secret disciples in India who would come out openly for Christ, but starvation stares them in the face. Let us not condemn them too quickly, for they are only babes yet in things spiritual. What they need is work. A short time before we left India, a young man of good caste and a good workman at his trade besought us day and night for work, but we were unable to help him. He was earning a good salary. He and his wife were ready to be baptized, but it meant being cast forth from his father's house and his employment cut off.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR SELF SUPPORT.

The opportunities in India for self-support are tremendous. Most missionary societies feel that industrial work is the thing, and how to go about it is the great question. The Basel Mission and the Friends' Mission have worked on these lines with great success, but the majority of societies have been too timid to venture out. It is always the cry of "No funds for new enterprises!" and it always will be the cry unless industrial work is taken up in earnest. It means in the beginning sacrifice and hardship, but not more perhaps than business men of the world are willing to undergo for their own personal gain.

We know many Europeans who have gone to India with a little capital, and in a short time have been able to show thriving businesses. Why cannot this be done in missions? It can be, but it must be on business principles. There must be master-workmen in each department—men who know every detail of their own special lines, and who will teach Christian living to the converts as they labour with them six days of the week, and worship with them on the seventh.

Then, too, we have had a very distinct call to the rescue of orphans and widows, a special work in which we have been engaged the last seven years. There are so few who see their way clear or have a special call to help the widows of India. It is not necessary to urge their needs here; their sad condition is known generally. To train these orphans and widows and other Christians for future usefulness we need the industrial work.

As many know, our labours during the past ten years have been in Aligarh. Our new centre is Pilibhit, about one hundred and forty miles east of Aligarh. We chose this region because of the forests with their fine supply of wood for cabinet-making, and other materials, as hides, tan-bark, &c., for the leather department; also for the reason that there are no European missionaries in these regions.

OFFICIAL ENCOURAGEMENT.

Government officials and Europeans generally in India are much interested in industrial missions, and through the Collector, the Commissioner, and the Lieutenant Governor, we have secured, on very reasonable terms, a fine site of twenty-three acres. We have with us one hundred and fifty boys who elected to continue with us in industrial work. As soon as we can make provision for more we will take in boys and also girls and widows. These, together with the helpers—both European and native—require £50 a month. Then we need money for a portable engine, with saw and planing mills, without which we are hindered daily. This will cost, shipping included, about £400, but will be all that will ever be needed in the way of machinery from outside sources for this department. We need funds for buildings also. We hope to take back with us a master worker in leather.

EUROPEAN SUPE VISION.

Only Europeans can teach how to give to goods that finish which brings a ready market. Our printing press has made a simple beginning, and we need a manager for this also, as the department will train many boys and at the same time turn out thousands of tracts in the vernaculars for the evangelization of India's millions. We have been promised all the printing we can possibly do with a large staff.

For several years we have been strongly impressed that our Heavenly Father would have us take this step. While we look trustingly to Him, yet we feel that we should make known the interests of India's dear people. The beginning of a mission is a trying time. Our needs at present are urgent. We trust that this self-supporting work will be the means of bringing the Gospel to a large portion of India's people. We call it "The Industrial and Evangelistic Mission," the industrial part being simply a means to an end, namely, the evangelization of those who now sit in darkness.

A thorough organization is being effected, and in a short time a circular will be issued giving the names of committee, &c. We very much desire to have local hon. secretaries in many centres who will distribute collecting boxes or cards. We leave for the United States about June 13. Our address there for a few weeks will be East Northfield, Mass. The secretary in England is Miss Crane (Room 78), 30, Norfolk Street, London, W.C. Gifts sent to the office of The Christian will be acknowledged in these columns.

Rome and the Bible.

DEAR SIR,—Those who have been praying that light may come to the Roman Church will thank God for the extraordinary step in advance taken by the Vatican, in authorizing the publication of a new edition of the Gospels and Acts in Italian. Of the merits of that translation I am no judge; but I note that, in Acts ii., the passage which used to be translated "Do penance," is translated "Repent."

The preface is most remarkable. While defending the general position of the Church of Rome briefly, it does so without a trace of animosity to Protestants, whom it describes as "our separated brethren," and dilates for the greater part on the deep importance of the Word of God.

In "Things to be remembered in reading the Holy Gospel," it says:—

1. That the Gospel should be read as a Divine Book, with deepest reverence.

2. That the priests should, with suitable solemnity, distribute it.

3. Special indulgences are promised by Leo XIII. to its daily readers . . .

5. That it is most useful for each head of a family to read it to the family . . .

8. Prefaced by a short prayer for God's teaching, and succeeded by prayer that the teaching may come out in practice.

The notes I have just begun to read. Two are very striking. One on the "Kingdom of Heaven" says: "The Jews were looking for liberty and deliverance from sorrow; but the more spiritual understood it was a spiritual reign of righteousness and love, not occupying themselves with politics or human glory."

Another note, on Matt. v. 17, says: "The object of the rites and teaching of the Old Testament was righteousness and love, and that in this sense the Lord came not to destroy, but to fulfil, showing that moral virtues practised for the love of God are the substance of religion, and that all the rest has only a relative importance."

While admitting this is a meagre and imperfect commentary, that the tendency of the Notes and the authority of the commentator reveal an entire change of mind from that hitherto prevalent. It means that outward regulations are valueless unless the fruits of the Spirit are the result. This, indeed, cuts at the root of all purely formal ecclesiastical systems, and is a principle which, if acted on by all Protestant churches, would cause deep heart-searching, which would tend to the elimination of all mere "form of Godliness," and a deeper seeking for the "power thereof."

I am told 160,000 copies have already been sold. The principles enunciated even in the few sentences which I have quoted should lead to a deep revival of spiritual life far more magnificent than any mere outward reformation.

Commending the whole Roman Catholic Church to the prayers of God's people, that the 300 millions of its members may be led to know the glorious liberty of the children of God,—I am, yours for Christ's sake, Radstock.

P.S.—Since the above was written, I have been able to read all the notes, and am more than ever convinced of the momentous character of the change of attitude they indicate. While there is nothing said about confession or prayers to saints, and only a passing allusion to the sacraments and the Church, the Coming of the Lord is spoken of as being the parousia, which is, as far as I know, the first time His personal Second Coming has ever been recognized, even dimly, in the teaching of Rome. The Society of S. Jerome, which is for the diffusion of the Gospels, has its representatives among leading clergy in over a hundred towns in Italy.

If the reformation with us was the result of and diffusion of God's Word, why should we not expect a revival of spiritual life which is inconceivably better than any mere iconoclastic zeal.

I hear that the appearance of this edition from the Vatican press is causing a great sensation in Italy, and is warmly welcomed by Evangelical pastors at Rome.

France and England.

(From the Courrier du Dimanche, May 10.)

A FEW days ago, Edward VII. was the guest of France. This royal visit marks an epoch in our history; it accentuates a renewal of cordial relationships between two nations who were meant to be friendly, and who have no essentially discordant interest.

If anyone should rejoice in this, it should be we ourselves, the French Protestants; for the worst weapon forged by our ancient enemies (we mean the Roman Catholics) is about to be broken in their hands. The history of these last years tells plainly enough how they have used against us the fact of a strained situation between the two nations, and how they have tried to increase the strain for the sake of drawing better advantage from it in disloyal polemics. There was a time when one hardly dared confess to being a Protestant, such was the fear of being accused of English leanings, this being a supreme insult and the gravest of charges! It will no longer be thus. The English are becoming our friends, perhaps even our allies—who knows? The day may come when France will be as enthusiastic over an English alliance as she is over one with Russia.

This is the way in politics; to-day we kill each other, and to-morrow we shake hands. But at the centre of the perpetual ebb and flow of versatile public opinion, there is one thing that should remain immovable. Among real Christians the sense of universal brotherhood should have its place above all earthly frontiers, and, in spite of everything, as being members of one body and true disciples of Jesus Christ. In the presence of Roman Catholicism, knit into its formidable unity, it is increasingly necessary to affirm the great catholicity of Protestantism, and to put it into practice by an ever-growing cordiality in our mutual relations.

The Courrier du Dimanche had the honour of holding to this thought when there was some peril in so doing; there is no great merit in taking it up afresh now that circumstances are so turning in its favour. A. G.

The Bondage of Caste.*

I SPENT an afternoon not long ago with an intelligent old woman. Here she is; a fine sturdy old character. She was immensely interested with her photo, which I showed her, and she could not understand at all how, in the one moment when she stood against a wall, her face "had been caught on a piece of white paper." A little explanation opened the way for the greater thing I had come about. We were sitting on a mud verandah, opening on to a square courtyard; two women pounding rice, two more grinding it, another sweeping, a cow, some fowls, a great many children, and several babies, made it exceedingly difficult to concentrate one's attention on anything, and still more difficult to get the wandering brains of an old woman to concentrate on a subject in which she had no interest. She had been interested in the photograph, but that was different.

The conversation ended by her remarking that it was getting dark, ought I not to be going home? It was not getting dark yet, but it meant that she had had enough, so I salaamed and went, hoping for a better chance again. Next time we visited the Village of the Tamarind, she was nowhere to be seen; she had gone to her own village, she had only come here for the funeral. Would she return, we asked? Not probable, they said, "she had come and gone." "Come and gone." As they said it, one felt how true it was. Come, for that one short afternoon within our reach; gone, out of it now for ever.

In that same village there is one who more than any other drew one's heart out in affection and longing, but so far all in vain.

I first saw her in the evening as we were returning home. She was sitting on her verandah, giving orders to the servants as they stood in the courtyard below. Then she turned and saw us. We were standing in the street, looking through the open door. The old lady, in her white garments, with her white hair, sat among a group of women in vivid shades of red, behind her the dark wood of the pillar and door, and above the carved verandah roof. She beckoned to us. "Come in! come in!" she said.

We soon made friends with her. She was a Saivite, and we heard afterwards had received the Initiation; the golden symbol of her god had been branded upon her shoulder, and she was sworn to lifelong devotion to Siva; but she had found that he was vain, and she never worshipped him, she worshipped God alone; "and at night, when the household is sleeping, I go up alone to an upper room, and stretch out my hands to the God of all, and cry with a long, loud cry." Then she suddenly turned and faced me full. "Tell me, is that enough?" she said. "Is it all I must do for salvation? Say!"

I did not feel she was ready for a plunge into the deep sea of full knowledge yet, and I tried to persuade her to leave that question, telling her that if she believed what we told her of Jesus our Lord, she would soon know Him well enough to ask Him direct what she wanted to know, and He Himself would explain to her all that it meant to follow Him. But she was determined to hear it then, and, as she insisted, I read her a little of what He says about it Himself. She knew quite enough to understand and take in the force of the forceful words. She would not consent to be led gently on. "No, I must know it now," she said; and as verse by verse we read to her, her face settled sorrowfully. "So far must I follow, so far?" she said. "I cannot follow so far." . . .

It was a quiet afternoon. We were alone, only the little grandchildren were with her, innocent, fearless, merry little creatures, running to her with their wants, and pulling at her hands and dress as babies do at home. . . . We had a good long talk. "I want to be a Christian," she said, and for a moment I hoped great things, for she, as the mistress of the house, was almost free to do as she chose. I thought of her influence over her sons and their wives, and the little grandchildren; and I think my face showed the hope I had, for she said, looking very direct at me, "By a Christian I mean one who worships your God, and ceases to worship all other gods; for He alone is the Living God, the Pervader of all and Provider. This I fully believe and affirm, but I cannot break my caste." . . .

She looked at me very earnestly with her searching, beautiful, keen old eyes, and she went over ground she knew I knew. She reminded me what the requirements of her caste had always been, that they must be fulfilled by all who live in the house, and she told me in measured words and slow that I knew she could not live at home if she broke the laws of her caste. But why make so much of trifling things? For matter and spirit are distinct, and when the hands are raised in prayer, when the lamp is lighted and wreathed with flowers, the outward observer may mistake and think the action is pujah to Agni, but God who reads the heart understands, and judges the thought and not the act. "Yes, my hand may smear on Siva's ashes, while at the same moment my soul may commune with God the Eternal, Who only is God."

I turned to verse after verse to show her this sort of thing could never be, how it would mock at the love of Christ and nullify His sacrifice. I urged upon her that if she were true, and the central thought of her life were towards God, all the outworkings would correspond, creed fitting deed, and deed fitting creed, without the least shade of diversity. Faith and practice are not to be confused, each is separate from the other; the two may unite or the one may be divorced from the other without the integrity of either being affected: this is the unwritten Hindu code which she and hers had ever held; and now, after years of belief in it, to face round suddenly to its opposite—this was more than she could do. She held, as it were, the Truth in her hand, and turned it round and round and round, but she always ended where she began; she would not, could not, see it as Truth, or perhaps more truly, would not accept it. It meant too much.

There she sat, queen of her home. The sons were expected, and she had been making preparations for their coming. Her little grandchildren played about her, each one of them dear as the jewel of her eye. How could she leave it all, how could she leave them all—home, all that it stands for; children, all that they mean?

Then she looked at me again, and I shall never forget the look. It seemed as if she were looking me through and through, and forcing the answer to come. She spoke in little short sentences, instinct with intensity. "I cannot live here and break my caste. If I break it I must go. I cannot live here without keeping my customs. If I break them I must go. You know all this. I ask you, then, tell me yes or no. Can I live here and keep my caste, and at the same time follow your God? Tell me yes or no!"

I did not tell her—how could I? But she read the answer in my eyes, and she said as she had said before, "I cannot follow so far—so far, I cannot follow so far!"

"Reverence for opinions and practice held sacred by his ancestors is ingrained in every fibre of a Hindu's character, and is, so to speak, bred in the very bone of his physical and moral constitution." So writes Sir Monier Williams. It is absolutely true.

Oh, friends, is it easy work? My heart is sore as I write, with the soreness that filled it that day. I would have given anything to be able truthfully to say "yes" to her question. But "across the will of nature leads on the path of God" for them; and they have to follow so very far, so very, very far!

This wood-engraving is but an indifferent representation of the photogravure given in Miss Wilson-Carmichael's volume. The subject is a ceremonial mourner; but released from duty for the moment, she is quite able to enjoy herself. These people are "rooted" in the system in which they have been brought up, and but rarely evince any desire to "change their religion."

India's Poverty.

SIR,—In a recent issue you had a note on the poverty of India. Leaving elaborate statistics, two simple facts will, I believe, establish very clearly the poverty of India, and the ignorance prevailing among its population.

The first is, that the rates for lending money in the Bazaars of India have increased, in the last half century, from an average of 21 per cent. to 42 per cent. Of all criterions, this is the most certain, that "the real wealth" of the population, the enhanced value of the products of its land and labour, have steadily retrograded, whilst the population has been as steadily on the increase; the means of living at all must have decreased in as great, even if not greater, proportion.

The second fact is that the revenue obtained from the Post Office, &c., is less than twopence per head of the population in India, whilst in England it is about 8s. per head. Is not this fact quite enough to satisfy every one of the deplorable ignorance, misery, and poverty now prevailing in India, when all their social and commercial intercourse with the world is not worth twopence per head, and in spite of all "the incalculable benefits" conferred on her by the railway system in the past fifty years?

It must be borne in mind that during the same period the railways have cost the country upwards of 300,000,000 sterling one way and another, and are not a source of revenue at all to India; the deficit in their account in the Budget this year is over 100 lacs of rupees.—I am, yours &c.,

Jno. F. Fischer, General R.E.

Adequate Compensation.—Under the present system a licence to sell intoxicating drink carries with it a hugh monopoly value. Recently a man built a house for £400 near Ormskirk, obtained a beer and spirit licence, and sold the place for £4,000. In Lancashire, a licence was granted to a house valued at £3,500. The building was at once sold for £24,500.

A Worker of Past Days.

THE STORY OF SAMUEL HEBICH.

THE father of Samuel Hebich was a pastor in the village of Nellingen, in Germany. He had seven sons, the fourth of whom, the subject of this sketch, was born April 20, 1813. He had in his youth an inner craving for comfort and real soul-rest; but the things of this world overcame him, making him miserable, and like John Bunyan, he would gladly have exchanged his own condition with the animals he saw around him. He became deeply convicted of sin, he tells us, so much so that Satan suggested to him that he had better kill himself. He knew not where to hide. He writes:—

> One evening in 1821 I went out for a walk. My heart was in deep trouble, which was somewhat relieved by floods of tears. I hardly knew where I went, and found myself in a great open cabbage field. There I once more ventured to lift my sinful glance to the Holy One and Pure; then falling on my knees literally in the dust, I prayed to Him, whose Holy Spirit was even then over-shadowing me. The burden of my sins was taken away, and with the eye of faith I found courage to look upon my Saviour.

From that moment he was comforted. In 1822, he came under the ministry of Pastor Geibel, though it was not the preaching of this godly man that affected him, so much as his prayers. The Spirit was working in his soul, and he saw more fully that by believing in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, he became at once a child of God.

After many journeyings, and much perplexity as to what was to be his future calling in life,

> The resolution rose up mightily within me never to rest till I should be brought into the mission field amongst the heathen.

He prayed much, and wrote to the head of the Basle Mission Institute. In that letter he says:—

> I find no rest in the easy-going life of the world. My heart burns to be able to do somewhat to His praise who first loved us. . . . I have no means of my own; my travelling expenses I think I can meet.

Eventually he was taken into the college. He was not very successful as a student, having little aptitude for grammatical studies; but as to spiritual things, he grew, and soon began to preach in his holiday trips.

In 1832, the inspector of the college visited London with a view to discussing with friends his plans for missions in India. On February 12, 1834, a promise of ten thousand thalers was made by a Christian prince toward sending three missionaries to India; and Hebich was one of those chosen.

On August 15 they sailed forth, and on October 12 reached the coast of the Western Ghauts. Hebich sang Hallelujah as he saw the hills of India, and heartfelt prayer went up to God that they might be of lasting blessing to the peoples among whom they were to live.

The late Mr. Robert Nelson, then a judge in Calicut, heard that the ship had arrived, and hurried down to the landing place, hoping that among the passengers there might be some missionaries; and he at once invited the three German brethren to his house. Very soon Hebich found the sphere of work he longed for. Brahmins were spoken to about their souls, and eventually the work widened out into a great evangelistic effort along the Indian coast and upon the Nilgiri Hills. He translated, he travelled by weary palanquin to preach the Gospel, he met officers of the army, he visited prisons, but he was not satisfied. "We must go out amongst the people," he said. This he did, and everywhere he was greatly blessed. The next step was opening a school for the Canarese, and about that time other missionaries joined the party.

The late Anthony N. Groves urged upon the mission authorities at Basle in 1835 the importance of living more simply; and the result of much conference was that the four brethren in India began to conform as much as possible to the habits of the natives.

On paying a visit to Goa, the missionaries were well received; many doors were opened for Gospel work. Hebich never asked anyone whether he was willing to hear, but made his way from house to house with his New Testament in his hand. He spoke plain truths, and once from the pulpit called a ball "a devil's festival." The breaking of caste and open confession of Christ became frequent.

In 1841, Hebich went to Malabar, and when some time after a number of soldiers were ordered to China, many of them felt as if they were losing a most devoted helper and friend. About the same time he himself wrote:—"We have actually caught four Brahmins in the net." When cholera broke out, he was at hand visiting the dying and seeking to strengthen the faith of all.

SAMUEL HEBICH.

He began the day at 5 o'clock, when he would take a walk, and if he could get the company of some officer he was glad. After his frugal breakfast, he spent an hour with his English Bible on the verandah. When matters of routine had received attention, he would go forth in his bullock cart to scatter the seed of Gospel truth. He had no fixed time for food, and would eat whatever Peter his servant had prepared. After a little rest he was ready for evangelistic work. In 1850 he wrote:—

> I yearn more than I can find words to express to be going out into the regions beyond; (and at another time he said to a worker), Our labours and sufferings cannot be too great for His sake, for He is worthy of it all, so courage; let us be faithful unto death. Amen!

In 1852, he visited the stations familiar to the writer of this brief sketch—Coimbatore, Kaity, and Ootacamund: at the latter beautiful station the record of his life and ministry is still held fragrant in the memories of many Christians. The writer had the joy of preaching for three months in the little chapel where Hebich lived and laboured. A little room adjoining the chapel, about ten feet square, was sufficient for his own use. Here he met many officers and others, to whom, if they were living without God, he became a terror.

Some worldly officers, thinking to annoy him, asked if he would come to a ball. He gave a prompt answer, "Yes, I will come." Of course, a card of invitation had now to be sent to him. The time came, the gay company assembled, and as the music was just beginning, in came this strangely-dressed old man. With staff in hand he walked straight into the middle of the room, and looking round, said, "Let us pray," and without waiting a moment he was upon his knees. In vain did some young men say it was not the time or place. He poured out his earnest pleading before the Lord, but when he got up the room was empty. Needless to say, he got no more such invitations.

Meeting a gentleman one day he said, "Where are you going?" "I am going home," was the reply. "I know that," said Hebich, but "Where are you going?" he repeated. "Oh," said the friend, "I know what you mean," and thinking to put him off, he added, "Come and see me some other time at my house." "Yes, I will. I will come now."

Conversions took place everywhere; indeed, so many were brought to the Lord that they were called "Hebich's Own," or "The Hallelujah Rangers." The wife of an officer was asked by Hebich one day, "Have you given your heart to Jesus?" "I hope so," was the reply. "I do not want to know what you hope; I have asked you a simple question, Have you given your heart to Jesus?" "I think I have." "Hoping and thinking! All this is not what I ask about." Then with a sudden change of manner, "Have you breakfasted?" "Oh, yes!" "You self-confident woman; you should not venture to answer 'Yes,' but 'I hope,' or 'I think, that I have breakfasted!'" A deep impression was made, and both husband and wife became earnest Christians.

"Why here is Hebich coming up the compound," said Major ——. Away went the friends, who were paying a morning call, and left the tall major to encounter the faithful missionary. Immediately he heard a strange voice, "I am coming in." Then, after "Good morning! Will you be seated?" Hebich took a seat himself, and said, "Get your Bible." This was a strange and terrible demand, for the major did not know much about the Book, or indeed if he had one. However, to go and search for one was the next thing for him to do. In a neglected corner of his bookshelf he found one, Hebich calmly awaiting his return. "Sit down. Open the Bible," said Hebich. "Where shall I read?" he asked. "The first chapter of Genesis, and read the first two verses." The major, finding the place, read, "And the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep." "That will do. Shut the book. Kneel down. Let us pray." The astonished but obedient major knelt down, and the old missionary prayed somewhat thus: "O God, it is dark; darkness and ignorance prevail. It is dark in the mind and heart, dark in the present and future. Awaken the darkened heart and conscience of this friend, and do it now, for Jesus' sake." "Good morning," he said, "I shall come this day week. Have breakfast ready for me. Good morning." The bewildered major was left to find himself convicted by the Spirit. During the days that followed he found it was indeed all dark within, and his soul was ignorant of God.

Back came Hebich on the day appointed. "I am coming in," said Hebich. The major was there, and, just as before, Hebich said: "Sit down, take your Bible." "Where shall I read?" "The first chapter of Genesis, from the third verse." "And God said, Let there be light." "That will do. Shut your book. Kneel down. Let us pray!" Hebich used nearly the same words as before, only ringing the changes on the word, light. When they rose, the great work of conviction and conversion was done.

The outbreak of the mutiny in 1857 took away some of his dear Highland soldiers, and Hebich felt lonely; but he went on visiting more stations and Hindu festivals, and laboured almost night and day for his Lord. At last his health began to fail, and he was ordered home to Europe, leaving an enduring testimony behind, and even those who had spoken ill of him were convinced he was a holy man of God.

In 1868, he was attacked with severe pains, and was assured his work was now come to a close. He was full of thankfulness. His spirit rejoiced in God who had during forty-seven years upheld him as a witness. Sometimes his mind wandered; he fancied he was still preaching to the heathen, and quite to the last he had thoughts of his beloved India. He fell asleep smiling.

Books for the Soul.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers have, doubtless, like myself, often felt a deep regret and surprise that books calculated to strengthen and edify the believer in Jesus should be the hardest to procure; whilst, on the other hand, it is the easiest thing possible for any reader to get a plentiful supply of fiction, or of any reading calculated to instruct or entertain "the natural man." One has only to go to the nearest public lending library for the latter, and intellectual food of many types never fails. But if another craving exists, and the spirit cries out for the helps and blessings which God has given to the world through the written ministries of His truest servants—holy men of God—is it as easy to obtain? If I were to go to our free lending library here and ask for the works of Krummacher, or Madame de Gasparin; for Dr. Whyte's "Jacob Behmen," or the "Life of John G. Paton;" for Madame Guyon, or Charles A. Fox; for works by F. B. Meyer, or Dr. A. T. Pierson, I should be met with a negative in every case.

So here is a decided need. Hundreds of us, who cannot be always buying books, need spiritual helps of the very best type—and by that I mean books written with the highest and only object—God's glory and the good of souls. It is necessary that our young converts should have them. What honour to our Father and our Lord Jesus Christ would this bring! What strength and encouragement would their sympathy be to those in the conflict seeking to be faithful witnesses?

But the best books of the world are not doing as large an amount of service as they might. They need multiplying and bringing out into the common walks of men and women. I long to see lending libraries with souls as well as bodies; or else the formation of lending libraries of purely spiritual writings in every town. The reading of such books as I have alluded to has so helped me that I long to see them brought into the very homes of all those who love God and are seeking to serve Him and work with Him for this poor sad world. May I say how glad I should be to join with any of God's children who would help to form a lending library of purely sound spiritual literature for and in this town?—Yours very sincerely,

(Miss) Eleanor E. Archer.

Temptation.*

By Mr. W. R. Lane.

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation" (James i. 12).

TEMPTATIONS are the heritage of us all, converted and unconverted. They are "common to man." James does not say, "Blessed is the man who is never tempted." If you would cease to be tempted, you must needs go out of this world altogether. No child of God, no child of man, escapes these testing experiences! They are inevitable; we cannot escape them if we would. Moreover, we need not wish to do so, for this is the training ground—

THE MORAL GYMNASIUM

—where God's choicest men are made. If you would wish to be something more than a mere weakling of a Christian—an apology for a man of God—then you must not shrink from the process, severe though it may be, which is intended to develop strength and maturity of Christian life and experience.

Temptation times are training times, and they are also educating times. It is the school where the true Divinity scholar learns many of his most valuable lessons. The meaning of much of God's Word is seen only in the hour of trial and temptation. Many a page of Holy Scripture was written by tempted men and for tempted men, and God reveals some of His rarest things to His tempted ones who trust Him—aye, and many of His most effective weapons are forged in the midst of fiery trials.

Do not, therefore, be disheartened, brother, if fierce temptations try your heart. Blessed is the man THAT ENDURES. Not "Blessed is the man that is tempted," but that ENDURES it—that is, that conquers it, and perseveres through it without yielding to sin. Not all the tempted men, alas! can be counted blessed. It depends! Some trees are the better for the rocking wind, others the worse; it depends on the root. Temptation may make us or mar us! Our Lord tells us in the parable of the Sower that in the time of temptation many fall away. The summer sun withers the religious profession of some, in others it develops a golden harvest.

The difference is determined by the root. Let me give to tempted men a

THREEFOLD GUARANTEE OF VICTORY.

I. An Interested God. (1 Cor. x. 13). "God . . . will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make the way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Mark it well, brethren; your Heavenly Father sees you in the midst of the fire, and He controls its fierceness. He watches over you every moment with more than a mother's tender solicitude. "He tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." Ponder the whole verse; every word is suggestive and helpful, and brimful of comfort. With the temptation, He will make "the way to escape," note that! Not the way to escape being tempted, but the way to escape sinning in the temptation. To "endure" is to escape the sin. The way of temptation is evitable, but not, thank God, the way of sin.

II. An Interceding Saviour. Heb. ii. 18, "In that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted." Let us seek to take to our hearts the cheer and strength of this remarkable statement. Jesus our merciful and faithful High Priest once lived in this world of sin where we now live. Sorely tempted in all points as we now are, He stood! He conquered! Now He is able, we are told, to help us when we are tempted; because He has been tempted Himself. His ability to succour us is derived not from the glorious fact of His Deity, but from the mysterious and tender fact of his stainless yet real humanity. He will come to our side when Satan and the world, when friends and foes, tempt us right and left; it is then He says, "I too have been where you are now, my troubled disciple, and I am with you to support you, and to show you a stainless way through it."

"Ye tempted one, there's refuge nigh"—not merely because Jesus of Nazareth passeth by, but because, God be praised, Jesus of Nazareth STANDETH BY. Think of Him for a moment as we see Him in the sixth of Mark. He is on the mountain praying; the disciples in the boat tossing on the stormy lake. "The wind was contrary to them." They were distressed, "toiling in rowing." What does the writer say? "He saw them." He "came to them." "He talked with them;" and said to them, "Be of good cheer, it is I." Mark vi. is good for us to-day. We have the very same Jesus. He knows our distresses, as we pull often against wind and tide, in warehouse, market, and office in our busy city life; and He will not, He cannot fail us, nor forsake us.

III. The Indwelling Spirit. 1 Cor. vi. 19. "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost." Salvation means God for us and God with us, but also God in us. God the Holy Spirit has come to inhabit us, as the Apostle says in Gal v. 17, in order that we may no longer do the things that we used to do. He who lives and makes intercession in heaven is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities"; and the Divine Spirit who lives in our hearts and makes intercession there, "helpeth our infirmities." The Spirit's love within us is the full answer of Christ's love for us. The Divine Comforter dwelling and working in us, unhindered and ungrieved, means security and victory. With this threefold guarantee of the interest, intercession and indwelling of the Triune God, the Christian man, though weak in the extreme, and tempted to the last, may be more than conqueror. And when he is approved, he shall receive from the pierced hand of his once tempted Saviour the crown of life.

God's Pathway.

Our Father God! our fathers' God!
Thou knowest all the way they trod
To seek Thine own right hand.
We know not how the road may turn,
We only set ourselves to learn
To live at Thy command.

They walked with Thee and saw the day,
So near at hand yet far away,
When Thou should'st govern all.
And we, too, walk with Thee by faith,
That we may see Thy reign on earth
Begin at Thy glad call.

Call whom Thou wilt; call where Thou wilt!
But let Thy temple now be built
That Thou mayest in it dwell.
Send forth to lands of want and care,
Thy messengers of truth, to dare
Thy tale of love to tell.

But, oh! in our own land, the most,
Of which we and our fathers boast,
Be Thou our God to-day.
Show Thou the path—'twill be the true!—
And Thou wilt surely bring us through
To know 'twas Thy right way.

Then, though Thine enemies may rage,
And all the powers of hell engage
To break the bonds of Three.*
Thy truth Thou wilt most surely bless,
And all who love Thee and confess,
Shall surely dwell with Thee.

But not in heaven alone may we,
Who love Thee and confess, see Thee.
Thy will on earth be done.
Grant us, who walk in Thine own way,
Beyond the dark before the day,
To see Thy reign begun.

* The Triune God.

London's Young Women.—Last year's report of the London Y.W.C.A. is presented in a brochure of some 160 pages. The events of 1902 have often caused the question to arise in the minds of the workers: "How can we keep pace with the growing requirements of our girls and young women?" The answer is found in this cheering record, which is one of progress. Both from a numerical and spiritual standpoint, steady advancement has been experienced, and the quiet, unobtrusive, yet comprehensive, organizations have borne fruit in many directions. The office of the Y.W.C.A. is 25 and 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.

The May Meetings.

Primitive Methodist Missions.

THREE enthusiastic meetings took place at the Metropolitan Tabernacle a few days ago, in connection with the anniversary of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society. A sad pathos gathered round this year's anniversary, for in nine months two general missionary secretaries have died, and the present secretary (Rev. James Pickett) was unable to attend on account of the sudden death of his wife. It was only fitting that these events should provoke sympathetic reference during the day.

The report was read by Rev. T. Mitchell, financial missionary secretary. It showed energy and progress in every department. The metropolitan missions at Whitechapel, Southwark, and Forest Gate are full of vitality; in the provinces Edinburgh, Leicester, Birmingham, Kettering, and Belfast show a gratifying return for the grants they receive. The home missions show a net increase of 114; the mission vans are doing splendid work in the villages, and Miss Perrett, connexional missioner, is meeting with real encouragement among the young. The churches in New Zealand show a pleasing prosperity and enthusiasm in every department. In South Africa the injury caused by the war is being overcome; in the West new churches are being built and new schools opened; in Central Africa the pioneering is almost completed, and substantial progress is being made. The income of the general fund was £13,237 for the year, and of the African fund £4,864. These totals show a slight decline, but conventions are planned which it is hoped will more than make up for the decrease.

At the morning assembly Councillor E. Jennings (Leicester) presided, and pleaded for a vigorous forward movement, since half the human race have not heard the Gospel. The condition and needs of the people in West Africa were set forth by Rev. R. Banham. While some of the races are steeped in idolatry and superstition, there is manifest in them a deep religious instinct. He instanced some of the results of the missionary labours, and insisted upon the need of school teachers in the field. Mr. C. J. Youngs (Cardiff), after tracing the development operation of the missionary spirit in distant ages, indicated in a clear way the call of Christ in this age to a deeper consecration and truer devotion to the work of missionary enterprise, and pleaded for an "imperial outlook" in the Christian Church.

The President of Conference insisted that the qualities of every true missionary church were an evangelical faith, consecrated enthusiasm, and aggressive methods; and argued effectively that all these are found in Primitive Methodism. He moved the meeting as he pleaded for young men to offer as volunteers, and told how two stations in West Africa were waiting for missionaries.

The ladies' meeting in the afternoon was presided over by Mrs. Grosvenor (Tunstall), and the report of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society was presented by Miss Johnston (Tottenham). A lucid and impressive address was given by Miss Bulmer (Stanley Circuit), who expressed the conviction that Methodism will only live as long as she is Evangelical and a soul-saving force. The true missionary motive is love to Christ. It was very easy to love where love meets with response, but not so easy to love where beauty and purity have departed, and when there is no response. The missionary motive sees what may be and what is. The vision of love is not circumscribed. The answer of love to all pessimism is that results would in God's own time ultimately come. No missionary society can put love's answer on a balance sheet.

Other speakers included Mrs. Jabez Bell (Huddersfield) and Miss Richards (Knighton).

Mr. E. C. Rawlings (The connexional solicitor) was heartily received as chairman of the evening meeting. He had attended some twenty-five similar anniversaries, and while the retrospect gave him pleasure, it was tinged with regret for the loss of those noble souls who in clarion tones bade the Society go forward, and who are now with the Lord. Among others whose memory was recalled was Joseph Hickson, who gave the speaker much encouragement as a youth. "I remember he came one day to make a kind inquiry as to how I was succeeding in business, and when I told him he said, 'Well, if business does not come as quick as you want it, then you must pray about it.' He believed in prayer as the means by which the mighty motive power of the Christian was obtained, and he was right. Prayer moves the arm that moves the world."

A stirring address was delivered by Rev. James Travis (president of the National Free Church Council), who dealt with the difficulties of urban and rural evangelization. The attention of the audience was held throughout, and their hearty assent was given to the speaker's views and denunciation of the drink trade and the political protection it is receiving in high quarters. Revs. W. L. Watkinson and A. Baldwin, and Councillor J. Johnson (agent of the Durham Miners' Union) also took part.

The Strangers' Friend Society.

THIS useful organization held its 117th annual meeting on Thursday last.

The province of the Society, says the report, is to remember the otherwise forgotten, to attend to the neglected, and to visit the forsaken in their lonely hiding-places in the wilderness of the metropolis. Of the great flood of strangers, not aliens only, but British subjects, who are incessantly pouring in from the country districts and other places, with a view to improving their prospects, many are doomed to disappointment; and, being overtaken by sickness as well as poverty, realize the bitterness of being alone in a great city.

The relief is apportioned without distinction of sect; but as only that bounty can be conferred which the public supplies, the claims of many, whose sufferings the Committee would gladly mitigate, have to be passed over. Long experience enables the 150 visitors employed to suggest and frequently themselves carry out plans which greatly modify the difficulties of the poor.

The following are examples of the 1,928 cases which were relieved by the Society during the last twelve months:—"That of Mrs. L., in the North Brixton district, is one of sad distress. Her husband, a bricklayer's labourer, went out of his mind, and had to be removed to a lunatic asylum. There were six little ones. The poor woman was in great distress of mind, not knowing what to do or hope for in the dreaded future; but the practical and loving sympathy and help rendered by the Society soon reassured her, and after a few weeks the visitor had the satisfaction and joy of knowing that she had learned to put her trust in God. Since then the man got better and returned home, and was further helped by the Society till he obtained some work.

"J. J., in the Poplar district, had been out of work for several weeks. He was ill in bed, literally worn out in the vain search for work. Two of the five children were also laid by with influenza. The visitor gave immediate relief, and the case was further assisted by the Society. This timely but unexpected help so awakened the wife's surprise and gratitude that she burst into tears and sobbed her thanks. The same night, though very unwell, she was at a prayer meeting with a heart full of thankfulness to God. In addition to the allowance of the Society, a sufficient supply of soup and bread was obtained for the family four days each week until the husband had resumed work."

Zanzibar Strangers' Rest.

THE lively interest with which the work of the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest is followed was demonstrated at Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening, the conversazione and annual meeting drawing together a large number of friends from all parts of London. The hon. secretary, Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, reminded the friends that the Rest was first commenced for the purpose of providing a place of prayer where sailors could hear the Gospel, and a place of refuge where they can find true friends. The island has a population of 250,000 (Goanese, British, Indians, Arabs, and Swahili). By far the larger number have hardly heard the name of Jesus Christ.

Sir Andrew W. Wingate, who presided, rejoiced that the organization was able to show progress. From what he had seen in India he was convinced that no men had more reason to be proud of their work than the missionaries. The chairman extended a warm welcome to Mr. and Mrs. George Knapman, after three years' continuous service in Zanzibar, and proceeded to state that the Strangers' Rest appealed to Christians because it is no respecter of persons.

In the course of a sympathetic address, Rev. Edwin H. Ellis pointed out that the Rest is not conducted along the beaten track, but seeks to lift Christian service out of the "ruts," and give it new activity. Above all, the institution commended itself to Christians because it is carried on in dependence upon the Spirit of God.

Rev. F. S. Webster, who followed, drew upon a recent personal experience in Rotterdam in illustrating the meaning of the word "stranger." The more we live as strangers on earth the more we honour God. The speaker felt that God must ofttimes be disappointed with many Christians who settle down comfortably in the world, when they should be strangers in the earth and not afraid to confess it. In urging everyone to face the question whether the claims of Christ upon their service are being honoured, Mr. Webster declared that thousands are dying daily without having heard of Christ, not because they would not, but because they have not had the chance.

A cheering account of effort among the women of Zanzibar was given by Mrs. Knapman. Although the wives of Mohammedans are kept in almost strict seclusion, she had been able to gain access to them, read the Scriptures, and minister to their general needs. She related some of her experiences while going in and out among the women of the Island, and expressed her sorrow that while there is a readiness to listen to the Word, there is seldom a willingness to accept it.

Rev. Edward Isaac emphasized the significance of winning the sailors for Christ, in order that they may become ambassadors for Him in the ports at which they touch. In an interesting and brief address, Mr. George Knapman described the agencies which centre in the Zanzibar Rest. He told of much advancement in the work, especially among the young Arabs to whom he devotes much attention. In the streets and lanes of Zanzibar, as well as on board the vessels in port, the Gospel has been proclaimed, and many are the tokens of Divine blessing which have been given from time to time. In the course of the reception and at intervals in the meeting, Madame Jessie Strathearn added much to the enjoyment of the proceedings by her solos.

Folkestone.—The Convention held last week at Folkestone was more largely attended this year, and the messages uttered by Revs. J. J. Luce, J. B. Figgis, D. Stather Hunt, E. L. Hamilton, and Mr. Walter B. Sloan were deeply impressive. One effect, that of bringing Christians of different communities together in fellowship was gladly acknowledged by various participators in the Convention. M. H.

The Kensit Crusade.

IT was a matter for deep satisfaction to the friends of the Protestant Truth Society that the son of the late Mr. John Kensit was able to step forward at the moment when a leader was needed to take the place of his martyred father. Since the lamentable event which cut off the life of one who was being used so widely to awaken the Protestants of our country to a sense of the evils which must ensue if Rome has sway in our midst, Mr. John A. Kensit has given himself heartily to the movement, and brought to his task an earnestness of spirit and strength of purpose which augur well for the future of the Society.

At the annual meetings on Monday there were large gatherings at Exeter Hall. In the afternoon Mr. Richard Cory presided; he warmly commended the movement, and paid a tribute to the memory of its founder. He rejoiced that the son was able to fill the place of the father, and voiced the desire of all hearts present that the same spirit might prompt him in his endeavours to maintain the principles of the Reformation.

An abstract of the annual report was read by the secretary, Mr. John A. Kensit. It opened with a word as to the intentions of the leader and his preachers: "The methods of the Society will be in the future as they have been in the past—aggressive and uncompromising. The bold and fearless protests of our founder in the presence of idolatry excited our admiration, and won our hearts to the cause he represented. His methods were disliked, and so will be the means adopted by those who have taken up his work." Among the many occasions during the year on which the voice of the Society has been was heard, the proposed Mass at St. Paul's Cathedral, which was described as "the plot that failed." The impetus to Rome's power in England which it is feared will result from the King's visit to the Pope was regretted. Satisfaction was expressed at the progress of the Church Discipline Bill, and the hope that it will soon become law. Reference was made to the scandal at St. Michael's, Shoreditch, and similar performances at no fewer than twenty churches in the Diocese of London. The attention of the Bishop has been directed to these illegalities by the Society. Meetings have been held in some 150 towns, attended by nearly 700,000 people. The prospects of the Society were never more encouraging than they are to-day, when Protestants are uniting as never before in their resistance of priestcraft.

Following the secretary came several of the Wickliffe preachers. Mr. H. H. Martin described a mission now in progress at Birmingham, where the previous day (Sunday) eight services were conducted in connection with the campaign with cheering results. He was convinced that the secret of the progress the Society is making lies in the fact that the preachers advocate a spiritual Protestantism and are not content with political agitations. He spoke of the indifference of the Bishops and their impotency to deal with offending clergy.

The story of the recent fight for free speech at Birmingham was related by Mr. L. Eward, who was sentenced to seven days' imprisonment on a charge of causing an obstruction. He also recounted some stirring experiences at Whitney and other places where opposition was offered and persecution suffered by the preachers while denouncing blasphemous teaching and upholding the simple worship of God. Mr. W. E. Moss, who is connected with one of the bands formed during the year, spoke of the efforts of the Wickliffe preachers in the North of England, and the need that exists for the work they are seeking to do. In one town they had to face an audience in which there were 1,200 Roman Catholics. Persecution, however, only energises the workers for renewed activity.

In giving his testimony to the solidity and fruitfulness of the labours of the Wickliffe Preachers, Rev. Seymer E. Terry (Brighton), said it was remarkable that so young a band of men should give their lives to the defence of the principles of the Reformation. He pointed out many features of Wickliffe's work which have their counterpart in the experiences of this band of preachers in their crusade against the same foe. The closing address was given by Rev. J. C. Wilcox. In the evening another meeting was held, when resolutions were adopted, urging His Majesty's ministers to afford facilities for passing into law the Church Discipline Bill; also calling upon upholders of the Reformation principles to resist the attempts to remove our Protestant safeguards, to press for the inspection of convents and monasteries, and do all in their power to uphold the right of free speech and the popular control of the education of the young.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

THE earnest spirit which actuates the conductors of the Midnight Meeting Movement received a fresh illustration at the annual meeting, held on Wednesday afternoon of last week at Exeter Hall. The report submitted by Mr. T. Nixon showed the importance of driving home to the public conscience the fact that men are not only the keepers, but the brothers of those around them. In affectionate terms the condition of the great outcast class was shown to make an appeal to the Christian community of the greatest urgency. Factory and laundry girls were shown to constitute the class most exposed to temptation. Many voluntary helpers have joined hands to do something towards stemming the tide of immorality which is sweeping over our land. Meetings had been held in different parts of the metropolis, and in many of the principal seaports and inland towns—one held in November being the two-thousandth since the Society was constituted. The closest attention had been given to the circulation among men and women of tracts and other literature specially prepared to meet the need. Special attention was directed—(1) To the presence in the streets of London of many Jewish women, a great contrast to the experience of former years, when it was the rarest thing to find a member of the Hebrew race in this position; and (2) to an alarming increase in the number of very young girls to be met under the escort of fashionably-dressed women. The income had amounted to £842 6s. 6d., the year closing with a balance of £40 10s. 10d.

Recalling the fact that the movement began in the revival year, 1859, the chairman (Mr. R. C. Morgan) declared that what had been or is being accomplished is very small compared with the great duty resting on the Christian community towards the 80,000 girls on the streets of London. He believed that heads of families could do much to prevent girls in their service from going wrong. These ranks are not kept up by chance falls, but by an organized traffic, the iniquity of which is almost unthinkable to innocent, respectable people.

Admitting that the nation seems to be retrogressing, Rev. W. R. Mowll declared, in the course of a deeply impressive address, that anything and everything must be welcomed and tried which would move the moral sense of the people. The great need of the hour was the faithful preaching of the Gospel, which would touch this evil; its inter-woven associate strong drink, and all others. A stirring address followed from Rev. J. Fleming Shearer, who described this as the very hardest part of Christian work; but not hopeless, seeing that no cause can be so classed in which our Lord Jesus Christ is enlisted. The key of the situation with regard to Christian effort of all kinds is to be found in personal dealing between man and man. "Saved to save" must be the motto of all.

Care of Aged Ministers.—The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was held a few days ago at the Sunday-School Union House, 56, Old Bailey, E.C., Rev. Thomas Greenwood presiding. The report shows that during the past year seventy-five ministers had been relieved by the Society, £860 having been distributed among them. The treasurer is Mr. Philip Cadby, 24, St. Peter's Square, Hammersmith; and the secretary, Rev. P. G. Scorey, Crawley, Sussex, who will be happy to give any information concerning the Society.

Reform on the Continent.

AT the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. T. Cheney Garfit, the annual meeting of the Foreign Aid Society was held at their residence in Great Cumberland Place, Hyde Park, on Wednesday of last week.

The review of the year was read by Rev. James Gosset Tanner. It mentioned that a volcanic movement in the heart of the Papacy threatens to rend it asunder, and this is perhaps more evident in France than in any other country which is under the yoke of Rome. At the same time the steps taken by the French Government for the closing of various monasteries and convents, &c., have caused great irritation. The brethren who are giving the Gospel to their fellow-countrymen are much hampered in their work through the persecution of their converts by Roman Catholics. On the other hand, they are confronted by unbelief, free-thought, and indifference. Notwithstanding, all the evangelization societies labouring in France and Belgium are able to speak of decided encouragement during the past year. While the Foreign Aid Society assists these organizations with small monetary grants, ninety-two per cent. of what is needed for evangelistic work by the nine societies is contributed by French Protestants themselves. The largest of these is the Société Centrale, which reaches over 100,000 souls, in addition to those who are already Protestants. The Union of Free Churches report an increase of activity and animation, in the opening of five new places of worship.

The Belgian Missionary Church is able to record continued advancement. No fewer than ninety-seven laymen have assisted the pastors in holding Gospel meetings. Large numbers of Bibles and Testaments have been circulated, and as many as 300,000 tracts distributed. Eight new mission halls have been opened in various parts of the country, and efforts to reach the Flemish-speaking people have been more successful than ever before.

The chair was taken by Mr. T. Cheney Garfit, who spoke cordially of the operations of the Society. The volcanic and re-actionary movement against the bondage of Rome at the present time is not limited to France, but is felt in every country where the power of Popery has been felt. Having recently visited Rome, the Chairman was able to bear hearty testimony to the extensive and many-sided work carried on there by Dr. Burt. In the course of an informing address, Rev. H. J. R. Marston said the very name of the Society implies that the Evangelical Church in France (to go no further) is quite inadequate. He did not make the statement in censure or disparagement; nor did he mean that it was incompetent, for the zeal of the Monods, Coillards, and Sabatiers cannot be over-estimated. But the fact remains that the Church in France is inadequate, and it is only right that help should go from our shores to its support. He earnestly exhorted the friends of the Society to be much in prayer that God would send a great revival to His Church in the land of the Huguenots.

Pasteur Appia, B.D. (Paris), who is a close student of the problems of evangelization in France, set forth in an instructive address some of the difficulties with which the Church is confronted. He traced the rise and progress of the two currents running through the history of France since the time of the Reformation, and described the present conflict between the forces which make for religious freedom and the powers which seek to keep the people in bondage to the Vatican.

Some interesting reminiscences of visits to the Continent were given by Mr. Martin Luther Rouse. His experience had shown that the Scriptures are but little known in many countries, and particularly was this the case in France, where many do not know even what the Bible is. On the other hand, the speaker was able to give a gratifying account of the work among French priests, and to state that the Sunday-schools are passing into the hands of Christians. Revs. Ewart Barber, Preb. White, and Pasteur Berekia also briefly addressed the meeting.

The Evangelical Alliance.

THE annual conversazione of the Evangelical Alliance, held on Thursday last at Exeter Hall, formed a pleasant link between believers in the homeland and their brethren in the foreign field. Lord KINNAIRD occupied the chair, and spoke a few words of warm encouragement to workers in countries where Rome holds sway.

A TESTIMONY AGAINST ROME.

Pasteur APPIA, president of the French branch, said that the spirit of the Alliance has entered into the activities of the French Protestant churches. Moreover, the unity of the Alliance furnishes an apt reply to the criticism of Romanist priests regarding the divisions of Protestants. The papal dogma of infallibility may serve the interests of Romanist theologians, but, on the other hand, the Alliance presents to the world the great foundation facts of Christianity, and shows that Christ provides a resting place for the soul. Men are saying to the priest, "We asked for bread, but you give us a stone; we seek soul-satisfaction, but you give us only dogma, performance, and rite." The Alliance removes stumbling-blocks, and vindicates the truth that all believers are in "the apostolic succession." Evangelical believers must remember, at the same time, that in order fully to fulfil their responsibilities to the nations they must strive not only to counteract the efforts of Romanists and atheists, but also to awaken the sleeping churches. Proceeding to give a call to prayer, the speaker quoted Dr. Torrey who, when in Paris a few months ago, said, "What have I learned from the Australian revival, in which thousands found Christ? I have learned this lesson, 'Ask and ye shall receive.'" Earnest prayer; study of the Word of God, and the preaching of the Gospel of free grace will kindle afresh the revival flame.

HEROES OF THE PAST.

Pastor W. Y. FULLERTON said that at a time when differences on some points are being accentuated by events, it is well to find a sanctuary of unity. Proceeding, Mr. Fullerton set forth practical lessons from historical occurrences in the corresponding week of May in various years. On May 23, 1498, Savonarola, led to execution and excommunicated from "the church militant and the church triumphant," replied to his accuser, "From the church militant, 'Yes'; from the church triumphant, 'No,' for that is beyond your power." A Genevan record of May, 1564, says: "John Calvin went to God, Saturday, 27th." May 30 has a great name connected with it. On that day in 1792, at Nottingham, Carey preached the heart-stirring sermon which marked the commencement of a new era in missions. "Are you not going to do something?" he asked at the conclusion of that sermon. And they resolved that something should be done. Another reference was to the missionary work of Columba, who wrote in his psalter, the day before Whit Sunday, "They that trust in the Lord shall not want anything of that which is good."

The vice-president of the Shanghai branch, Rev. G. H. BONDFIELD, said that the week of prayer is an institution greatly esteemed by the native church, which, if it has not yet fully grasped all its privileges, may truly be described as a church of prayer. The natives at one place so much enjoyed the week observed with the missionaries, that when the Chinese new year came, a few weeks later, they decided to have a week of prayer on their own account, and a gracious season of blessing was experienced. The Alliance is of great value in demonstrating to the natives that all denominations are one in Christ.

REVIVALS ON THE CONTINENT.

The "wide fields" of the Continent of Europe were next referred to by Dr. BAEDEKER, who spoke first of the effectiveness of the work at Blankenburg, where people gather from great distances. With reminiscences of the Old Catholic movement; the fall of the third Napoleon; and the increase of papal power which dates from 1870, the speaker described the present need for more extensive preaching of evangelical truth. The Alliance is not only English, but unites all countries in the faith. There are grand works in progress both in Germany and Italy; but the half of the results and of the needs cannot be told. The "Los von Rom" movement in the Austrian Empire is wonderful; it is not merely an enthusiasm for the moment, but there are large Christian communities which edify one another in the Lord. In Prague it is remarkable how the Gospel is spreading. Russia, "which is my fishing ground," possesses, we should remember, no less than one-sixth of the world's area, and among its peoples no fewer than 128 languages are spoken. There are the Finns, the Mongols, the Slavs—themselves subdivided into many tribes—and a variety of other races. Russia is a wonderful and a fruitful field.

The last speaker, Rev. J. GOSSET TANNER, made an earnest appeal for unity, and alluded to the revival at Aintab, in which, during the last week of prayer, there was so great an ingathering of souls.

The gathering concluded with prayer, led by Pastor ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

Winning Seamen for Christ.

ESTABLISHED fifty-seven years ago, the Seamen's Christian Friend Society has made steady progress in its varied undertakings. It missions no fewer than forty ports on the British coasts, maintains a number of rests and institutes, accomplishes an important temperance work, and in many ways ministers to the spiritual and social welfare of seamen, fishermen, and boatmen.

GOOD WORK ASHORE AND AFLOAT.

At the annual meeting, held on Tuesday afternoon last week at Exeter Hall, Rev. G. J. HILL (secretary) reported that the year has been one of some progress and much blessing. The debt on the new headquarters, St. George Street, has been cleared, and a new mission boat has been obtained for the Cornish coast. Among the general statistics the following remarkable figures appear:—Bethel services and other meetings ashore and afloat, 4,469; short conversational meetings and gatherings for prayer, 6,869; estimated attendances at meetings, over 144,000; missionary visits to ships, boarding houses, and seamen's families, 55,716; Bibles, Testaments, and religious books and periodicals distributed, 132,150. In connection with work among the young there are 600 children in the Sunday-schools and Bands of Hope. Relief has been distributed among sick and destitute sailors, and thousands of letters have been received for seamen and written to them. A site has been secured for a new mission house at Southwick, on the Sussex coast. Most encouraging of all, there have been many tokens of spiritual refreshing.

IN "SAILOR TOWN."

Proceeding, Mr. Hill spoke of the degraded condition of the district in which the headquarters stands, and cited cases in which seamen who had given way to drunkenness and fallen among thieves, were helped out of their difficulties and led to the Saviour. There are many temptations in "Sailor Town," but the Society's workers strenuously labour to win the seamen for Christ. Winter and summer, open-air services are held where sailors chiefly congregate. At one of these was a man who had never attended a place of worship since his boyhood, and who was a heavy drinker. Some days later, he sought out other meetings, and was touched to the heart by the words he heard. He accepted the Gospel message and, writing subsequently from a ship on which he is sailing to Melbourne, he says, "I can hardly realize that I am the same man. Some of the crew have seen me praying and ask 'am I a Christian?' I tell them 'Yes.' I have Christ in my heart. There was plenty of whisky in the foc'sle, but I enjoyed cold water." In conclusion, Mr. Hill stated that many other cases could be given from the hundreds of letters received testifying to spiritual blessing.

Speaking from the chair, Captain WISELY (Union Castle Line) said that the Society believes that all the crooked things of the world can be made straight by the power of God, and it is continually applying this straightening process.

"A BUNDLE OF RAGS."

An earnest worker for the Society, Mrs. H. W. MAYNARD, followed with a spirited address descriptive of the operations. "This is how they sign the pledge. A lady said to 'a bundle of rags,' 'Will you sign the pledge?' 'Certainly not,' was the reply of the ragged one. 'What is the use of me signing? I should break it directly.' The lady then pointed to the words on the pledge card, 'I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand.' She went on, 'There is your strength,—in God.' The pledge was signed and was kept." As a typical instance of the workers' devotion, Mrs. Maynard spoke of an aged lady who, despite her eighty years, still writes letters of encouragement to sailors.

THE SAILOR AS EVANGELIST.

The next speaker, Rev. Dr. GEORGE HANSON, made a telling appeal, alluding to the special risks and difficulties of life on board ship, and pointed out that a mission to sailors has a direct bearing on the great work of evangelizing the world. A British sailor takes with him not merely a cargo of merchandise, but an influence for good or for evil. A traveller round the world need set foot on no ground that does not belong to England. We ought, then to girdle the earth with Christian faith and knowledge, and if "Jack" be truly converted he will seek to win others, and thus become a missionary for Christ.

Other meetings in connection with the anniversary included a demonstration the same evening in Exeter Hall, when Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS presided, and earnest addresses were given by Revs. W. CUFF and F. S. WEBSTER, and Mr. H. W. MAYNARD; and a missionary meeting at the Society's headquarters on Thursday last.

Operative Jewish Converts.

AT the annual meeting of the Operative Jewish Converts Institution held recently at the Trades Building, Palestine House, Bodney Road, N.E., Mr. J. K. D. WINGFIELD-DIGBY, M.P., presided.

Canon MCCORMICK said he was thankful for the existence of the Institution. "It is a home of industry. I rejoice in the fact that those who are here are taught special trades. Suppose it pleases God that any of them should go into the mission field, look at the enormous advantages they possess. In the next place, this is a home for training, and that is another distinct advantage. If you are to be successful in building up character there must be character training. This also is a kind of home, and there are beautiful influences at work here, and any one of the inmates who bears a high Christian character cannot help exercising a sweet and beneficial influence upon his companions."

Rev. E. P. CACHEMAILLE, who followed, enlarged upon some words in the annual report: "If God has ordained that unless a man work neither shall he eat, two things are clear; namely, that we are not to support Jewish converts in idleness; and that if they are incapable of working for want of instruction, we should, if possible, provide instruction that they may work."

After earnest words from Rev. J. W. PRATT, Rev. HENRY SASSON, a former inmate, said that missionary work among the Jews would be very poor but for this enterprise. Converts who are driven away from home are welcomed with open and tender arms at the Institution, which provides for them bodily and spiritually, teaches them trades, and sends them away happily with a sum of money at the end of three years. If they are desirous to become ministers or missionaries of the Gospel they are encouraged and assisted. "That I am a clergyman myself is chiefly due to this Institution. Thank God for this happy land and its Societies on behalf of the Jews, and for such an establishment as this, where they are told distinctly what Christianity is, and where the beauty of its principles is seen."

In Rural England.

"PRIDE won't take us to heaven," said a poor country woman to a worker of the Country Towns Mission, "but cleanliness will." "Well, yes, ma'am," replied the missionary, "but it must be a clean heart." This little conversation is typical both of the spiritual darkness which has to be encountered, and of the readiness of the missionaries. These devoted men cheerfully trudge from door to door in the country towns and villages, sometimes welcomed and sometimes thrust away, but always assiduously seeking to win men and women from the paths of sin.

PERSISTENCY REWARDED.

Some of the stories of their labours were told with much spirit and freshness at the annual meeting of the mission held last week at Exeter Hall. Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, spoke hearty words of encouragement, and Mr. G. H. Mawer, secretary, presented a report which showed that in many parts of the country souls have been led to Christ. All the missionaries have meetings of various kinds, but their chief work is to ensure that everyone in a district, so far as possible, shall individually hear the message of salvation. To this end they follow up the people faithfully and persistently, supplementing their own words with suitable tracts and books. One missionary, writing of persons who have been blessed, says: "I have followed up some of these for years, with feelings sometimes of hope, and again of despair."

The advantages arising from constant visitation are continually being made made manifest, and not the least in regard to those who are attending a place of worship. A missionary says: "I visited a cottage where the woman had been attending some tent services, and my visit was timed aright, for she talked to me freely and seemed much affected. I believe she was led into the light."

THE DYING PLOUGHMAN.

Another worker says: "A ploughman had been often spoken to about his soul. On more than one occasion I had said, 'You know the way of God, but you will not walk therein.' One day I found him at home, ill. I read the Scriptures and then prayed with him, and to my surprise he prayed too. Evidently he had been hiding his anxiety till he was compelled to yield to Christ. While I am writing, this man is dying of cancer, with severe pain, yet peace triumphs over it all. He is often heard to say: 'Oh, these sweet and blessed promises, were it not for these I should sink.'

"'I am glad you came to my old cot' (said another man). 'I have been a wicked wretch. The newspaper was my Bible on the Sunday, but not now. Things are altered, blessed be God. That Red Testament is the one book for me now.'"

A SWEARING BARGEMAN WON.

Among other striking cases is the following:—"T. L. is a young man of about twenty-five years of age. He is a bargeman, and was a very rough, swearing sort of man. He married the daughter of a hawker. She was taken ill with typhoid fever. I visited her, and she was brought to the Lord. Then she became anxious about her husband, and we prayed for him. I had spoken to him before. He was led to attend the hall and the Bible class. I gave him a Bible, and gradually the Word of God enlightened him, and now he is a most consistent Christian, and not ashamed to own his Lord. The change is so marked that all his mates talk about it, and both himself and his wife are happy in Christ."

VISITATION OF THE SICK.

An important part of the work is the visitation of the sick. The following are mentioned by a missionary as words with which he is greeted by sick ones:—"I'm so lonely. I've prayed to God to send someone to-day." One who has lain for thirteen years said, "I've been counting on your coming to-day; I cannot read and the days are so long." Another said, "I haven't been able to get to church for twelve years." The same worker mentions the case of an invalid who, though paralyzed, manages to do needlework, spending the money she earns in buying tracts. A copy of "Come to Jesus," which she gave to a friend had been the means of leading that soul to seek the Lord.

AMONG THE HARVESTERS.

"At one village, writes a missionary, "a group of harvesters were drinking outside a public-house. I offered them tracts which they took and commenced to read. They were reading when I returned; or rather, one who was a good reader was reading to the group. Tears were rolling down his cheeks and he said, 'That is a good tract; have you any more?' I gave them a selection of suitable ones. As I left, the reader, who appeared in earnest, said, 'I am going to turn over.' I told him it was Christ as his Saviour he needed, and the power that changed me would and could change him. I conducted a Bible reading at Ham Farm on two occasions, and four Gospel meetings. The weather somewhat hindered me, drenching me two or three times, but often on these wet days I met the men who could not work in the harvest field."

AN ENCOURAGING STORY.

The meeting concluded with an impressive address by Rev. D. B. Hankin, in the course of which he encouraged his hearers with a story of his early days of ministry in a village. One day he visited a family of father, mother, and grown up sons and daughters. They repelled him, shutting the door in his face. He then knelt on the ground outside the house, and prayed God that He would bring the family to Himself. Three years ago, or forty years afterwards, he received a letter from one of the daughters, stating that his prayer had been answered to the letter. Mr. Hankin added that he related this story to the missionaries that they might never despair, but go on sowing the good seed.

Friends' Foreign Missions.

A GATHERING always anticipated with much eagerness in connection with the annual assembly of the Society of Friends is the missionary meeting. This took place a few days ago at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate Street, E.C. Among the outstanding features of the year the report mentions that ten new missionaries have been sent out to different fields, the largest accession being to the Madagascar Mission. The total number of missionaries is now ninety-four, of whom thirty-five are men. This proportion is not regarded as satisfactory, and it is felt that in India especially the fewness of male missionaries is a serious matter.

While the Boxer rioting and pillage, and other troubles, caused the year to be a sad one in China, gratifying progress has been made, particularly at Chung-King and T'ung Ch'uan. In Ceylon the work is carried on in two languages—Sinhalese and Tamil. Several losses by death and retirement have been experienced in Syria, but in spite of these occurrences the outlook is hopeful. The village work here is making much progress. One of the most promising features of the efforts at Brumana is the night school for men; while the meetings for mothers and factory girls have been warmly appreciated, and many others in the villages are reached by the house-to-house visitation and medical work.

Mr. Frederick Andrews presided, and pleaded for more young men, especially for India. In Madagascar 26,000 persons met under the care of Friends. Explaining the financial position of the Society, Sir Joseph Storrs Fry showed that the deficit announced last year had been defrayed by a gift from Mr. George Sturge; but the working of the year had also resulted in a deficit of over £6,000. The accounts, however, were healthier, and the income showed an advance of £1,300 over that of last year. Dr. Antonius J. Manasseh referred to the opportunities which abound in Syria, and the prospects in Western China were described by Mr. R. J. Davidson. Mr. Charles Replogle (Alaska) and Dr. William Wilson (secretary) also took part.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ENFIELD.

THE recent mission at Enfield, conducted by Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones, aroused increasing interest.

On the morning of Sabbath week, Dr. Henry preached at Christ Church, Chase Side, an eloquent sermon on the text: "Be not weary in well doing." The Enfield Chronicle says: "There was a large congregation, whose interested attention was sustained for nearly an hour and a quarter.

"In the afternoon a meeting of men was addressed in the Hall at Chase Side, which was three parts filled with men only. In the evening a good congregation assembled in the Baptist Chapel, where Mr. Armon Jones sang twice. The services at the various chapels were concluded a little earlier than usual to give the congregations the opportunity of attending the Mass Meeting addressed by Dr. Henry in the Chase Side Hall at a quarter past eight, at which there was a large attendance."

On the following afternoon Dr. and Mrs. Henry addressed a special meeting for women only. It proved one of the most successful gatherings of the mission. The hall was filled, and a goodly number of pledges were taken. The hall was full in the evening, when Rev. J. Pinchen presided.

Dr. Henry gave a striking address, in the course of which he said: "There was one personage in the New Testament who said: 'No drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of God.' Were there no other word in the Book that should be enough for us. What right have we as Christians to play with a thing which God associates with the destruction of the souls of men? You will not wonder, therefore, that I am here to try and persuade men and women to pledge themselves for the glory of God and the welfare of their brothers and sisters to take a stand against the evil.

At the Tuesday evening's meeting Rev. Thomas Bagley, of Edmonton, presided, and in opening the proceedings, heartily congratulated Dr. Henry upon the campaign he has been conducting throughout the country, and the people of Enfield on the success of his meetings. Dr. Henry chose "The great red dragon of drink" as his subject, and upon this he discoursed with much fluency and force.

On the following evening, when Mr. Durrant presided, Dr. Henry spoke on "Dynamics of Intemperance." His earnest address was full of illustrations and quotations from the Bible.

Other gatherings included a garden party at Bycullah House, by the kind invitation of Mr. Thomas Smith, who, in welcoming his guests, expressed his high appreciation of Dr. Henry's visit to Enfield, which, he said, had been greatly blessed. Dr. Henry then gave an interesting account of Temperance work in America.

IRELAND.

After a capital finish at Enfield, Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones proceeded to Ireland, where they have had two good meetings at Bessbrook, with the aid of Mrs. Richardson. Then came Newry, where the opening meeting was a large and enthusiastic one in the Town Hall, and about one hundred new pledges were secured.

Holidays for the Poor.—In pleading the cause of the sick and helpless poor, among whom the St. Giles' Christian Mission works, Mr. William Wheatley writes:—"The liberality of your readers has enabled us to send annually at this season of the year numbers of children and adults to our Holiday and Convalescent Homes at Maldon, in Essex, for a fortnight's holiday or more. We work among some of London's poorest and most needy denizens. There is no necessity for me to emphasize either the greatness of their need or the value of the benefit they derive from rest and change at the Home."

"Thou God Seest Me!"

THESE words, which are so familiar to us all, occur in the story of Hagar (Gen. xvi. 13) when she received her first promise concerning her son Ishmael. In chapter xxi. 14-20 we read how she afterwards became a wanderer and her son nearly died of thirst in the wilderness.

The meaning of his name is "God shall hear," and having made that promise, the Lord followed her in her journey, so that we read (xxi. 17) that "God heard the voice of the lad." It is a great thing for a child to bear a name which denotes a promise of God, but it is a greater thing still for each of us (whether we possess such a name or not) to be the objects of His tender care.

When we see the words "Thou God seest me," perhaps on a card upon the bedroom or nursery wall, I think we generally regard them as a WARNING, that we should not do anything wrong. This is a very true and important sense to put upon them, and it is well that we take pains to remember them. In the same sense the idea of God seeing us is found in Prov. v. 21: "The ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and He pondereth all his goings."

With Hagar the fact that God saw her was one of COMFORT in her affliction; and Psalm xxxiv. 15 shows us that, as in her case, God both sees and hears: "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and His ears are open unto their cry."

Therefore the text "Thou God seest me" brings either fear or comfort according to what it is we are doing. You naturally like your parents to see you when you are doing something kind or good; and equally naturally you do not like them to see you doing anything wrong.

Now I want you to notice that there was something Hagar did not want to see: "Let me not see the death of the child." But there was something else that God wanted her to see, and which she herself was very thankful to see: "God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water." We cannot see God with our eyes, nor hear His voice with our ears; but we can see the tokens of His love in the blessings of life, and health, and home that come to each of us; and we can hear His voice in our conscience and in His Holy Word.

Sometimes we are in trouble, as Hagar was, and everything seems gloomy and unhappy. Then is the time to ask God to open our eyes, that we may "look on the bright side," and we shall generally find that there is "a silver lining to every cloud." When the two disciples were on their way to Emmaus, they "walked and were sad," because they thought they had lost their Lord for ever. Jesus drew near and talked with them, and later opened He their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures." That is what we need that He should do for us, and I hope your Bible-searching has done a good deal in this direction for many of you.

God does not want you to think of Him only as seeing your wrong-doing. He wants to be your Friend and Counsellor and Guide, as One who takes pleasure in all that makes you happy. Of the nation of Israel Isaiah said (lxii. 4, 5), "The Lord delighteth in thee . . . thy God shall rejoice over thee"; and of the good man, that "The Lord delighteth in His way" (Ps. xxxvii. 23).

"Wouldn't God like to see me in my new nighty?" said a little girl to her mother the other day. Whether she meant it so or not, the fact is true that God does take pleasure in what pleases us, so long as our pleasure is a right and not a wrong one. And whenever a boy or girl is pure and earnest in play, industrious at school, attentive and kind in the home, and patient in illness or when things "go wrong," then God is pleased; and whatever pleases Him will please our dear ones and ourselves most of all.

So I want you to think of God in this way—that it makes a difference to Him as well as to you how you live, and ask His help that the words, "Thou God seest me," may bring a message of joy in your life, and not only one of warning or fear.

LESSONS FROM THE RECHABITES.
(Jer. xxxv. 1-11, 18, 19.)

THE Rechabites were a tribe of desert wanderers; we should probably speak of them as Arabs. They were descended from Jethro, or Hobab, the father-in-law of Moses (Ex. xviii. 9; Num. x. 29-32; Judges i. 16). They came into Canaan with the Israelites; but, in order to preserve their independence, they lived in tents instead of in a fixed habitation.

Jonadab, the son of Rechab, whose command concerning drinking wine, given 300 years before, had so great an effect on his descendants, was a friend of Jehu, and was associated to some extent with the rigorous extermination of the relics of Baal-worship (2 Kings x. 15-23). His injunctions were twofold. His descendants were to live a pilgrim life, not building houses, nor sowing the land, nor tending vineyards on the terraced hills. They were a living parable of the life that all God's children are called to live, sitting loose on what they have, and looking for heaven as their true home (Heb. x. 34, xi. 9, 10, 13-16). We are reminded of the words with which the chronicler describes the experiences of the Pilgrim Fathers, who "left that goodly and pleasant city (Leyden), which had been their resting-place near twelve years; but they knew that they were pilgrims, and looked not much on those things, but lifted up their eyes to the heavens, their dearest country, and quieted their spirits."

The other part of Jonadab's charge was that neither men nor women, old or young, should drink wine. What a wise prohibition was this, and what a blessing it would be if every father would leave this solemn charge to his children and grand-children! It would be of more precious worth than a huge fortune of gold and silver. How many ample fortunes have been squandered in drink, and all it leads to; and how many fortunes have been built up by those who have lived frugal, temperate, abstemious lives! I earnestly appeal to all young people who read these words never to drink wine; and if God should give them some day families of their own, let their influence and teaching be strongly in the same direction.

At this time Jaazaniah was the elder or chief of the clan; and he, with the whole tribe, was brought into the temple courts, into the chamber of the holy man. Everything apparently was done to impress the Rechabites with the religious sanctions of the occasion. It was not a light test to which they were exposed. It was a prophet who set before them flagons and cups of wine. They were assembled in the sacred precincts of God's house. Men, who had dedicated their lives to the Divine service were standing near. But, notwithstanding all these solemn sanctions, they refused. How steadfast was their purpose, and how unflinching their obedience.

The primary lesson, which the incident was designed to teach, was the difference between their obedience to the commands of their founder and the indifference with which Israel treated God's commands—"They refused to incline their ear, or hearken." It was a sad and bitter contrast! How often we find that man will be moral, but not religious; good in his family relations, but wanting in devotion towards God; careful of his parents, but careless of his religious duty!

But for us all there is the further lesson of steadfastness to principle, in the teeth of strong opposition and of carefully-prepared stratagem to turn us from our purpose. Even when venerable and religious precedents are brought forward to induce us to swerve from our steadfast purpose, we must stand true to it. We must not be as reeds shaken with the wind.

Notice the performance of this family. The Rechabites are mentioned in contemporary annals in connection with the Fall of Jerusalem. In the twelfth century they were 100,000 in number. In modern times the traveller Wolff again discovered them as a wandering tribe. The fear of God, reverence to high and holy family traditions, the life of self-discipline and self-restraint, abstinence from strong drink—these are the conditions of long life and lasting influence. And they are rendered possible in Jesus Christ our Lord.

C.E. NOTE.

The North Wales Christian Endeavour Union, at its half-yearly meetings, passed a resolution against the increase of Sunday labour in Wales. Special reference was made to the running of electric trams on Sundays between Wrexham and Johnstown. The Endeavourers, in their resolution, pointed out that already the running of the trams on Sundays has been availed of for the purpose of obtaining drink, contrary to the spirit of the Sunday Closing Act. Other evil consequences were pointed out, and the company was appealed to to give consideration to other than financial interests.

Christian Endeavourers in Force.

THE Christian Endeavour Movement has just celebrated its thirteenth Convention in this country, the historic city of Newcastle being the place of meeting, and from May 30 until June 3 thousands of delegates assembled from all parts of Great Britain. Preparatory prayer meetings were held on May 29, and on Saturday afternoon a civic welcome and reception of delegates was given at the Town Hall by the Mayor, Sir William Haswell Stephenson, D.L.

Two welcome meetings were held in the evening in which several ministers and local Endeavourers took part. In St. George's Drill Hall, an address was delivered by Rev. J. E. Roberts, M.A., B.D.; and in Tent Endeavour Rev. Hugh Black, M.A., attracted a vast audience. He based his address upon the words "Let no man despise thy youth."

A large congregation assembled on Sunday morning to hear the Convention sermon by Rev. Hugh Black on the words, "There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of the kingdom, and their laws are diverse from all people, neither keep they the King's laws." Graphically he told the story of the Persian Empire, and pointed out that the Roman Empire made the same charge against the early Christians. They were persecuted for their singularity, because they were of Rome and did not do as Rome did they were charged with sedition and rebellion. To an extent it was quite true they had turned the world upside down, they had laws diverse from all people, they stood alone, apart from others. Thus would progress ever be gained—by dissent. There must be differences—lines of cleavage or there would be stagnation and ultimately death. The Church is an object-lesson to the world, inducing men to strive for a high life of thought and conduct. The Christian faith emphasizes individual responsibility—the soul responsible to God alone. Great souls were ever alone; the more exceptional a man became the smaller grew his circle of friends. In the making of a great character there must be contempt for criticism, and a man must dare to be singularly good.

Sunday afternoon reminded one of a camp meeting; one end of the marquee had been removed, and seats were carried into the field beyond. This mass meeting was enthusiastic to the extreme. Rev. Tolefree Parr was the speaker. Convention gatherings met in many of the surrounding districts throughout the day, Rev. W. Y. Fullerton conducting an evangelistic service at the close. He spoke with quiet earnestness from the text, "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved." It was a cause of joy to those present at the Monday meetings to hear that some souls had sought and found pardon as the outcome of the Sunday services.

Monday morning the city was astir early. Sunrise prayer meetings were arranged wherever possible. At 9.30 the real business of the day began. Two devotional meetings conducted by local ministers were well attended, thousands of people assembled in St. George's Drill Hall and Tent Endeavour. The chairman at the former being Rev. Richard Richard; at the latter Rev. E. J. Gilchrist presided. In both places the topics selected for the speakers touched upon the springs of life. Mr. J. E. Dalton and Rev. A. J. Palmer spoke upon "Union with Christ." The Misses Gee and Bulmer earnestly emphasized the need of being "filled with the Spirit," and Messrs. H. Harmsworth and E. J. Woods gave useful and helpful advice on "Christian Fellowship." Mr. H. Harmsworth remarked that the C.E. movement had often been accused of taking the young people away from the weeknight services of the church; but from personal experience he found a larger percentage of Christian Endeavour members than church members attended these services.

The open-air demonstration in the Haymarket was led by Rev. J. T. Shaw, of Leeds, at noon, and quiet-hour meetings were conducted in several churches at midday. Schools of method always appeal to a real active Endeavourer, and three of these were conducted during the afternoon simultaneously. It was no uncommon occurrence during the Convention day to see strangers introduced by the badge alone greeting each other, making notes of conversation, gleaning scraps of news, and giving words of encouragement.

Three popular meetings were also held in the afternoon. A great evangelistic service for children conducted by Rev. J. McNeil Little, with a choir of 200 children from the Children's Mission; a Junior Rally—when the exercise entitled, "The Endeavour Coal-Mine" was admirably rendered by a band of juniors and intermediates, assisted by the Boys' Band of the "Wellesley" training ship. The exercise depicted the Word of God as a mine. It was divided into three parts: (1) "The Value of Truth"; (2) "How to Get the Truth"; (3) "The Uses of Truth." There was also a praise service. The programme for this had been divided under two heads: "The Evangel of Jesus," and "The Music of the Great Revivals."

The subject of the evening meetings was, "The Conduct of Life," the three topics being, "The Pure Heart," "The Pure Home," "The Pure City." Revs. Albert Swift, T. E. Miller, M.A., J. Tolefree Parr, W. Justin Evans being among the speakers. At each of these meetings the chairman's address was upon "Endeavour Advance," based upon the report of the hon. sec., Rev. W. Knight Chaplin.

The report showed advance in every direction. Since Manchester, 1902, 490 new societies have been enrolled in the British C.E. Union—nearly as many as in the first five years of the movement's history in this country put together. The advance has not only been in figures, but in quality and variety of work. Reports have been received from 5,033 societies, and 231 societies were too recently registered to be asked for reports. The information received states that 11,687 active Endeavourers have become church members during the year. The 5,264 societies return the following authentic information:—Active members, 150,833; associate, 53,869; honorary, 19,482. Many societies are not yet affiliated with the Union, 1,500 at least of these being those in connection with Primitive Methodist Churches. During the year, 8,057 associate members have been transferred to the active list, proving C.E. to be one of the great evangelising forces of the world.

PAUL AT ROME (Acts xxviii. 16-24, 30, 31).

GOLDEN TEXT.—Rom. i. 16.

MALTA in the time of Paul was under Roman rule (v. 2). Language, foreign to Greek or Roman. People, kind but heathen. Since A.D. 1800 has belonged to England. A creek called St. Paul's bay still so named, also a church called St. Publius was seen in 1820. By a sign of his Apostleship, the gift of healing, Paul won the hearts of the people to hear the Gospel he was ever ready to preach (Rom. i. 15).

"WE WENT TOWARD ROME."

Landed at Puteoli, seven days' rest and Christian fellowship (v. 14). On the march to the seat of the Roman Emperor (v. 15), words of welcome, Aquila and Priscilla probably with the others to meet the beloved Apostle; and he—"thanked God and took courage." Along the Appian Way, under the arch of Drusius, and "the desire of his heart" was granted to him (Rom. xv. 23).

What did the crowd look like? A regiment of soldiers conveying a travel-stained gang of chained prisoners to the guardroom of Cæsar's palace.

Who was actually entering the metropolis of the world? An ambassador of the King of kings (Eph. vi. 20) coming to proclaim the good news of the Gospel (John iii. 16). No band of music, but angels rejoiced, and so

"WE CAME TO ROME."

Julius delivered his charge to the official custodian of accused persons, who had to be tried before the Emperor. But apparently special orders were given concerning Paul (v. 16).

"Not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," his real work at Rome began (a prisoner only for safeguard, by God's overruling love) (Rom. viii. 28).

PAUL IN ROME.

The Apostle's first care was to remove prejudice from the minds of the resident Jews, not for his own sake, but for the Gospel's. The edict of Claudius had been revoked, about 60,000 dwelt in the city. "To the Jew first" (Rom. i. 16). The Messiah, whom Paul recognised in the Lord Jesus Christ, and His resurrection (Act xiii. 32-38). Included in the prophecy of Simeon (Luke ii. 32). A congregation of Jews with preacher chained to a Roman soldier. Expound, testify, persuade, but not even Paul could turn one soul to Jesus. That is the work of the Holy Spirit. So too with each child in the Sunday-school. "Lord save ME" (v. 24). Paul's last appeal to his own nation. Paul's chain was "a blessing in disguise," for "my bonds became manifest in Christ throughout all the Prætorian guard" (Phil. i. 12-14). The Gentiles' blessing (Rom. xi. 11). "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified" (1 Cor. ii. 2).

Under whatever circumstances the Apostle reached a place his aim was to preach the Gospel. Wherever he found himself, there was his mission field. Wrecked at Malta, exhausted, drenched, and suffering; but he left a church there. Before the Sanhedrim, or a little company of women by the waterside. Before Agrippa, Bernice, and Festus, with their assembled suites, or to the one soldier at his side, or the slave in the prison. "All souls are Mine." Ezek. xviii. 4. "Jesus died for all." 2 Cor. v. 15. "The beloved Physician" closes his account with a beautiful picture of "Paul the aged," preaching, teaching with the same bold spirit of Acts iv. 21. Martyrs, missionaries, home workers, hidden saints in humble life, and little children who love and serve Jesus, for them too there is "a Book of remembrance." Mal. iii. 16.

LESSONS.

1. Paul's motto (1 Tim. vi. 8). His rule (2 Thess. ii. 8). The lesson learned (Phil. iv. 11). He could not work at his trade as a prisoner, the Lord knew his need; (v. 10), "things necessary" (Matt. vi. 32). Paul learned by experience (Phil. iv. 19).

2. The Lord pays liberally kindness shown to His servants (Prov. xix. 17, and Heb. xiii. 2); prove counts it as done to himself (Matt. xxv. 40).

3. SIN "a venomous beast (v. 4). The fangs were grooved, down which the poison flowed from the root gland into the blood of the victim. A serpent in Eden (Gen. iii. 1). The first miraculous sign for healing was a serpent (Num. xxi. 9). The Antidote (John iii. 14). Remedy (1 John i. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 56, 57).

4. The enemy tries to make young folk think the way to heaven is strewn with thorns only. 2 Tim. iii. 12 is quite true, but a life of unselfish love will find many a sweet flower also.

5. Paul's life and work was recorded for our teaching by Luke; is there a record being kept of my life and doings? (Prov. xx. 11). Am I living for ETERNITY (Rev. xx. 12-15.

A YOUNG MAN NOT ASHAMED.

A few years ago a young man, employed in a large London drapery establishment, was able to exert a marvellous influence over his fellow-employés. In the dormitory in which he slept he was accustomed to read aloud a short portion of the Scriptures, and so tactfully did he carry out the practice, that the other occupants of the room listened attentively night by night. There are to-day men occupying good positions in various parts of the globe who look back with gratitude to the days when they learned to love God's Word in that dormitory. The young draper had grace to say with the Apostle, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation, to everyone that believeth" (Golden Text).

DESIRING TO HEAR.

News came to hand, some time ago, of an endeavour in an Australian church to provide for deaf worshippers who were desirous of hearing the Gospel. A diaphragm was arranged in the vicinity of the pulpit from which the sound of the minister's voice was carried to the ears of such of the congregation who were afflicted with any deafness. In order to hear the Word of God the worshippers were compelled to accept the means offered; and those in Rome who desired to hear the Apostle had to enter his place of confinement, and there listen to his words (v. 22). Many are to-day stone-deaf regarding the Gospel because of a continual refusal to listen to the voice of God. To all who "desire to hear" some opportunity is given. In the Scriptures, in Nature, and in Providence, the Lord continually speaks.

A BIGGER BOAT AND MORE VOLUNTEERS.

At the time the "Princess Alice" foundered in the Thames, there was a boatman who launched forth on the darkened waters to rescue the drowning victims. The good man found a copious harvest of human lives, and soon his little bark was overcrowded. He is said to have exclaimed piteously, "Oh, that I had a bigger boat! I could save so many more." In higher sense, all who seek to-day to save souls are crying to the living God. They ask now, not for "bigger boat," but for more volunteers. Paul, who preached Jesus as the hope of Israel, preached also the larger hope, the salvation sent unto the Gentiles (v. 28). The world-wide Gospel of to-day is the "bigger boat" for all who believe; and where now men are perishing in the dark waters of heathendom the fault lies, not in the salvation, but in the lack of volunteers. Men are needed in all directions, willing to join in rescuing the perishing and caring for the dying among their fellow men.

The Canary Islands.—For several years Mrs T. M. Macknight has been carrying on Gospel work in the Canaries. It is a needy sphere: "The curés tell the people that the English are not Christians, but atheists, and that they have no churches! The people know nothing of God; they worship idols, and obey not a single commandment of God's Word." Mrs. Macknight's work among the children is full of interest. Coloured pictures are much appreciated and useful as displacing those of the Virgin. Mrs N. W. Osborne, 9, Haycroft Road, Brixton Hill, S.W., will be despatching some such papers to Mrs Macknight, and will be glad to receive parcels in aid.

Home Missions.

Retreat at Littlehampton.

A FEW days ago, Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant and Mrs. Sarjeant welcomed about one hundred and forty friends to the thirteenth annual retreat held at the Home of Rest, Littlehampton. We assembled with feelings of great expectation, and we have not been disappointed. The helpful conversations round the tables, the accessibility of the speakers, all tend to close relationships. Much time was given to prayer in the larger gatherings, and also in impromptu and delightfully unconventional meetings. Family prayers each morning brought together a congregation of at least a hundred, and a foretaste of the blessing which every day had in store.

The first address, on Sunday morning, was given by Mr. DARLOW SARJEANT on 1 John i. 7-9, "If the Christian need not continue in sin, need sin continue in the Christian?" This opening question was fully answered by the teaching and testimony of the days which followed. In the evening Miss SCHOFIELD spoke on "The Baptism of the Holy Spirit," and Rev. A. CHAMPION on the "much mores" of Rom. v.

On Monday afternoon Mrs. DARLOW SARJEANT led a gathering for "mothers," who met definitely to plead for the conversion of their children. In another room all the "fathers" joined in the same request. At the same time SISTER DORA held another meeting for girls.

At the missionary meeting, Mr. CHAS. COOK gave an exceedingly interesting account of travels in Spain, Italy, France, and Russia; revealing a terrible state of things in the prisons of those countries. Pastor SCHAARSCHMIDT (Berlin) told his story in German, charmingly interpreted by his daughter. Mr. PAGET WILKES, in an earnest and convincing manner, urged the claims of Japan. He told of the harvest ready to be gathered in, and the need of men and women filled with the Holy Spirit. Rev. Dr. MOSCHOU, of the Greek Evangelical Church in Smyrna, recounted how the Truth as it is in Jesus had reached his heart when he was learning texts as a boy at school. There, without knowing what it meant at the time, he experienced a change of heart. On the Sunday afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. GARDINER gave a cheering account of mission work in Ceylon.

The Bible readings given at the morning and evening sessions were all plain and forceful. Truth was presented in a diversity of ways. If one thing was emphasized more than another, it was "Love." In an address on Saturday Rev. HERBERT WOOD asked, "When did you last hear a sermon on Love? When did you last preach one? When did you last live one? Love must not only be our nature, but our atmosphere." Mrs. WARREN spoke of the vision of the moving multitude; and the absolute necessity of looking at them in the spirit of the Master's Divine compassion and tenderness.

The quiet and forceful addresses given by Rev. STUART HOLDEN were much appreciated. On Friday morning he spoke of the hindrances to a real baptism of the Holy Spirit, and the awful possibility of stopping short and not entering in. A searching address was also given on "Restitution," with another on the "Love of Jonathan for David" (2 Sam. i. 26), as illustrating the love which should subsist between the believer and his Lord.

Throughout the Convention conviction grew with an intensity which sent men and women into solitude with God. Reality has been stamped upon many lives as never before. Holy joy was unrestrained, testimony and prayer were irrepressible.

From the upper room, so sacred in its memories, Christians have gone forth to be scattered among the people, channels cleansed and fit for the Master's use. E. B.

A Plea for the Villages.

And after him was Shammah, the son of Agee the Hararite. And the Philistines were gathered together into a troop ("for foraging" marg.), where was a piece of ground full of lentiles, and the people fled from the Philistines But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it and slew the Philistines; and the Lord wrought a great victory (2 Sam. xxiii. 11, 12).

The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart (1 Sam. xvi. 7).

WE are apt to observe results, and overlook the cause. Hence, in the statement regarding Shammah, his prowess in slaying the Philistines' foraging party, and winning a brilliant victory single-handed, stands foremost in our minds. We account him worthy of a place in the front rank among David's mighty men, because of what he accomplished, rather than because of the motive that urged him to attempt the deed and carry it to a successful issue.

Were there not urgent reasons why he should thus do and dare, and at all costs and hazards defend the piece of ground? It could not have been for the intrinsic value of the crop—that in itself was of little worth—but to him it represented an immense deal.

I. First it was David's, and everything that belonged to David was of importance to him, even though it were but a few acres of lentiles or a patch of barley (1 Chron. xi. 13). It was the property of his king, and therefore was to be guarded, fought for, and kept. If all others fled for fear, he would stand for his sovereign lord and defend his king's possessions for his sake, because they were his.

There is great need for an army of such Shammahs to-day. The enemy is coming in like a flood in many forms. Our Lord's rights and possessions are being assailed on all hands. Where are the Shammahs? We speak of "The Lord's Work in the Villages." Do we really believe that the efforts of His servants here and there, carried on in His name for His glory and the spread of His truth is His work? If so, can we set too high a value upon it? Shall we not prize it, not because of its face value, its material or visible results (though these are of no little importance), but simply because it is the Lord's work?

II. Further, Shammah doubtless considered that for the enemy to capture the least bit of David's property would be a dishonour and a loss to the King, and he must therefore stand and defend it for the sake of the King's honour; for "because he had maintenance from the King's palace, it was not meet for him to see the King's dishonour" (Ezra iv. 14); therefore it must be "stood" for.

If the enemy of God and man capture our villages (and he has sent out his foraging parties and they bid fair to pillage the Lord and His people of much precious spoil), shall we fear and fly, or stand idly by and let God's work flag and the foe rob His harvests?

III. But did not Shammah consider how much toil and labour had been expended by David's servants on that patch of tilled land, to produce the crop now endangered? Should all this go for nothing and pass into the enemy's hand? For David's servants' sakes he would do his best to protect it, and though all else fled from the Philistines, he, like Nehemiah after him, said, "Should such a man as I flee?" (Neh. vi. 11). And he therefore stood in the midst of the field and defended it.

It would appear from 1 Chron. xi. 13 that he was in close touch with the King, and knew what would please his lord—for he was "with David" on this occasion—so that in his gallant defence he knew he had the king's approval. It might be that the king was an eye-witness of the deed of valour, and, if so, how his kingly heart must have throbbed with emotion and delight at the sight of such heroic devotion. Whether he saw or not we cannot say; we are sure he knew of it, and Shammah had no reason to regret or be ashamed.

There are many such "patches of lentiles" that belong to our Lord in His great harvest field, parcels of ground that Satan aims to capture, but which some of God's Shammahs are standing by and defending. Who among the readers of these lines are helpers of such?

Children of Slumland.

IN a striking booklet, entitled, "The Babes in the Wood," Mrs. H. J. Kerwin again pleads the cause of the half-fed, ill-clad children of East London. These are the "babes," the "wood" being Epping Forest, where, at the Forest Cottage Homes, many of the little ones are received for a fortnight to a month's refreshing and invigorating air and good food, returning home with their health restored.

Among cases helped, Mrs. Kerwin specifies:—

C. C., eleven; fatherless. Mother supports herself and five children by making wooden horses. This child had never slept in a bed till she came to the Home.

A. W., thirteen; father out of work, mother and five children support all by peeling onions. Live in two rooms. A nice, bright girl; greatly enjoyed holiday in country.

J. B., thirteen; father just died, mother left with seven children, only two able to work, and all delicate. Mother most deserving of help.

J. H., twelve; father, box maker, but often too drunk to work. Four children, one earns a little and one is paralysed. Mother not able to work, through the ill-treatment of her husband; very poor. J. H. so thankful to be away from father.

A. H., eleven; father, a drayman, but had an accident, and been out of work for twenty-three weeks; seven children, only one able to earn anything. All delicate and very small for age.

Mrs. Kerwin (whose address is Inchcolm, Wallwood, Leytonstone, N.E.) adds: "I am unable in words to express my gratitude to friends, known and unknown, who for the past fifteen years have encouraged and helped me to do this work for God among these poor children; for without their kind assistance it would have been impossible for me to continue to aid these poor, sickly, helpless little ones."

Country Holidays for Working Girls.

AS spring and summer approach we are reminded that many workers in London shops, factories, and workrooms will hope for a brief holiday in the country. Many, however, will be unable to obtain more than a day off, or even a Saturday afternoon. In our London Young Women's Christian Association we have over 16,000 members, and we are anxious, through our Convalescent and Holiday Department, to enable many of these to spend one Saturday afternoon out of London during the next few months. We hope that many kind friends living near London or in the suburbs may be generously inclined to throw open their grounds, and give hospitality to parties of girls, varying in number from ten to 100.

We are also anxious to give a fortnight's holiday in one of our Holiday Homes at the seaside or in the country to those who by reason of low wage, sickness, or trouble cannot afford to pay for themselves. Subscriptions of two guineas will entitle to a free holiday of three weeks, or subscriptions of one guinea will entitle to a fortnight's assisted holiday, the candidate contributing 5s. weekly towards expense. The hon. secretary, Miss Butler, 13, Onslow Square, S.W., will very gladly acknowledge donations sent to her and give any information about the work.—Your obedient servants,

Missionary Students.

ONE direct result of the spiritual blessing at the Grove Street Institute, Glasgow, and specially at the recent Missionary Conference, is that over thirty young men and young women have expressed their desire and willingness to go forth as foreign missionaries, if the way should be opened for them. Meantime, we have formed them into a missionary band, meeting fortnightly for missionary and Bible study, and for prayer.

A valuable adjunct to this would be a small missionary library; and believing that there must be many friends who would be glad to spare books of this description out of their libraries for such a purpose, I take the liberty of writing to say that we shall be most thankful for help in this way. The books suitable are those on Exploration, Travel, and Residence in Foreign Lands, descriptive of foreign missionary work, on the general subject of foreign missions, on missionary and general Christian biography, and books to aid in Bible study.

Parcels may be addressed to the Institute; and gifts of money wherewith to purchase suitable books will also be welcome.—Yours, &c., P. WHYTOCK.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Canon Hay Aitken's Mission in Dublin.

Lord's Day last witnessed the close of Canon Hay Aitken's mission in Trinity Church, Dublin. The fortnight over which his visit extended has proved an eventful one in the lives of many.

Many souls have tasted and seen for the first time that the Lord is good; many others who had grown cold and wandered away in the paths of carelessness and indifference have been gloriously restored, while those who were the Lord's have been revived and stimulated to still greater effort in the future than in the past. Owing to this last-named result, the work in the ingathering of souls will not cease, even though the visit of the missioners has come to a termination, as there has been imparted to many of the Christians a genuine desire and eagerness to win souls. One of Canon Hay Aitken's addresses doubtless led in great measure to this. He took as his text: "How often would I have gathered . . . but ye would not," and said that these were the words of the great Gatherer; but he also reminded his audience of the words of the same One that "He that gathered not with me, scattereth."

The first week of the mission seemed to be the sowing time, and it was during the last week that the results were mostly to be seen. The opening addresses were devoted to foundation subjects, while during the closing nights the subjects dealt with were "Jesus as the friend of sinners," "How often would I have gathered, but ye would not," or as the preacher put it, "God's will v. man's will, and man's will carried the day," "Go in peace," "The Faith that saves." Most solemn and impressive after-meetings were held each night, and at these many miracles of grace were wrought.

In the closing verses of Titus ii. Canon Aitken found material for a series of persuasive and heart-touching addresses each midday during the fortnight. None who heard them could fail to have been brought to a point of fuller consecration and more zealous endeavour in the Master's cause. In these addresses on the spiritual life, Canon Aitken's line of thought was chiefly (1) the mission of grace—to bring salvation, and (2) the teaching of grace, both negative and positive, with its result upon the life.

Rev. James Nunn, of East Shefford, and Mrs. Crouch, who so faithfully assisted Canon Aitken, also had very successful times in their respective spheres of labour. Mrs. Crouch's meetings for women were well attended, and proved helpful to all. A word of special note should also be said of Mr. Nunn, whose winning disposition and remarkably simple way of putting the plan of salvation, so that even the youngest could understand it and grasp its meaning, made his work among the children a very happy one indeed, one that bore evident fruit, and which will, without a doubt, still further bring glory and satisfaction to Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me." H. J. R.

Mr. Henry Varley at Whyteleafe Tabernacle.

That the visit of this honoured servant of God might be fraught with much blessing has been the burden of many prayers, and we now rejoice that these petitions have been abundantly answered. Mr. Varley's was but a brief visit, but in the four services he held, much good was accomplished. On the Saturday evening, the subject of "Christian Manliness" was dwelt with; and on Sunday morning "The Profit of Godliness." In the afternoon the address was on "The Woman at the Well," and the evening sermon, on "Unbelief," was perhaps the most striking of the discourses; many must have felt the enormity of this sin as never before, and in the quiet hush at the conclusinn of the sermon many rose, at the invitation of the preacher to confess Christ. Our hearts are full of gratitude to God for the ministry of this beloved herald of the Cross.

Gerald R. Coultas (Pastor).

Rev. J. Lyall in New Zealand.

Rev. James Lyall continues to meet with much encouragement in his New Zealand missions. Of the Christchurch meetings, The Outlook says:—"The afternoon meetings were well attended, and were a means of strength and deepening grace to a large number of Christians. Three remarkable testimony meetings were held, especially the one on the closing night, when a number of young men testified boldly to blessing received through the teaching of the missioner. A number of young men and women testified to having accepted Christ. The last Sunday evening in the Canterbury Hall saw a crowded audience, and the power of the Spirit was very manifest." At the mission subsequently held at Sydenham, "the addresses to Christians and unsaved were very powerful. Towards the end of the week the attendance largely increased, and God's power was manifest in the saving of souls and the evident concern and conviction of others."

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr's Missions.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has conducted a United Mission under the auspices of the Fenny Stratford and District Free Church Council. The meetings were well attended, and great good was done. The power of God was graciously manifested in the leading of many precious souls to decision for Christ. Such a mission has never before been witnessed in the town. Upwards of 130 have professed conversion, mostly young people. In addition, the Churches have been abundantly blessed, and Christians have been strengthened in the faith. We give God the praise, and trust that still more fruit will yet be gathered as a result of the mission.

W. E. Burton.

Mr. Tolefree Parr has also conducted a mission at the Congregational Church, Redhill, with gratifying results. The way had been most carefully prepared by the pastor (Rev. J. Gardner) and his willing band of helpers. The congregations were large, and the interest deepened day by day. On the second Sunday a procession of men was formed, headed by a brass band. Notwithstanding the deluging rain at the time of starting, nearly 200 men assembled. In the church, which was filled with men, ten gave themselves to Christ and several took inquirers' cards away with them. Altogether about 160 cases of decision are recorded and over thirty temperance pledges.

Mr. John Hawkins at Plymouth.

The friends of the Railway Mission and St. Andrew's Hall Mission lately joined in a special evangelistic effort, when Mr. John Hawkins set forth the glorious Gospel in an attractive manner to audiences which increased in numbers as the days sped swiftly away. Believers, as well as others, received much blessing from the Thursday evening address upon the "Second Coming of Christ," followed the next evening by one upon the "Great White Throne." The plain, true teaching will remain with many.

On the concluding evening Mr. Hawkins gave the story of his life, "From Gipsy to Evangelist for the Railway Mission." The hall was full, about 500 being present, and all giving undivided attention to the wonderful story. Our Heavenly Father has set His blessing upon the labour of His servant. Some twenty-four precious souls sought the Lord Jesus Christ; among them were rich and poor, old and young. To Him be all the praise. C.

A mission was recently conducted in the Baptist Church, Bellshill, N.B. (Rev. G. Harper), by Mr. John Climie. Quite a number of hopeful cases of decision for Christ are reported. Christians were also greatly helped by the instructive addresses of the evangelist.

The Gospel services in connection with the Blackpool Y.M.C.A. were commenced for the season in the Hippodrome on Sunday last. Rev. W. G. Pope, the speaker, was for eleven years a missionary among the Arabs in North Africa, and Mr. John Duxbury, of Manchester, recited "The Greatest of These," and in the evening "The Book of Job." The attendances were encouraging, and three outdoor services were also held. L. J.

Mr. Tennyson Smith concluded his season's campaign with an effective fortnight's mission in Liverpool. The crusade opened with a demonstration of Bands of Hope, temperance societies, &c., in the square fronting St. George's Hall, to welcome the lecturer. A procession was formed to escort him to Byrom Hall, where the mission was held. The enthusiasm increased with every meeting, and the opposition of a representative of the Trade only served to intensify it.

Rev. Jesse Mayo, the Australian evangelist, has been holding meetings in Toledo, Ohio, and the nearby places for ten weeks. While it must be said that the conditions were not always favourable for striking and manifold results, there has been a quickening of the spiritual lives of the church members and a goodly number added to the churches where he laboured. Mr. Mayo addressed two large audiences of men only in the largest theatre in our city under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., and quite a number of men decided to accept Christ.

Fred. A. Brown,
General Secretary, Toledo Y.M.C.A.

An evangelistic mission of a highly encouraging character has been conducted in connection with Lake Road Baptist Church, Portsmouth (pastor, Rev. G. Roberts Hern), by Mr. Henry Thorne, for twenty-three days. Ten days were spent at the London Road, where the results were very specially gratifying, and the remainder of the time at Lake Road. The Bible readings were very instructive, and the mission services and Gospel addresses were marked by earnest and persuasive appeals. A very large number of persons have been led to decision, and there are abundant reasons for joy and gladness.

Various Welsh fairs have been visited of late by members of the London Open-Air Mission, and with the happiest results. At Brecon, Messrs. Grey. Alexander, and Sergeant Pullinger had remarkably blessed services. The homes of many of the people were visited, tracts distributed, and personal interviews with sinners took place. Large open-air meetings were also held by the evangelists, whose work was rendered additionally attractive by means of a banner, lamp, and harmonium. A large number of eager helpers, brothers and sisters, lent willing aid, and persevering prayer was transformed to praise when sinners decided for Christ. Devoir Thomas.

We have had a most refreshing time by a visit of Mr. F. Chapman to Folkestone Road Hall, Walthamstow. A great interest was awakened from the very commencement, the mission having been preceded by a week of prayer. Christians were brought together in unity of spirit and oneness of heart. Numbers and interest increased as time went on; the large hall was full on Sundays, and there were good congregations each week night. Originally fixed for one week only, the mission was extended, and after the extension there was an ingathering of precious souls every night. Sunday prayer meetings at 7.30 a.m., open-air meetings on Saturday nights, and Bible talks to Christians preceding the Gospel meetings, have been pleasing features of the work. All hearts and minds have been focussed upon the Person of Jesus as Saviour and Sanctifier, and the power of the Holy Ghost has manifested Him to the conversion of souls and the building up of God's people.

Requests for Prayer.

That great blessing may be given on missions to be conducted by Mr. R. McLean in July, August, and September.

That a dear brother and his wife, who for many years have disregarded the call of Jesus, may be led now to accept Him as their Saviour and Master.

Personalia.

Miss M. M. Orsman, who for some time past has been a sympathetic helper of her father, Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., in his work at Golden Lane, E.C., and, later, at Costers' Hall, Hoxton, was married on Thursday last to Mr. Alfred E. L. Devonald.

To the deep regret of all concerned, Rev. E. L. Hamilton has, for reasons of health, severed his connection with the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, Vineyards, Bath, after a devoted and fruitful pastorate of eleven years. Rev. A. W. Evans, who succeeds, has been for six years assistant to Rev. F. B. Meyer. Mr. Hamilton has undertaken to act as the home representative of the Egypt General Mission, and will continue to reside at Combe Down.

At Epsom Races.

LOOKING back upon the past week of arduous service for the King at this great carnival of evil we find much to praise the Lord for.

He has been with us from first to last, opening the people's hearts, compelling their attention, quieting their tumult, and in some happy cases leading them to the Saviour.

Much earnest prayer was offered, not only by ourselves, but by friends all over the country, that the cherished liberty to preach the Gospel on the Racecourse itself, of which we were deprived last year, might be restored to us. Praise God, the prayer was answered, for while the authorities would not permit any meetings, whether by tipsters or anyone else, in front of the grand stand, no other hindrance whatever was placed in our way, and we were enabled day by day to occupy a splendid position on the course, close to the winning post, and on the extreme right of the grand stand. For this glorious victory let many devout hallelujahs arise!

Day by day the united forces of the London City Mission male choir, under the leadership of Mr. A. Williams, and of the Open-Air Mission—the whole band numbering forty men—heralded forth the Gospel in song and speech. God gave the Word; He also bestowed the power, and made our hearts rejoice in His realized presence. The service on the forenoon of "Derby Day" was a wonderful one. Rarely have we seen so large, so fixed, and so attentive a crowd. Thousands in the aggregate must have heard the message during the two-and-a-half hours of the service. Rarely, too, have we heard such a splendid succession of telling addresses, interspersed with beautiful singing that enchained attention.

Some received the message there and then. One notable case was that of a Canadian gentleman who had never before attended a race. Accompanied by his son, he heard the Word while seated on the grass close by, and, being spoken with, became the subject of convicting and converting grace, leaving the scene, it is believed, a new man in Christ.

A new booklet, issued by the O.A.M., was distributed to the number of 10,000. Beautifully got up, it contains the story of the conversion of the late beloved Edward Bacheler Russell, under the title, "A Racing Man's Experience." It is the unanimous testimony of the workers that in all their experience at Epsom they do not remember so willing and even eager a reception of any publication. It went among aristocrats who will seldom deign to glance at the open-air preacher, among bookmakers and the racing fraternity generally; and indeed, among "all sorts and conditions of men."

On Sunday and Thursday evenings the gipsies were visited in their encampments on the Downs, numerous short services being held among them. They gave a splendid hearing, and were most thankful for the visits.

Miss Alexander and her niece, Miss Hay, again provided the very kindest hospitality, and all the workers were made comfortable.

For this "Jubilee" effort and for the eternal issues of blessing which we are sure will follow we give praise to God. FRANK COCKREM.

By the blessing of God, the Racecourse Mission have been permitted, for the fourteenth successive year, to carry on work during Derby week. Our tent was the centre of much work for the Master.

There was a large band of voluntary workers from many parts of the country present. One of them who, with two friends, had come from Newcastle-on-Tyne, unexpectedly met a relative on the racecourse, and within an hour had the joy of seeing him off on his way home—rejoicing in a Saviour found when on his knees on Epsom Downs. Another worker who had come among us for the first time, told how his thoughts had first been turned to Jesus Christ by a hymn we sang one Derby day some years ago, and which so attracted his attention that he followed our workers about the course, and was present at all the meetings held during the afternoon.

Another worker, after the Derby was over, offered one of our special Scripture portions, entitled, "How to make money," to a well-dressed gentleman, who took it and passed it on. He immediately returned, however, and said, "'How to make money!' I've lost my all to-day. I wish I was like you—you're on the right side. I'm in a web! Give me one of your Gospels!" And with a "God bless you" from the worker, he hurried away.

A number of meetings were held during the week, one on the morning of Derby Day being of more than two hours' duration, when many hundreds of people heard the Gospel in song and testimony.

Some 750 policemen and telegraph boys availed themselves of the use of the tent for rest and refreshment; and after racing was over on Wednesday there were present at the minstrels' tea about sixty of the "profession," who had been working on the course during the day. After a few earnest words of exhortation from Mr. Collard they learned the refrain of the "Glory Song," and, with their voices and various instruments, made an orchestral choir more remarkable in its composition and motley in its appearance, perhaps, than any that has hitherto sung this famous Gospel song.

O. L. HEATLEY.

I had been busy distributing literature and "button-holing" from about 11 a.m. till after the Derby had been run; and was feeling the effect of two days' work in the open, when I suddenly came across a lad in Salvation Army uniform, walking up and down with sandwich boards bearing large posters condemning drink and gambling. Our God has not only raised up another worker in the place of our late lamented friend William Day, the banner bearer, but this time a young David to confront the gambling Goliaths at Epsom.

BOB JOHNSON.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Rev. E. K. Elliott has attained his jubilee as rector of Broadwater, near Worthing. Mr. Elliott, who is well known as a staunch Evangelical, has spent the whole of his ministerial life in the one parish.

Sir W. H. Wills has had placed in the parish church of Blagdon, Somerset, a handsome brass tablet in memory of Augustus Toplady, author of "Rock of Ages," who was in charge of the parish, 1762-64. The hymn first appeared in print in the Gospel Magazine, of which he was editor.

Rev. A. C. Macnutt, curate of St. Mark's, Sheffield, has accepted the senior curacy of All Souls', Langham Place, in succession to Rev. R. Ross, who has just been appointed to the living of St. Matthew's, Marylebone. Under Mr. Macnutt's leadership the men's Bible class at St. Mark's has steadily grown during the seven months it has been in existence.

In the preferment of Rev. G. S. Brewer, vicar of St. Catherine's, Nechells, to the living of Bulkington, near Nuneaton, Birmingham is losing one of its most hardworking Evangelical clergy. "St. Catherine's," says The Record, is a parish in which the tide of poverty rises higher every year. For over nine years Mr. and Mrs. Brewer have carried on a quiet and patient, but very real work. On several occasions the health of each of them has threatened to prematurely break down, and this unsought appointment to a country parish has come in the very nick of time."

Congregational.

Rev. John Holden, of Norwich, has become junior pastor of Dr. Mackennal's church at Bowdon.

Rev. James Holmes has resigned the pastorate at Gunnersbury, and will close his ministry there on the first Sunday in June. Mr. Holmes is going to assist Mr. Silvester Horne at the new mission centre of the London Congregational Union at Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road.

Recognition services have been held at Trinity Church, Leeds, for the purpose of welcoming to his new charge Rev. Hugh Rothwell, late of Darlington. Mr. Rothwell said that he intended to conduct his ministry on evangelistic lines, and, while zealous for the individual welfare of Congregationalism, hoped to be able to work for righteousness with men and women of all denominations.

Baptist.

Anniversary services were held at Wilburton Baptist Church on Tuesday, May 26, the preacher being Pastor Edwin H. Ellis, of East London Tabernacle. The building was crowded at night, and the services much appreciated.

Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Bournemouth, preached three impressive sermons, on the occasion of the Sunday-school anniversary at Lymington. On the Wednesday addresses were given by Revs. E. Edginton (Ashley), F. A. Hogbin (Pastor); and other friends.

Rev. Hamilton Watts, pastor of Edith Road Church, Stratford, E., was among those on whom the degree of M.A. was conferred at Cambridge on Thursday last. Mr. Watts studied at King's College before taking the theological course at Regent's Park.

Only another £14,000 has to be received by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare to complete the quarter of a million Twentieth Century Fund of the Baptist Union. The report says that the sum obtained, all of which has gone to the central fund, "represents much generous giving and self-sacrifice."

On Sunday, May 31, a special service was held at the church at Shefford, Beds, when Pastor F. E. Hall preached upon the subject of "A Great Salvation," after which eleven believers were baptized, four being from one family. They were the converts of a recent revival which broke out after a week of special prayer.

The thirty-eighth anniversary of the Sunday-school at the East London Tabernacle was held on Sunday week. Pastor Edwin H. Ellis preached in the morning and evening—in the evening to a crowded congregation. In the afternoon an address was given by Rev. F. J. Walkey, of Leytonstone. The day's services were highly encouraging.

Rev. George Goodchild, of St. Paul's Church, Skegness, has issued a revised edition of his booklet, "The Hand of the Lord in and around Skegness," which is a "pictorial story" of the rise and progress of the work. In connection with the new building scheme, a freehold site has now been secured in the main thoroughfare of the town at the cost of £700, and the sum of £500 of this amount is practically a gift by Lord Scarborough, providing the buildings are erected within a certain time.

Rev. Dr. Mclaren, of Union Chapel, Manchester, announced on Sunday morning last, that at the end of this month, upon the completion of the forty-fifth year of his Manchester pastorate, he intends to retire from the position he now holds. This decision is due to advancing years and increased weakness. Dr. Mclaren does not intend to give up preaching altogether, but to be free from the responsibilities of office. He therefore proposes to remain as an honorary pastor of the church, preaching occasionally and doing such other work as may be possible.

Methodist.

Nearly all the district meetings of the Methodist New Connexion show a net increase of members. The total net increase of members in England and Ireland is close upon 600; and, as this follows almost continuous increases for the last twenty or thirty years, it is regarded as very encouraging.

A new Wesleyan church is being built at Longwood, Huddersfield, the memorial stone of which has been laid by Sir William H. Broadbent, M.D., his family having long been connected with Methodism in that neighbourhood. Sir William Broadbent was himself at one time a scholar and a teacher in the school.

Anniversary services have been held in connection with the Wesleyan Soldiers' Home, Canterbury. At the public meeting the chaplain, Rev. R. Hall, said that 3,500 men had visited the rooms during the year, 1,500 letters had been written, and the average attendance at his Soldiers' Bible Class had been twenty-three. Rev. E. P. Lowry subsequently gave a lecture, and when the collection was made the debt on the Home was cleared.

The Methodists of Middlesbrough have agreed to have a united meeting June 18, in Wesley Chapel. Recognising that John Wesley belongs to no one branch of the Methodist family, all the ten Methodist ministers in Middlesbrough have thus agreed to hold one Bi-Centenary celebration, and to invite all the Methodist of the town. Distinctively Methodist hymns are to be sung to old-fashioned tunes, and a collection is to be made on behalf of the Children's Home.

Presbyterian.

A new church has been opened at West Stanley, co. Durham.

Sunday-school anniversary services have been held at Burton-on-Trent. Rev. J. W. Nevin, of Camp Hill, Birmingham, occupied the pulpit. In the evening, speaking upon Mark x. 14, "Suffer little children to come unto me," Mr. Nevin emphasized the duty of teachers in systematic preparation of the lessons for the scholars, also of the parents in supplementing the teachers' work.

The growth of Trinity Church, Bristol (a new cause), has been rapid, and the prospects are bright. The Western Presbytery is gradually extending its bounds, and in course of a few months it is quite hoped to see a settlement in yet another new cause. The field for church extension is large, and might be well occupied if friends were forthcoming to a greater extent than seems possible in a scattered Presbytery.

Rev. W. S. McCaughey, late of Fermoy, co. Cork, has begun his ministry in Middlesbrough under most happy auspices. The induction service took place in Newport Road Church, and was attended by a large and appreciative congregation. Rev. J. M. Little, of Sunderland, preached an appropriate sermon on Ezra iii. 12. The addresses which followed were in thorough keeping with the solemn circumstances.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. A. Y. MILNE, an active worker in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Sunderland, being upwards of twenty-five years an elder, while for twelve years he held the position of session clerk in that place of worship. A short while ago he resigned his position at Trinity owing to failing health.—Full of years and after a faithful ministry of some thirty-four years at the Presbyterian Church at Kendal, Rev. HUGH GREY WALLACE has passed peacefully to rest.—At Cork, Mrs. ARCHDALL, wife of the Bishop of Killaloe, a devoted Christian worker.—At Castledawson, Mrs. DALE, an earnest and generous member of the Methodist Church.

Christian Science and Theosophy.—Rev. Alexander A. Boddy, All Saints' Vicarage, Sunderland, asks for testimonies from any who, having taken up "Christian Science" and been disciples of the system, have since found their way back to the true Christ. He would like their opinion of the healing powers they may have witnessed, and why they were drawn into a belief in Mrs. Eddy's system. He also would be glad of similar testimonies from any who have come back from Theosophy to Christ. He asks for permission to print such testimonies in a work he is preparing for the press.

Wanted—a Leader! The political confusion that reigns on both sides of the House of Commons is very startling. First, the Education Bill, and then the Zollverein proposal, have sharply divided, not only the two antagonistic parties, but also the dominant party in the House to-day. Mr. Chamberlain's proposal is one of the most serious that has ever come from a responsible minister, and many members of his own party are entirely opposed to it. If it is pressed, there is likely to be a break-up all round of the present distribution of power. We are suffering from the lack of strong leaders. Grave national and social questions require dealing with, and the situation sadly needs a strong, God-fearing leader, who would rise superior to mere party interests, and strive for the real good of the nation.

A Pleading Premier. Speaking at a meeting at Grosvenor House, in support of the Bishop of St. Albans' Fund for London over the Border, the Premier expressed his earnest sympathy for the people who live in—

> The vast growing streets of workmen's dwellings, whose monotony sent a chill to the heart of everyone who drove out of the huge metropolis.

Forcing the argument of "moral obligation," in regard to the provision of adequate accommodation "for those who desire the ministrations of religion," he made an appeal to the "sentiment of duty" and to the "public conscience." Yet the Premier, only a few weeks ago, threw the whole weight of his high official position into the brewers' scale, and eulogised the dread work of the publican and distiller in destroying the bodies and souls of men in all the vast areas of artizan life. The people may "desire" the ministrations of religion, but they have the public-house forced upon them, whether they desire it or not.

Numbering the People. When the census was taken 102 years ago, the population of England and Wales numbered only 8,892,536—little more than that of London and two other large cities to-day. The total population now has reached 32,527,823, a remarkable development, accompanied, unhappily, by a corresponding expansion in the ranks of the "submerged" classes. It certainly is painful to find that, according to the latest returns, the workhouses, asylums, and prisons contained no fewer than 378,404 men, women, and children, exclusive of the huge staff of officials, and that in addition to this there were 1,645 homeless people who slept in barns and sheds. That there were also 25,317 blind, 15,216 deaf and dumb, and a great army of the halt and the lame should go far to increase our practical sympathy with all those unhappy ones for whom Christ died. There are but few of us who have not some such sufferers within our daily view.

An Excellent Experiment. We are glad to notice the success of an experiment undertaken by the Poplar Board of Guardians, in dealing with paupers on a better basis than that which usually prevails. These guardians have for a year past been sending men out in small parties to the farm of the Christian Union at Lingfield, where they have been taught to take care of live stock and to do general farm work. Already the result of the experiment has been to re-establish a number of men who had been regarded as "hopeless failures." Some of these have emigrated to Canada, to commence farming on their own account. The outdoor life on the farm has made new men of them. In a scheme like this we have a partial solution of a great difficulty. It cannot, of course, mean a great revolution, but it will help to diminish a great evil, by providing work for men who are really willing to work. To encourage work rather than pauperizing will be an immense gain.

Decadence in Ireland. Two months have elapsed since the appearance of a remarkable paper from the pen of Professor Mahaffy, of Trinity College, Dublin, on the Drifting of Doctrine, and it would seem that, as yet, there has not been any reply to it worthy of the seriousness of the charges. Dr. Mahaffy, after comparing the religious society of the Irish Metropolis a century ago, when the doctrinal teaching of the Evangelicals "was of the most rigid kind," with that of the present day, insists that the age of decided dogma has gone by. The Episcopal Church of Ireland is still Evangelical; but, the writer states, uncertainties of doctrine have crept in, and he does not hesitate to say that it has lost its hold upon some which were once prominent. To this uncertainty in regard to, and decay of, the old belief in the rewards and punishment, the Professor traces that decline of the Irish pulpit which, it will be remembered, Rev. Dr. Salmon has already drawn attention to and deplored.

Two Episcopal Declarations. The Bishops of Winchester and Salisbury have lost no time in making known to their clergy their determination to oppose the abuses which have been allowed too long to go on undisturbed. Incense is forbidden throughout the Winchester diocese, also Reservations, "Devotions" to the Virgin and the "Saints," and other irregularities. The extreme party is annoyed at this peremptory declaration, but we fancy that most people will agree in heartily approving the Bishop's firmness. Dr. Ryle is equally firm, and if his charge has aroused "no small indignation" amongst a certain section, it has evoked the approbation of the majority. Strong, courteous action of this kind, having for its purpose the promotion of unity and peace on the basis of the distinctive principles and teaching of the Church of England will do much towards removing stones of stumbling from the path of many.

Children in the Confessional. Rev. Dr. Ambrose Wilson's powerful paper in the June Contemporary Review, on "Habitual Confession for the Young," may be commended to the careful study of all those who, in many cases thoughtlessly, leave their children under the influence of the Ritualist. Dr. Wilson is able to speak from close personal observation of the painful and disastrous results in many cases, as to the destructive power of the confessional, and to the dangers to which the extreme High Churchmen have of late years been industriously exposing comparative children. The "hotbed of the parish confessional," as the writer terms it, has its evil effects upon the grown-up people who submit themselves to it; but upon the young the injurious influence is still more marked, in the utter surrendering of the will, and the weakening of the sense of right and wrong. That it is unscriptural needs no proof.

Rome in Reality. Spain is now the only Continental country in which Romanism has full play as the unchallenged religion of the people. France has disowned it, and Italy has curtailed its power. Whoever wishes, therefore, to know Rome as it really is, should turn to Spain for information. An article in the current Contemporary Review, on the "Church of Rome in Spain," will be a revelation to many. When every allowance has been made for the writer's standpoint (we believe he is an ex-monk), there is a residuum of bare and appalling fact which is staggering. The religious condition of the Spanish clergy and people is deplorable. We recommend a careful study of this article, especially to those who are being caught with the glamour of Rome as seen in this country.

The Church of Christ. The persistent and ever-present claim of Rome to be the Church, to the exclusion from the fold of Christ of all those who reject the authority of the Pope, evidently, as may be seen from modern literature, impresses many minds by reason of its very audacity. That it is far from the principles of the religion of Jesus needs no argument. According to the teaching of the New Testament the "Holy Catholic Apostolic Church" is, as the President of Congregational Union has recently pointed out:—

> A community of redeemed souls, composed of those who are new creatures in Christ, a new creation in itself, intended, therefore, to transform the world.

The definition is a simple one: it excludes none who do not exclude themselves, and includes all whom Christ has gathered in. Under it all the redeemed alike are "kings and priests unto God" (Rev. i. 6), and Rome cannot limit the inheritance.

Conversion and Salvation. A correspondent, in fellowship with an Evangelical church, writes to us:—

> My mind, with others, has been somewhat upset by our pastor having stated more than once that conversion and salvation are two different things. I was converted twenty-one years ago, and have always rested in the conviction of having been saved. I take it that our Lord does nothing by halves, at least in regard to the saving of our souls.

Of course, the question is one of terms. If by "conversion" we are to understand turning to God and being received by the Saviour, then, surely, the act is one that brings blessing for time and eternity. A conversion in the old terms of "venture on Him, venture wholly," assuredly involves the far-reaching blessing of eternal salvation.

The Growth of the Soul. At the same time, it is possible that the pastor whose views are here mentioned has been misunderstood. In a sense it is perfectly true that "conversion and salvation are two different things." A whole lifetime of discipline and labour may lie between being "called" and "glorified"—cross and crown. If conversion represents a point of time, salvation includes more; and though beginning in the past, it stretches forward into the eternal future. We are not only "saved" (1 Cor. xv. 2; 2 Tim. i. 9); we are "being saved" (Acts ii. 47 R.V.); and we "shall be saved" (John x. 9; Acts xv. 11).

The Resurrection. The latest exploit of Professor Schmiedel in the line of Bible criticism quite equals his earlier effort when he sought to reduce the whole reliable history of the Gospels to three verses! His last article on the Resurrection (in which the whole story as a record of objective fact is boldly denied) has drawn forth a reply from Dr. Robertson Nicoll, in which the following sentences occur:—

> In considering the evidence for the Resurrection of Jesus, it is necessary to determine the limits of proof. We cannot prove the fact in such a manner as to leave no room for doubt. It cannot be established as a mathematical argument or as an event in history on which we may cross-examine the witnesses. . . . There is and must be a moral element in the judgment, and that moral element must act along with reasoning and evidence before we can believe that Jesus rose from the dead.

History and Faith. This seems to us to grant too much to the sceptic, who at once seizes upon the introduction of the "moral element" as vitiating the value of pure history. The first preachers of the Resurrection—the men who witnessed it—never made any distinction between the fact which they preached and a moral element in the hearer's mind necessary to appreciate the fact. They preached the fact as history to Jews and Gentiles alike; to priests blinded by prejudice, and to Athenian philosophers. If our Lord really rose from the dead as the Gospels state, then His Resurrection is an established fact of history. This much is certain, that every theory opposed to the Gospel fact has broken down when it has been cross-examined, and nothing logically holds the field but the story as we have it on record. We gain nothing by laying undue emphasis upon the "moral element" in a man's judgment of a fact. But how that fact will affect a man does depend upon his moral state. He may have a twist, mentally or morally, which will distort his vision. We may labour to heal him, but we must still insist upon the reality of facts which are ineradicably historical.

Foolish Questionings. Even a cursory glance at the magazines and reviews is sufficient to convince one that the Athenian spirit which is ever on the look out for "some new thing" is by no means dead; rather it flourishes more than ever. We are struck by the triviality of many of the speculations which, particularly in theology, form the subjects of controversy. Far better than this, surely would it be, if people applied themselves with earnestness to those duties which God has committed to them. There is sufficient revealed by God to enable every man to experience the blessings of a redeemed life, and to exercise the powers of his new life upon those great practical questions which press most closely upon him. The great canon of the last judgment given by our Lord Himself in Matt. xxv. has no reference to our solution of difficult subjects; but it has everything to do with the way in which we have really lived and fulfilled the purposes of the Redeemer.

Eclipsed Faith. An able critic recently reviewing, in one of the dailies, a volume on God, Self, Immortality, by two Unitarian writers, asks a very pertinent question:—

> Why is the body to which the authors belong, and to which most of these studies were in the first instance addressed, practically so ineffective? The Unitarians include some of the most spiritual and profound of modern thinkers. . . . Their appeal is always high and clear to the larger issue and the desire for righteousness. Yet, practically, the results are doleful. A few churches in the towns to which a popular preacher can attract an audience; in the country scattered chapels living on eighteenth century endowments, supported by a few narrowed and bitter adherents, this is all the practical result seen by the outsider.

The answer is not far to seek. If the causes are numerous, they are all consequent upon the primary and fatal exclusion of a Divine Saviour from their Christless creed. "Because I live, ye shall live also" (John xiv. 19).

Agnosticism among Students. An esteemed correspondent, referring to our note last week, expresses the conviction that too often the information given to students about the Bible bears on presumed defects rather than on the great positive blessings and truth, so that "highly educated" young people are unacquainted with and uninfluenced by the Bible and by the fervent spirit of Christian zeal. The practice referred to is undoubtedly very common, and productive of much indifference on the part of young people. It is too readily taken for granted that they are well grounded in the truth, and that the so-called "additional light" will at least do them no harm; whereas such teaching comes in to distract the attention from spiritual influences. The readiness of the human mind to cling to anything that will remove or reduce "the offence of the Cross" should make instructors of youth exceedingly careful lest they put in the way of others such "offences" as the Lord uttered warnings against.

Science and Revelation. Lord Kelvin's remarkable testimony which we recently quoted is being made the ground of a very lively controversy in the scientific world, and Dr. Ray Lankester has again come to the front with a declaration that "the whole order of nature, including living and lifeless matter, man, animal, and gas, is a network of mechanism." He admits, however, and, coming from such a source, the admission is worthy of careful record, that > no sane man has ever pretended, since science became a definite body of doctrine, that we know, or can ever hope to know, or conceive of the possibility of knowing, whence this mechanism has come, why it is there, whither it is going, and what there may be or may not be beyond or beside it which our senses are incapable of appreciating.

It is quite true, as the professor acknowledges, that "these things are not explained by science, and never can be;" but the Christian finds the explanation in the inspired revelation of the Word of God.

Spiritual Argon.

By Rev. JAMES MURSELL.

ARGON is an element discovered a few years ago by Professor Ramsay. It is found in small quantities in the atmosphere, and Professor Ramsay used the word argon, which means "idle," to describe it because it is so inert, and of so little service, and is so slow to mingle helpfully with other elements. It is a dead, useless sort of gas, the very opposite of oxygen, on which our life depends. Long before argon was discovered as a chemical element, our Lord Jesus detected it as a spiritual element. He tells us that it is found especially in our speech. He warns us that for "every idle (or argon) word that men speak, they shall give an account in the day of judgment."

What Divine insight our Lord's use of this word reveals. How faithfully it describes a great deal of the talk that goes on to-day. How idle, how argon much of it is! How many vain interjections, which are no enrichment of the sentence, and which add nothing to its sense, even Christian people, and especially young Christian people, employ! How much conversation there is which at the best can only be described as argon. It might just as well never take place. It does nothing to cheer, or to strengthen, or to reprove. No one is the better for it, even if no one is the worse. It is vapid, useless, argon talk that does not really enrich life, or mingle helpfully with any of its other elements.

It may be thought that if argon does no good, it does no harm. That may be true of the chemical element, but it is evidently not the case with its spiritual counterpart. Our Lord's solemn saying about the judgment that will fall on argon words has a startling commentary in 1 Timothy v. 13, where the Apostle, speaking of some of the tendencies he had observed with grief in even Christian women, says: "They learn to be argon, and not argon only, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not." That is to say, spiritual argon leads on to something worse. It may be harmless in itself, but it paves the way for hurtful developments.

Idle talk is bad enough, but tittle-tattle is worse; and that is what argon comes to. It is of interest to find that the word which Paul uses for "tattlers" is a word which we attach to another chemical element—viz., fluorine, which is an elusive gas about as opposite as possible to argon, only having this comparatively common property, that while it will unite with many other elements, it refuses to combine with health-giving oxygen. Fluorine is the "tattler" among the chemical elements, and tattling is the fluorine of spiritual life. The tattler intrudes into every company, busies himself about everybody's affairs, and turns idle talk into gossip and back-biting. The only society in which he has nothing to say is when earnest men and women are communing with hearts charged with the oxygen of the Holy Spirit concerning the deep things of God. Our Lord clearly discerned the liability of spiritual argon to get itself transmuted into spiritual fluorine.

How may we keep our lives free from this undesirable element? The answer is given in 2 Pet. i. 5-7. When we compare this wonderful addition sum with Gal. v. 22, 23, we shall find that the virtues that Peter enumerates are linked with the fruits of the Spirit as mentioned by Paul. Let the oxygen of the Spirit's presence fill us, and He will make us that we be "neither argon nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Study John Bunyan.

"GIVE me a hint or two as to the books I shall find most profitable," is the request of a young minister. In answering him, let me give a hint to some others. Next to your Bible, study John Bunyan's immortal "Pilgrim's Progress." Spurgeon's pure, racy Saxon-English came from his constant study of the tinker of Bedford, and Bunyan fashioned his style on the English Bible.

He was a man of one book. He had but a small library, and when he went into Bedford gaol he took only three or four books with him, for which let us be devoutly thankful. God's Word was the constant companion of his cell, the volume of his morning studies and his evening meditations. This perpetual delving in the mine of Divine revelation gave Bunyan the pure gold out of which he fashioned his masterpiece. He had read no other poetry than the sublime poetry of David and Job, Isaiah and Habakkuk, and we trace the effect of close communings with the inspired Hebrew bards in all the grandest imagery of the "Pilgrim's Progress." His description of the glories of heaven, when the gates open to "Christian's" entering footsteps, is almost a literal copy of John's Apocalypse. Bunyan had never seen the inside of a theological school; he got his body of divinity from the fountain-head, by going directly to Moses, the prophets, the apostles, and to Him who spake as never man spake. Where in the whole range of religious literature can be found a richer, purer, stronger Evangelical theology than is contained in this marvellous allegory? Saturate your soul with it, my young brother; it will give you the right pitch when you sit down to your sermons. No danger of your theology becoming pulpy or mucilaginous, when you feed on the "Holy War" and the "Pilgrim."

Let Bunyan teach you, also, what wonderful things the Scriptures are when approached in the right spirit. He pored over them on his knees. Not a shadow of doubt as to their perfect inspiration and infallible authority ever disturbed him for a moment. He went through them, not with lexicons and commentaries, but with a keen spiritual eye that discovered every atom of gold, as sharply as a Colorado miner picks out every grain of precious metal from the auriferous soil. The Holy Spirit took of the things of Christ and showed them unto him. This patient waiting on God's Word, this humble sitting at the gates of infinite wisdom, and this fervent, earnest inquiry directly from God, led Bunyan into the interior truths that concern most deeply the human soul, with its experiences, and eternal destinies. As your business is to deal with human nature in all its varieties, you will find no ranges of portraitures which surpass those presented by the dreamer of Bedford.

Bunyan will also teach you how to read your Bible in terrible earnest. He made it as literal as the flash of the noon-day sunbeams. Not one sharp edge of the Divine threatenings against sin did he ever blunt; in these times there is too little pungent preaching on the "sinfulness of sin" and its just retributions. Nor did Bunyan minimize the ineffable and marvellous love of God in redemption and in providence. Into the bosom of the exceeding great and precious promises he fairly leaped, as a child leaps into the arms of a mother. Every syllable of the Divine Book he pored over and pondered till his memory held it in solution.

You will be constantly delighted with his ingenious introduction of the out-of-the-way passages of Scripture into the most unexpected places. If you can learn how to do this, you will hold the attention of your hearers, and give them happy and profitable surprises.

Style is a vastly important element in effective preaching, as the Spurgeons, Maclarens, and Bushnells testify. The best style is that which most resembles a window of perfectly transparent glass. The "Pilgrim's Progress" is a well of English undefiled. In every page Bunyan sticks to the stout old dialect which the illiterate can understand, and which the most cultured cannot improve. Hardly any other book abounds more in monosyllables. There is a model for you in terse, trenchant vigour of speech; and you will be all the more popular and powerful as a preacher if you will learn what Daniel Webster and John Bunyan teach you, viz., that for all the highest purposes of an instructor of the people, pure, plain, simple English is the mightiest instrument. In after years you will thank me for exhorting you to study John Bunyan.

The Staff and the Presence.

HOW many a day that has opened in sunshine has been darkened by storm-clouds ere many hours have past, and chill desolation has taken the place of warmth and brightness! So it was in the story of the Shunammite (2 Kings iv.).

One bright summer morning the little lad, who was the very light of the home, went out into the harvest field, and as he played in the heat of the sun, and maybe worked in his way with the reapers, a sudden cry went up, "My head! My head!" The poor old father did not know what to do, but sent him to the children's refuge—mother's knee—and she held him, in untold agony, helpless and hopeless, till all pain was over, and her darling wrapt in slumber so deep that no voice but the Lord's could ever wake him again.

Poor bereaved heart! but not in vain had her boy been an object-lesson to her faith ever since his birth; and now she longed only that God's servant, who had been the mouthpiece of the promise, should be the instrument, the channel, between the great Promiser and the child of promise. She laid him on the prophet's bed, and determined to fetch Elisha.

Faith is clear in the reply to Gehazi's question, when within reach of the prophet: "It is well!" Even with the knowledge of that little still form at home, with a deepening realization of what it would be to live without him now, she still could say, "It is well." Faith triumphed; but she pressed on to where Elisha stood, and fell at his feet and clasped them, such a tumult of feeling raging within, that words failed. Gehazi is always with the prophet, seeing the evidences of God's mighty power, but hard, grasping, unsympathetic; lacking life, and so lacking love.

Note the contrast between him and his master—courteous, tender, and humble. Not to Gehazi could the sore heart unburden itself—only to Elisha could the bitter sorrow be told.

Teachers, can your scholars turn to you as to an unfailing friend in hours of darkness? Or do they feel instinctively that they would get no real sympathy and help from you? In these busy days there are comparatively few who, in sympathy with their Lord, have "hearts at leisure from themselves, to soothe and sympathize." Elisha understood the need, and sent Gehazi with his staff to lay it on the face of the child, but nothing short of the prophet's personal presence would satisfy the mother's heart. Very often

TEACHERS ARE LIKE GEHAZI.

They go to their classes with a well-prepared lesson, so far as mental power is concerned, but without life, without that soul-travail, in fellowship with Christ, needful to reach dead souls. The form may be perfect, but "the child is not awaked."

But with Elisha, how different! First, there is the closed door and the secret prayer. Effectual service begins in secret prayer, in prayer for individual souls. Then he stretched himself upon the child, hand to hand, eye to eye, mouth to mouth. The teacher who wins souls, seeks to put himself, or herself, in the scholar's place, to put things so that a child understands, to see through a child's eyes.

People talk of coming down to children; nay, it is a going up. Some signs of life followed, but no half-measures would do for the prophet. Patiently he waited, and then repeated the same action, and life and vigour returned to the little frame—"the child sneezed seven times, and opened his eyes." Then was faith rewarded, and which heart was more glad—the prophet's, as he restored the child to his mother; or the mother's, as a second time she received her child from God?

Each single child in your class is one on whom to spend your best of all you are and have. When teachers know what it is to travail in birth for souls, God gives them.

If your sad cry has hitherto been, "The child is not awaked!" do not give up the work and say, "It is no good; I have not the gift." But get away alone with Christ your Master, and give yourself afresh to Him, with all the failure, and wait on Him to fill you with His own life and love.

Then go forth again, to spend and be spent, yet always filled, because of the exhaustless, boundless love and life ever in and through you by His Spirit: life from the dead will follow in the souls of others.

Just the Same.

"It's just the same between us, Lord!"
Yes! just the same
As when I first believed Thy Word,
And loved Thy Name;
The years bring change, but love burns on,
A warm, red flame.

"It's just the same between us, Lord!"
'Tis Thine to lead;
'Tis mine to follow Feet adored
With tireless speed;
It should be mine to trust; 'tis Thine
To meet all need!

"It's just the same between us," though
My faith is tried
By testing I would fain not know,
By things denied:
How can my heart think bitter thoughts
Of such a Guide!

"It's just the same between us, Lord!"
I rest in this;
When I have failed to keep Thy word,
Or read amiss
Thy guiding glance; assured, I seek
The pardoning kiss.

"It's just the same between us, Lord!"
A sweet, glad sense
Of close acquaintance, secrets stored,
And love intense;
The hand-clasp of the weakest, with Omnipotence!

Not Forgotten.

(Isa. xliv. 21.)

Not forgotten, weary heart, God can ne'er forget;
Only tried as gold is tried,
In the furnace purified,
To His praise to shine.

Not forgotten, hungry heart, God can ne'er forget;
Only learning how to rest,
In a love of all the best,
Love of Him who died.

Not forgotten, aching heart, God can ne'ĕr forget;
Only finding how to praise,
In the nights as in the days,
Praising e'en in tears.

Not forgotten, lonely heart, God can ne'er forget;
Only coming to a place,
Where He'll meet thee face to face,
Thy Companion, He.

Not forgotten, sinful heart, God can ne'er forget;
Only seeing what thou art,
So that He may do His part,
Sanctify thy soul.

Not forgotten, failing heart, God can ne'er forget;
Only gently moving on,
To the place where He has gone,
There thy King to see.

The King of Italy and Evangelical Work. —King Victor Immanuel has once more shown, in a practical way, his sympathy with Evangelical work in Italy, and his appreciation of the good it is doing. On leaving Florence he left a sum of money to be distributed amongst the philanthropic agencies of that city including three Protestant institutions. It is a significant fact that Evangelical work is generally helped in Italy by those in authority, whilst papal work has to be restrained by penal statutes.

A Strange Arrest.

"THEN is your decision final, uncle?" "Entirely so, Rupert. Since our conversation last night I have given the matter my gravest consideration. Your aunt and I have talked it over together, have earnestly asked for wisdom higher than our own; and we feel more strongly than ever that, apart from all other considerations, the hunting-field is no place for a young business-man who has his mercantile position to maintain."

Rupert's expression hardened. Naturally gentle and winsome in manner, he impressed casual observers with an idea of great docility, so that Mr. and Mrs. Willoughby, who had adopted him from a sister's home into their own childless household, at the age of seven years, had often been congratulated on the easy and pleasant charge they had undertaken. But with all their love to him, drawn out by his many charming qualities, they were not blind to his faults, and knew that if at any time his schemes for self-indulgence were crossed, there was a troublesome time in store for them. On the whole, however, such mauvais quartres d'heures were of rare occurrence, for their rule was a very wise one.

Mr. Willoughby had retired from business in favour of Rupert, and being a wealthy man, had surrounded his nephew with all legitimate comforts. But he was not only possessed of a rare intellect and scientific tastes, but of a very vigorous will; and when Rupert announced his intention of joining the county hunt, using for the purpose his uncle's latest gift of a most valuable mare, Mr. Willoughby interposed with a decided negative, and now Greek was meeting Greek in the tug-of-war between obstinacy and principle.

"You must remember," Rupert said at length, breaking a rather troubled silence,

"I AM NO LONGER A CHILD, and I think the time has come for me to assert my independence."

"I wish you had taken a worthier occasion of doing so," Mr. Willoughby replied quietly, but with an expression of keen pain contracting his fine features. "I think you must admit," he went on, "that your aunt and I have always encouraged free opinion on your part, and all has been done, I think, by us to make your life a happy one. I don't emphasize my share in any kindness; you are my dear sister's child, and since her death you have had special claims on my consideration. But I do wish to remind you of the devoted affection and self-sacrificing care of your aunt."

"You have both been exceedingly good to me," Rupert acknowledged, "and I can never forget it. But, uncle, young men of my age don't wish to be in leading-strings, however gently they are held; and, much as in many respects I shall regret it, I have quite made up my mind, if you continue to object to my hunting, to go into lodgings."

It was the strongest blow Mr. Willoughby had ever received, and had not Rupert been so absorbed in his own plans he must have been shocked at the sudden pallor of his uncle's face. But he had determined on his own way in this instance, and was not without a strong hope that this suggestion of "diggings" would need only to be used as a threat to his adopted parents; and that if he could but gain the victory on this occasion he would secure more freedom in the future.

Freedom he mentally called this paltry subjugation to self, not caring how, in its attainment, he trampled on the most sacred claims. To his uncle he owed education, a splendid mercantile position, and a most charming and cultured home life; but this Eden-apple hung temptingly before him, and, shaking off the detaining hand of Divine prohibition, he stretched out his own for the prize.

I tell this story, which occurred years ago in my own circle of relations, because it is typical of similar cases in the home life of so many parents and guardians to-day, where blighted parental hopes tell of the mistake that has been made by the too close following of Eli's disastrous example, and where, in face of undisciplined threats like Rupert's, a benignant home rule has become perilously lax.

CONSIDERATION V. PRINCIPLE.

Mr. and Mrs. Willoughby, happily, were delivered from this snare by their strong faith in God. They carried the almost intolerable burden to Him and implored guidance. Then Mrs. Willoughby, with her inimitable tact and gentleness, argued the matter with Rupert, reminded him of his uncle's delicate health, and of the cloud his action would bring over the house; assured him that where consideration for his pleasure only involved a sacrifice of their comfort or convenience, it was freely made; but when principle was concerned, they were pledged to firmness; and that his uncle, who had built up the large manufacturing business at such a cost of application and self-denial, could not give his sanction to an amusement that would inevitably lead to neglect of duty.

But obstinacy was in the ascendant, and her pleading, even her tears, were unavailing. Then—wise woman that she was, she ceased to argue, and through the brief interval before Rupert's purpose of change of home was to be carried out, maintained an unvarying kindness of manner. But her heart seemed nigh breaking, and though she did her utmost to cheer her distressed husband, she always looked back on that fortnight as the most leaden-footed time of her life; indeed, it was almost a relief to the three when the last evening came. It was a triumph of self-repression to keep up a semblance of calm, but they all succeeded, and as usual, when the evening was over, Rupert lighted their candles, accompanied them upstairs, and kissed each of them "Good-night." But when Mr. Willoughby burst forth in an uncontrollable he turned hastily away, and shut himself into his room. That night the two bereaved ones did not sleep, and were only sustained in their agony of disappointment by Him who is always awake for the care of His children. And oh, how earnestly they prayed—but with as little practical belief as the little company in Jerusalem when asking for Peter's deliverance—that even at the eleventh hour this blow to their domestic happiness might be averted.

"THE LAST TIME, RUPERT!"

There was still the final meal to be gone through together, and they went down to breakfast with sinking hearts. There sat Rupert, all the hardness gone from his face, and as they entered the room he came to them saying, with quivering lips, "I am not going, uncle; I see you are right." No explanation was given of his altered feelings, and none was needed by his overjoyed friends.

Thenceforward, there was a quiet change in him that was a continual source of thanksgiving in the house. The spirit of unrest and of occasional defiance was gone, and his enjoyment of the pleasures that were so freely accorded to him became hearty and genuine. To his aunt, who was so prayerfully watching, there were many tokens that the good seed she had tried to sow was germinating, and the first green blades appearing—very tiny ones, but still apparent to the eye of love.

Then another dark cloud come over the brightening horizon. Consumption had already come into Rupert's family—a remarkably handsome one—and had taken, one by one, three of his brothers and a sister. Now the deadly scourge seized him; his health began to fail, and very soon the most hopeful ceased to hope, and knew that he must go. As is so often the case he was the last to see it, and his aunt was glad that it was so, for it gave her greater confidence in the genuineness of the spiritual change that was renewing his higher nature even as the physical was so surely perishing.

One night he laid aside the reserve which had hitherto characterized him, and spoke to her as he might have done to his mother had she been alive; told her how he had been drawn to Jesus by such wonderful cords of love that he could not but respond and yield.

"It has all been so beautifully easy, aunt. I have really heard the voice of Jesus say, 'Come unto Me and rest!' and worldly things that I used to care so much for have lost their charm. I have come to Him, and the rest is so sweet! But, aunt," he went on, "I want to tell you how much I have to thank you and uncle for the helpful surroundings of the home here. I sometimes fretted at the slight restrictions, and I am afraid I thought you narrow, but if you had given way to my wishes about my worldly amusements I know I should have drifted right out of hearing of His voice, and then it would have been so awfully mean, even if had wished it, to creep back to Him now I am weak. Do you remember, auntie, that time when I wanted to hunt, and behaved so badly about it? Of course you do, and, though it is now years ago, I often grieve at the pain I gave you and my good uncle. But you never knew

"THE REASON I GAVE IT UP.

"That night when uncle said, 'It is the last time,' I was still quite unshaken in my purpose; but his words hurt me so that I locked my bedroom door, and threw myself on the bed to fight down the awful pain of grieving him so much. And then the strangest thing happened! You know my love of horses and perfect fearlessness with the most spirited and restive ones, but that night, as I lay there, it seemed as if a hand touched my nerves and unscrewed them, just like the angel touching Jacob's thigh you know, and after that a perfect horror seized me at the idea of riding that horse to the hunt, for I was quite sure I should be thrown and perhaps killed. This took such hold of me that what I was not noble enough to concede to your wishes, I was compelled to yield to an instinct of self-preservation. That is the story, dear aunt, and I should have been still more thoroughly ashamed of myself but for the strong conviction, which has never since left me, that it was the hand of God that touched me.

. . . .

The fading away of that young life was a very rapid one; but the sunset was cloudlessly bright. Unflinching patience, unfailing gracious appreciation of every attention, and an unruffled peace, were the fragrant memories in the hearts of his friends when he left them. For him there was "no sadness of farewell." The clear call came to him in sleep, and he awoke to be made exceeding glad with the countenance of his King, and to drink without stint of the river of His pleasures. M. C. F.

Visiting the Churches.

MISSES MOORE AND KEENE have concluded a three-months' mission tour for the deepening of the spiritual life among the churches of the Lydbrook Primitive Methodist circuit, Glos.

The results have not only been blessed, but deeply encouraging, showing that where Christians feel the need of being "wholly for God," maintain readiness for Christ's coming, and are concerned for the unsaved, they will respond to such efforts and appeals. The missioners showed clearly the need of receiving the Holy Spirit as Teacher and Guide, also Power in service.

As affording some idea of the effect of the teaching, many are saying that the Bible has become a new and living Book to them; that prayer has taken a new and all-important place in their lives; that "praying in the Holy Ghost now means waiting on God for the answers, and receiving them; also that definite acceptance of the Holy Spirit in this threefold aspect has brought an illumination of Divine things and power into their Christian lives that they had not possessed before. Love for the unsaved has been shown by the putting away of stumbling blocks and the giving up of idols and doubtful things that hinder the unsaved."

As the missioners went from church to church, it was generally acknowledged that such missions to Christians are "just the thing needed."—Communicated.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, June 14. Psalm xxvii.
A Song of Salvation.

THIS Psalm naturally divides into two portions (1-6, 7-14). The rhythm and spirit of the latter part are unlike those of the former, as the exultant note of the opening verses becomes more plaintive and anxious.

1-6. What sweet names for God—"Light," "Salvation," "Strength (or Fortress) of Life"! The Psalmist looked forth from God's care, as from muniments of rock, on the advance of his enemies and foes; he knew that they would be compelled to bite the dust, as Goliath of Gath did before his sling and stone, in the old days. He was able, therefore, without dismay to contemplate the arising of even the war-cloud. To adopt one rendering which is suggested, "My heart fears not. Though war rise against me, even then I am confident."

But deliverance from outward alarm cannot satisfy us if we are in soul-health. We must desire the abiding consciousness of God's presence; and this is surely what the Psalmist meant when he spoke of dwelling in the house of the Lord all the days of his life. It is a blessed thing when the soul is not diverted from this supreme quest by the hundred and one interests of the world, of society, or of pleasure; but when all these are subordinated to its purpose, as beads of varied hue and shape may be linked on one string. The word rendered beauty might be rendered friendliness, and to inquire might be meditate. We first perceive, and then muse on God's love. Such intimacy implies security. The honoured guest may surely claim protection. What a note of rest and triumph rings through that now.

God is always bidding us to seek His face. Oh that we may always answer with joy, "That face of Thine, O Lord, will I seek." Sometimes we have to seek God's face amid circumstances of depression and pain. Father and mother forsake; oppressors and false witnesses arise; the heart faints; but be of good cheer, O soul of man, who art sore stricken, thou shalt see the Lord's goodness in the land which is never overshadowed by death. O fair land of the living, when shall we tread thy graveless acres!

MONDAY, June 15. Psalm xxviii.
A Prayer for Help.

1, 2. The prelude, which entreats the Divine acceptance of the prayer which follows on two grounds. First, the Psalmist is so helpless apart from God, he must sink into the pit unless his prayer brings help. Secondly, his uplifted, outstretched hands must have help, or he will die. What a terrible and hopeless condition we should be in if God were really deaf and silent. Jesus seemed both to the Syrophenician woman, to draw her out to a greater strength of faith. God's deafness and silence are in appearance only. Beneath them there is a Father's tender pity.

3-5. The prayer asks that the Psalmist may be delivered from the fate of the wicked, and then proceeds to describe their practices and to invoke retribution. The Psalmist reserves his special abhorrence for professed friends, with peace on their lips and malice in their hearts. The strong sense of the wrong which such people are doing in God's world, leads the Psalmist to hot prayers that the Almighty would reward them according to their deeds.

6, 7. Assurance succeeds to prayer. Thus should it be also with us. We should in prayer rise from petition to acceptance, and even bless God for the answer which he has vouchsafed. What a change, says Dean Trench, is wrought by one brief hour of prayer! We begin by wondering if God is not deaf, and in a few moments we say that He has heard and that we are helped. Then our heart leaps for joy, where it had drawn nigh to death.

8, 9. The king goes on to plead for the people, of which he was the under-shepherd, transferring them to Him who neither slumbers nor sleeps. "Shepherd them" (so the closing words may be rendered) "and carry them, even for evermore."

TUESDAY, June 16. Psalm xxix.
The Psalm of the Thunder-Storm.

This is one of the sublimest of the Psalms, describing the progress of a storm over the whole of Palestine. It opens with "Glory to God in the highest," and ends with "Peace on earth."

1, 2. The invocation. The mighty angels, who excel in strength, are asked to watch the thunder-clouds, as they reverberate and crash, are riven by the lightning, and pass away in floods of rain. From that spectacle they are exhorted to turn to God with a new estimate of His glory and strength, and with new ascriptions of adoration. "Bow down to God in holy attire."

3-9. The description of the storm. Seven times "the voice of Jehovah" is heard, like the seven thunders before the throne of which John speaks. The storm comes up from the waters of the Mediterranean (3); then it strikes on the northern mountains, which seem to shake and skip beneath its fury (5, 6); presently the forked lightning hews out its course in the sky (7); Kadesh, on the far east, is shaken, and through the sparsely-peopled regions the wild fury of the tempest rages, startling the wild creatures of the forest. As for the Temple, every voice of the choir and every splint of wood in the edifice seems to answer back the one word—Glory.

10, 11. Whether the word "flood" stands for the Deluge or the floods of rain is uncertain; but of each God is King; this gives an assurance of strength and peace.

WEDNESDAY, June 17. Psalm xxx.
A Song of Deliverance.

The singer had been delivered from some great peril. He had been raised from the gates of the pit; what could he do better than exalt the Lord who had raised him? Perhaps he had recently recovered from sore sickness, but healing may be a general expression for deliverance from trouble. There had been imminent peril, an eager cry for help, and God had come to his rescue.

1-3. Notice the repetition of the name of God, as though it were a sweet refrain, which the singer could not let go. The pronoun "my," also, is full of a realizing and appropriating faith, which, so to speak, encloses the Divine nature in a private demesne. "This," says one, "is the enclosure of a common without damage."

4, 5. The transience of sorrow and pain! There are more sunny hours than beclouded ones in every year; more days of joy than of suffering in every normal life, more health than pain. God's anger is for moments, but His favour for life. Weeping comes to the house of one's life as a transient guest: but in the morning there is a shout at the gate, which announces that joy has come to take up his abode; then the figure of the former inmate is seen stealing away on the opposite side of the mountain, where the night-shadows are still lying.

6-12. Periods of ease and prosperity are apt to engender self-confidence, and have the effect of alienating the soul from God. Then He hides His face, and we are reduced to some dire extremity, and driven to confession and prayer. In such straits, God is not unmindful of the pleading of His child, but draws nigh to turn mourning into dancing, sorrow into joy. The soul may be described as "our glory." It is our noblest attribute, and it bursts into thankful songs.

THURSDAY, June 18. Psalm xxxi.
A Song of God's Lovingkindness.

1-4. How full these verses are of petition! The sufferer asks for deliverance, a swift answer, shelter and defence, guidance and leading, escape from the net spread for his feet; and as we ponder his petitions we have an insight into the perplexities which beset all lives, and into the qualities in our Father's heart, on which we may ever draw.

5-8. Here, says one, faith does not so much supplicate as meditate, plucking the flower of confidence from the nettles of past dangers and deliverances. It was from this paragraph that our Lord quoted in His last words on the Cross (5); words which we may quote, not for death only, but for life. So light comes, and we find ourselves able to exult in God's lovingkindnesses.

9-13. What sudden transitions of feeling succeed each other! Here the soul which had just escaped from the enemy complains that it is like a broken vessel, forgotten, out of mind, like a dead man. The buzzing voice of slander is all around, the air is full of plotting.

14-18. The wave which for a moment had borne the soul from God again carries it against His heart. The word for trust in verse 14 is the same as in verse 6, and means to hang or lean upon; and thence comes the blessed assurance that the changing periods of life are allotted by that hand which made the heavens and was nailed to the cross.

19-24. When our eyes are opened we become sensible, not only of our own deliverance, but that we are only part of a multitude which no man can number, who are fellow-dependents on the Divine bounty, and each delivered soul summons its companions to love God for His love.

FRIDAY, June 19. Psalm xxxii.
The Psalm of the Penitent.

There is no better explanation of this Psalm than to refer it to David's great sin. For a whole year he lived impenitent: then he was broken down in the dust by Nathan's message, and was finally restored to the joy of fellowship with God.

1-3. We have a leaf out of a penitent's confessions. Augustine has recorded his life-story in a series of confessions, and probably every human life has its blurred and blotted pages. Has it not been so with you? There are here three names for sin, "transgression," "missing the mark," and "crookedness, or distortion"; and three expressions for pardon, the lifting of a burden off tired shoulders, the shrouding of a foul thing from the pure eyes of the Holy One, and the cancelling of debt. But there must be confession. The foul matter must be pressed from the wound, and the healing process start from the bottom, else there can be no soundness in the new-formed flesh. We must not keep silence. There must be confession, first to God, and then to those against whom or with whom we have sinned.

6-11. The restored penitent proceeds to dwell upon the blessings that arise from confession, and to contrast them with the many sorrows that accrue to a course of hard-hearted and stolid impenitence. He contrasts the gracious guidance which is vouchsafed to subdued and penitent souls, with the bits and bridles that extort compliance from the rebellious. Let us live, he says, in the ring-fence of God's lovingkindness.

SATURDAY, June 20. Psalm xxxiii.
A National Anthem.

1-3. The whole nation should be an orchestra when national mercies are celebrated.

4-11. The grounds for thanksgiving are innumerable—God's moral character, His creative might, His work in the providential administration of the world. The Armada in its pride came to annex our land to Spain; but by the blast of the storm its purpose was defeated, since it was God's intention that Great Britain should stand in her Protestant faith as His witness to the world.

12-19. What blessedness belongs to the nation that relies on the Divine protection! There is no reliance to be placed in the apparatus of its defence, but in the deliverance of Him Who fashions and searches, Who understands the hearts of men, and Who waits to show Himself strong on behalf of those whose hearts are perfect towards Him. How precious it is to know that God's eye is lovingly fixed upon us!

20-22. In these final expressions of devout confidence, let us reverently join, not for others, but for ourselves; and let us go forth into the battles of life, shielded and sheltered by God's hand placed on our heads.

THE KISCHINEFF MASSACRE.

I TRANSLATE another portion of the letter written by one of the sufferers from the recent pillage. Writing on April 23 (New Style), three days after the cessation of the massacre, he said:—

"One needs the gifts of an orator to give you the least idea of all that has taken place. Go to the cemeteries, and there view the maimed and disfigured bodies! There lie three murdered women. The body of one has been cut into a cross; the second had nails driven up through her nostrils, piercing the skull; the breasts of the third were cut out. Here is a grammar-school youth of the seventh class with his tongue cut out, and not far away a child that had been squeezed to death. Till now forty-six bodies have been taken to the cemetery; many are in the hospitals in a hopeless condition.

"The robbers were not satisfied with the town inhabitants and their property; they carried the work of destruction into the districts around, to the vineyards and their buildings, killing the Jews dwelling there. It is asserted that the bodies of many murdered people are still on the roofs, whither they had fled from their persecutors; many bodies have been drawn up from closets. From the villages around came tidings of murder and robbery. Soldiers have been sent to the village of Kolorasch, where disorder is anticipated. The Christian population is so greatly against the Jews through inflammatory writings that have been circulated.

"Yesterday the Procurator of the Odessa Court of Appeal arrived here. A deputation from the Jewish population, upon which I was elected, waited upon him. I gave him details of the conduct of our police, who not only did not hinder, but assisted—these being uncontested facts—in plunder and murder. Let someone come here and see that what I write is far short of the reality. Think that since Sunday several thousands families have been without bread! We are now all beggars, and three-quarters of Kischineff is wasted and plundered. The inhabitants fear so much a renewal of the horrors that they have completely forgotten the thousands of unfortunates who are roofless. In the meantime, the local branch of the Red Cross, under the presidency of the wife of the Vice-Governor, Madame Ustrugowa, has given temporary assistance, and the wealthy here hope to raise several thousand roubles. But all this is a mere drop in the ocean."

RESULTS OF THE MASSACRE.

And now let me refer again to the two results I named; (1) The present dread on the part of the Jews. Officially unknown and unreported, it is a fact that in the last few weeks the younger Jewish population in Russia have been arming themselves, and preparing, on given signals, to offer a desperate resistance in the event of further attacks. This is the case in Warsaw, in Odessa, and in other large Jewish populations. It is a new element in modern Jewish history and, under the present tension, a portent of further trouble.

(2) The second result is one that more nearly concerns us who represent missionary work. How this crime of the twentieth century will affect the interests of the work of God in the future, I cannot say; for the moment it is a disaster. Few Jews distinguish between nominal and true Christianity, and how should they? This tragedy has been Christian in name, and is condoned and excused by many intelligent people in Christian circles who are prejudiced against the Jews. Think of the masses of Jews in Russia who see little else than such "Christianity" as this! Of the 800 arrests made in Kischineff, more than half the plunderers were set free; the rest, murderers included, have but short terms of imprisonment. A lady singer in Odessa offered to give a concert in aid of the Kischineff Jews. She was refused permission to do so, but it was intimated that it was open to her to give the concert in aid of the families of the imprisoned law-breakers! Is there not a call for a protest, not simply in the name of humanity, but by and on behalf of those who love Israel because they love their Lord, and who would fain bear and share their sufferings with them?

FATHER JOHN'S MESSAGE.

Till now the most prominent Christian protests in Russia against the Christian population of Kischineff have been the large gift of Count Tolstoi, and the public utterance of Father Ivan, the well-known Russian priest of Cronstadt. Enemies in theology, they are one in this matter. Many in Scotland and England have read Dr. Alexander Whyte's little book on "Father John," and hold this eminent Russian priest of Cronstadt to be a good man, in spite of the errors of the church to which he belongs. He is the most important figure in the Russian Greek Church at this moment, and an intimate friend of the Czar, for whom he here speaks as well as for himself. His protest took the form of a letter to the Novosti, reproduced in full in the Russian Jewish organ Der Fraind (in Yiddish) of May 1 and 14, from which I translate it freely:—

"In one of the papers, I have read the sad news that the Kischineff Christians have attacked the Jews, have robbed their dwellings and shops, and have taken Jewish lives. My astonishment is too great for expression at such an unheard-of thing. I remember there was something like it in 1881, but then it was otherwise in cause and far less in extent. What has now brought our Russian Christian people to commit such horrors, a people so simple and so good? The heart of the Emperor, which yearns for the well-being and peace of his people, and for the maintenance of order in his dominions, is greatly upset at this awful tragedy. And when did it take place? In the holy Easter week, when all created beings in heaven and on earth, angels and believing Christians, rejoice over the resurrection of our Lord from the dead, the first-fruits of new life for every man. How can people so understand this, our greatest, Christian feast? How can Russians be so blinded?

"Instead of a Christian feast, they have made it a feast in honour of Satan; they have made earth a hell. Certainly the Christians have not learned this from their God, our heavenly Teacher, the meek and the lowly, who will not break a bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax (Matt. xii. 20). The meaning of this is that He will not cast off the needy nor the despised, nor destroy the life of any soul still aflame with faith, till they have come to Him in true repentance. Russian people, our brethren, what have you done? Why have you become wild and savage, to fall upon and rob people who dwell with you in one fatherland, under the rule and protection of our Russian Emperor and his duly appointed ministers and governors? Why have you done such bloody work upon men like unto yourselves? You have forgotten your Christian calling and Christ's own words: 'Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart' (Matt. xi. 29), and how He taught His disciples to be humble and kind.

"On one occasion, when He wished to go to Jerusalem, the Lord sent messengers before Him, who came into a Samaritan village to prepare the hearts of the people. But these people would not receive Him, because He had the appearance of one who intended to go to Jerusalem. When His disciples James and John saw this, they said: 'Lord, wilt Thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elijah did?' But He turned to them and rebuked them and said: 'Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of; for the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them.' And they went to another village.

"Wherever there is a Christian, there should there be this spirit. But what is the spirit which the people of Kischineff have manifested towards the Jews? The spirit of Satan. 'Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His' (Rom. viii. 9). He is not of Christ, but a servant of Satan, and will have the same end as he. James and John would have shown their devotion to God by calling down fire from heaven to destroy the Samaritans, but God sternly forbade it. Oh, how sternly would He have forbidden the robbers of Kischineff to murder Jews and plunder their dwellings! See to it, brother Russians, whose spirit dwells in you! Injure none, and on no account. 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you' (Matt. v. 44). This is in brief my message to you in the Gospel, brother Russians, with regard to the bloody massacre of innocent Jews and their children."

It is good, so far as it goes, that the above, together with the cited texts from the New Testament, has appeared in the Jewish Press in Russia. Good may come out of evil. But, once more, I express my conviction that the most effective and necessary testimony for Christ at this moment is a share in the Relief Fund, gathered and offered by believing Christians in the Name of their Lord, that, through our mercy or "love in exercise," some wounds may be healed.

The Jewish Relief Committee formed in Kischineff, headed by Dr. Mutchnik (upon whom I called, while there), may safely be trusted to administer funds committed to it. The Jews will do their part, of that there is no doubt; the general public in all civilized countries will doubtless help on philanthropic grounds. Shall earnest and believing Christians, and friends of Israel as such, send in their contributions, grieved for the affliction of Joseph?

SAMUEL H. WILKINSON.

Hospital for the Insane.

IN these days of world-wide travelling Palestine has become much easier to reach than it was fifty years ago, when it meant hardship and danger which had to be encountered daily. Notwithstanding the improvements in most things, the lot of the insane has until recently remained the same. Chains and dungeons in monasteries and convents have always awaited those who become mentally afflicted.

The natives of Palestine believe that the insane are "devil possessed," and being so, no treatment, however cruel or harsh, is considered too bad to drive the evil spirits out of the poor sufferers. The Lebanon Hospital, which is now in its fourth year, has, under the blessing of God, brought quite a revolution in the treatment of the insane. As a proof we might mention that the Patriarch of the Maronite Church, who at first was a bitter opponent (as the Hospital would interfere with his income, through sufferers being withheld from priestly care), has changed entirely in his attitude, and has even sent one of his favourite priests to be treated. The priest was taken ill whilst preaching against Protestants in Brumana, where the founder of this institution also established a large mission. His brother priests, on delivering him at the institution, were asked by Mr. Waldmuir why they brought him there instead of taking him under their own care; and they replied that they had heard of the good care and love shown to the poor afflicted, so different to that shown under their saints' care. The Patriarch also wrote a letter begging that the patient might be taken in!

During the year, about seventy-four people have been treated; many have left quite cured in mind, and, it is hoped, many have been led in Spirit also, for the workers seek to preach "Christ, and Him crucified," as the only Saviour. The committee rejoice that, with great care and economy, the work has been kept going, and is free from debt; but as death is removing helpers and subscribers, an earnest appeal is made for assistance in order that the good work may be carried on. The new annual report will be sent to any who may desire it. Address the secretary, Mr. Francis C. Brading, at 85, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

Awakening in Germany—1.

By COUNT A. BERNSTORFF.

TO understand the present religious movement in Germany, we must look back and glance at historical development. Two great religious awakenings have come over this country. The first was the Reformation. It was a work of the Spirit of God, which touched the nation to the quick, though, of course, many followed who were not personally converted. To the deep regret of all living Christians, the Reformation was superseded by a time of dry orthodoxy. The form remained, but the spirit was gone. There was no return to the Church of Rome, but there was Protestantism which had no life.

The second awakening came toward the end of the seventeenth century and the beginning of the eighteenth. It was the period of "Pietism." The names of August Hermann Francke, who built his great orphanages on faith; of Spener, who introduced the smaller gatherings for reading the Bible and for prayer (called at the time "conventicles"); and Count Zinzendorf, the founder of the Moravian Brethren, best designate this second revival of spiritual life in Germany. But again a period of religious indifference followed, or rather of unbelief. The great King Frederick of Prussia was a friend of the French atheist Voltaire, who expressed his belief that a hundred years later the Bible would only be found in the shops of antiquarians.

It has often been asked why the flourishing Pietist movement was swept away and superseded by a Rationalist era. Lutherans, who attach great value to creeds, generally said that the Pietists had no sufficiently clear dogmatic position, that their personal piety was not equal to the storms of unbelief. I should rather say that the aggressive element was wanting. The Christians of those days held sweet fellowship with each other; they separated from the world to live closer to their Saviour; but the missionary spirit was deficient.

FEATURES OF THE MOVEMENT.

We are now in the midst of the third great awakening. Many things contributed to prepare it. Like a prophet, Wichern stood up to rouse his people. But the ideas he held himself were not quite taken up by his followers. The Home Mission is a great tree in Germany now, and many birds find shelter under its branches; but it has tried chiefly to help the destitute classes, and this in a very close connection with the Established Church. The thought of bringing the Gospel to every soul was taken up afterwards by other men; but the Home Mission and the Deaconesses' Institutions, founded by Pastor Fliedner, did a great deal to prepare the way. The same must be said of the Sunday-schools, which since they were originated in 1863 by the agency of Mr. Albert Woodruff, of New York, have done much to introduce lay work into the Church.

The present evangelistic movement is about twenty years old. I suppose it is about that movement that your readers wish to hear. In describing it I should like at once to say that I am far from thinking that within this movement alone God's true children are to be found, and that it is the only means which God uses for building up His Kingdom; but it certainly is a powerful agency, and, as far as my personal opinion goes, the most powerful one in the spreading of true spiritual life.

If we are asked, Who is the leader of this movement? we can honestly say there is none; but we have a great many men whom the Lord has used pre-eminently. Some of these have already gone home, like Professor Christlieb, of Bonn, Baron Oertzen, of Hamburg, and Pastor von Schlümbach. The last-mentioned came over from America in 1882, and gave us powerful impulses. To his influence is due the foundation of Young Men's Christian Associations on the English-American system. They are, it is true, a special work, but perhaps no institution has done so much to spread healthy Evangelical ideas as the Y.M.C.A. in Berlin, 34, Wilhelmstrasse. While the old associations were chiefly governed by the pastors, and had the aim of preserving young men from moral downfall, and, as was once said, of "Christianizing their hours of recreation," the new Association introduced new principles. It employs various outward helps (gymnasium, reading-room, library—room open all day, and meetings of some kind every night) as subservient to the great object.

This one object is the salvation of souls, the conversion of young men to Christ, and the training of workers for Christ. The Association has already been able to furnish many a Christian work with helpers, and numbers of young men have been brought to a decided religious life, and to a clear standing for the Master. As it is a work done by laymen, it has also helped to do away with the old prejudice that the pastor alone ought to preach the Word.

There were evangelistic organizations at an earlier date. For instance, the Home Mission Society in Schleswig-Holstein, which received much help from the late Dr. Craig when he was still at Hamburg, has been in existence since 1858. It was founded by a simple shoemaker, who was afterwards himself the first itinerant preacher. Also in the district of Siegen (Westphalia) the Society for Preaching the Gospel existed already. But during the last twenty years, the movement has received new and strong impulses, and has spread in a general manner all over Germany. It was Professor Christlieb at Bonn who first drew the attention of German Christians to the necessity of evangelistic preaching. He founded the Johanneum, a training school for evangelists, which was started at Bonn after the Professor's death. There young men, who have the gift, and of whom one may fairly expect that they are called by the Lord, receive a three-years' training. We are well aware that evangelists cannot be made by education, but that it is a gift which the Lord grants to some of His servants; but, nevertheless, thorough Bible study is necessary for those who mean to enter upon such work.

ORGANISERS AND HELPERS.

Professor Christlieb proposed to Court-Chaplain Dr. Stöcker to invite the German-American Pastor von Schlümbach for a series of evangelistic meetings in Berlin. Those first gatherings, in November, 1882, will never be forgotten. Hearts were touched, and the new Young Men's Christian Association, aforementioned, as well as an evangelistic agency in the North of Berlin, were the practical results which remained. Dr. Stöcker is not quite in the movement himself—his heart belongs to Christian Socialism; but he deserves great credit for having at the time taken upon himself to introduce the Methodist Schlümbach into religious work in Berlin. Schlümbach, born in Wurtemberg, afterwards returned to the Lutheran Church, the church of his fathers, perhaps because he thought it would facilitate his work in Germany; but at the time he still belonged to the Methodist Church, through whose agency the infidel young German had become, in the United States of America, an ardent follower of Jesus.

Besides Schlümbach, Pastor Schrenk, a former missionary, took to evangelistic work. He was the first German pastor who dedicated himself exclusively to evangelization. He lives at Barmen, where he spends the short intervals of rest with his family, and goes where he is called. He is still in this work now, but no longer the only one. Pastor Paul and Pastor Keller are in the same position now; they left their pastorates to be free to go wherever they are called. Besides these, we have a great number of lay evangelists going through the country—trained, some of them, at the Johanneum, but many, also, at the St. Chrischona Pilgrim's Mission House near Basle. It was fortunate that, at this time, a number of independent men of the upper classes were able to enter into the work. Count Pückler followed on the track opened by Schlümbach, and in the beginning of 1883 dedicated himself exclusively to the Lord's work. He is now at the head of a large evangelistic agency in our capital, which works with a number of helpers in about eight parts of the town.

Baron Oertzen has been mentioned already. He was president of the Home Mission Society in Schleswig-Holstein from 1874 until his death in 1893. Count Lüttichen, who died two years ago, helped in young men's work. Baron Rothkirch has been president of the Young Men's Christian Association here since its beginning in 1883. Lieut.-Col. von Knobelsdorff, when he resigned his position in the army, took up the blue ribbon movement, but is chiefly occupied in evangelizing all over the country. Lieut.-General von Viebahn, now also free from military duty, is working among the soldiers. He writes weekly tracts for the army, which are spread in the barracks.

I am happy to be able to mention all these names. They are all dear friends of mine, with whom it is a deep satisfaction to co-operate in the unity of the Spirit. Let me not omit the name of the well-known Pastor Stockmayer, of Hauptmeil. His visits to Germany have done much to deepen the movement. I shall leave to a further letter the description of the organization of the movement.

The Missionary Association.

FROM all parts of the world, missionaries continue to write testifying to their deep interest in the formation of the Missionary Association. Men and women all over the mission-field have been longing to experience the fulness of the Spirit, and have shown themselves eager to unite with one another, and with believers in the home lands, in waiting upon God that they may no longer come short of their great privilege. While all recognise the possibility of being filled with the Spirit, the pressing home of the absolute necessity of enjoying this, as well as the imperative nature of the command, is believed to be the prelude to the changing of many lives from barrenness to fruitfulness.

The following extracts will serve to indicate the tenor of a number of letters received from missionaries in India:—

There can be no doubt that we all need more of the fulness and blessing of the Holy Spirit in our own lives, and overflowing from us to others all around.

I agree fully with your aim and purposes, and pray to God that He will give us the desire of our hearts; that is, to fill all His dear children everywhere, especially the missionaries and workers in the field, with the Holy Ghost. It is the great need of the day.

I believe that God our Father will make the Association the cause of a great blessing at home and abroad. Really we are only workers for God, and it is His work to make the seed fruitful.

From North America a worker sends a letter showing how useful the organization may prove in cases like his own:—

I desire to class myself among those who are needing and seeking to be taught "the deep things of God," the things concerning the "life more abundant." It is only just lately that I have realized what an important factor the Holy Spirit is in all my work, and how "nothing but leaves" is produced without His presence.

Workers in the islands of the sea have yielded a ready response to the offer of membership:—

The Association emphasizes a point which has often been the subject of my thoughts and earnest desire. May it be a means of great blessing and help to all of us who join hands and hearts in seeking the quickening power which shall transform us and revivify our work.

The Monthly Letters of the Association have been highly appreciated, and missionaries eagerly desire that friends and colleagues should be made sharers in the privilege:—

Would you kindly send a copy also to our evangelist, who reads English and is very much interested in the work of the Holy Spirit, as he is living in another place, and I do not like to give away my own.

Its arrival is timely, following as it does on Dr. Pentecost's visit to Shanghai. He reminded the missionary body that the Gospel is only preached when it is accompanied by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

Your paper emphasizes the only source of fresh and constant power.

It is what we missionaries need, and ought to be in every missionary home.

Applications for membership and other communications from friends at home or from missionaries should be addressed to the Secretary, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

A "Friend" Evangelist.

THE LATE MISS HARRIET GREEN.

THE gifted and cultured lady whose portrait we give was a birthright member of the Society of Friends. Born at Saffron Walden in 1844, she came of a Quaker family, members of which have for generations appeared on the roll of accredited ministers of that Society. Her father was Thomas Day Green, and her mother was Harriet Adcock, of Linton, a cousin of Robert Adcock, of Norwich, who is well known to many in connection with the Victoria Hall Mission in that city.

Saffron Walden is favoured with a very active colony of Friends. Through the munificence of a wealthy and public-spirited townsman, the late George Stacey Gibson, their meeting-house was rebuilt and enlarged. Mr. Gibson also built the Friends' school, which was removed thence from Croydon some years since.

With such environment, and with inherited proclivities, Miss Green early in life gave herself to the Lord's work. She was for some years honorary directress of an orphanage in her native town; but, when released from filial duties by the death of her surviving parent, her heart went out to "the regions beyond." She procured the authorization of her Society to proceed on a missionary tour in the United States of America, where, among other experiences, she had the joy of successfully working among the aborigines, in addition to her visits to various Quaker settlements, and attendance at many Yearly and Quarterly Meetings.

She was invalided home in 1899, and was compelled to rest for some time, during which period she took part in the work of the Friends' meeting in her native town. There she found herself in a veritable hive of industry, a centre of many efforts for saving and elevating poor fallen humanity, by leading individuals to "the place called Calvary." She also obeyed the apostolic injunction by showing hospitality in a practical way, inviting bereaved or semi-invalid friends to stay with her in her comfortable home; and she herself gladly participated in the soothing worship and helpful ministrations of her fellow-worshippers.

HER FINAL SPHERE.

As soon as she could obtain medical certificates of fitness, she re-crossed the Atlantic, and in resuming her work in remote portions of the States she closed her bright earthly career, succumbing to an operation for appendicitis.

In letters dated Greensboro', N.C., March 16 and 17 last, Miss S. M. Fry, who was travelling with her, informed friends in this country that Miss Green was suffering acute pain, and only obtaining sleep through the injection of morphia. The following extracts are from later communications:—

About 6.30 (March 18) I was called; a change had come very quickly. She was unconscious, did not recognise me, or speak again. The end came very quietly; I do not think she really suffered then. Her face was perfectly natural and sweet, and her eyes luminous, already looking into the other sphere. She said she wished to be buried at Guildford, which I therefore arranged. She wanted to "get better" she said, when I had told her what a serious view the doctor took of the result; and, when I said, "Why, yes, of course;" she answered, "But some people don't want to live." She said, "Whatever happens, it is all right; it will be the Lord's will."

She underwent the operation with the calmness and fearlessness of a little child who knows nothing—it was beautiful. Once I said, it seemed as if she had so much work left to do here; she only said, "Yes." If I began to talk about the good that Harriet has done in this country, and how she will be missed, and how much good she has done me personally, I would never end—and we all know it.

Recalling their time of united service for the Lord, with many seasons of happy, unrestrained intercourse on spiritual things, Miss Fry says:—

Harriet has frequently said to me that she saw nothing beyond her work in America; but as she had another year or more here, it did not seem curious. She told Allen Jay she did not see anything beyond Canada, and somehow our plans to go to the place after Greensboro' had been left long in fixing, as the way did not seem clear about them.

While in the Greensboro' Station one day, she told me to call back one of the coloured men who had helped to carry her, and said to him that "she did not know if she would be alive in twenty-four hours, but would be going to her Best Friend, and hoped he also knew Him." The man answered "Yes," but I don't think understood the question. I think it is no exaggeration to say that Harriet never went into a house without leaving some one or more in it better than she found them. You will have the sympathy of thousands of people over here, though you probably may never hear of a tenth part of what is felt.

Miss Green had been in North Carolina just four weeks when the home-call reached her. In that time she had been present at four Quarterly Meetings, and had been holding services almost every day and evening. As a result of meetings at Guildford College some were definitely converted, and the whole religious life of the College was reported, by Professor Thomas Newlin, to be much deepened. Her last audible prayer was on behalf of the students, who were much on her heart. In home circles, gatherings of believers, and more general meetings, she was ever welcome. Twice on one day, about a week before the end, a friend remarked that she looked tired and appeared to be much in need of rest; but her reply was, "Oh, no, I am not tired. I do not need rest."

The note of personal conviction and assurance impressed all who heard Miss Green preach. A remarkable capacity for adapting herself to changing circumstances enabled her to do effective work where there were many distractions, and so to make herself at home among all classes of people as to be able effectively to witness for Christ among them. One friend declared afterwards that no one ever heard her speak many minutes without realizing that she believed with all her soul in the Gospel she was preaching. She spoke as one who knew.

For the extracts and a number of the facts given we are indebted to our contemporary, The Friend.

Evangelical Schools at Pisa.

THE first time the writer became acquainted with the Carruthers Evangelical Institute was on the occasion of an exhibition of the work of the pupils. It was the most fascinating and impressive introduction one could have to it and Miss Carruthers; an ocular proof of what was done in one department alone, and that the one she would consider the least important. The exhibition was held in the great Palazzo in the Borgo, commanding the square, which in ancient days belonged to an order of monks, but from the middle of the eighteenth century became the Casino dei Nobili, and the centre of all the amusements of Pisa. Miss Carruthers purchased it in 1881. And how the scene had changed!

It was a festa, when all the people made holiday, and were at liberty to attend the exhibition of their children's handiwork. They were thronging into the great dark hall. A flower stall within the wide doorway made a brilliant bit of colour, and the people in their holiday attire, with happy faces and laughing voices, were going up and down a staircase which might have been made for a race of giants, and through the great doors at the top, which are well worth a visit in themselves. These open into a wide long gallery, with marble pavement, a row of splendid windows on one side and the stately apartments on the other.

Here stood a group of pleasant-looking women, Miss Carruthers' teachers and officials, all of whom are Evangelicals, former pupils in the schools, and an object lesson in themselves of the long and successful work of many years. We were ushered into the former ball-room, a hall of magnificent proportions, whose area would suffice for that of several modern houses. The whole four sides were flanked with tables piled with work of every description. The quantity proved the number, as well as the quality, of the pupils.

There are at present 400 children enrolled in the schools in town and country, and the variety and excellence showed the efficiency of the teachers. The exhibition was a revelation of the energy and organizing power which evolved and created the whole educational system of the Carruthers Evangelical Institute.

The animation of the people showed how they valued this labour of love, and their gratification at the too unusual sight of visitors was most touching. Calling attention to the work of their own children who pressed eagerly around:—

"It was my girl who did what you are admiring, Signora." Or pushing forward a dark-eyed blushing child, "Ecco la creatura che ha fatto quello."

The girls exhibited sets of beautifully made outfits in coarse and fine linen; several had prepared their own trousseaux with trimmings of their own embroidery. There were heaps of skirts and jackets, and well-knitted socks and stockings, all their own property, and which must be a great saving to the poor parents.

Beside the useful were fancy articles of all kinds, some of which had been ordered by friends of their own; and sympathizers in England can thus give very material support to this good work.

The boys of Cisanello and San Michele had their side of the show—carving, leather work, writing-cases, note-books, letter bags, drawings, and brass trays of various sizes.

This magnificent work has been carried on single-handed by one woman for over thirty years. A little only can be told of what is being done in the Borgo schools. There is much more to be said of them.

THE

Science and Mystery of Prayer

By REV. FREDERIC C. SPURR.

1. Prayer in General—the Difficulties and Objections.

NO greater or more pressing question can occupy us than that which concerns our relations with God. He is our First Beginning and our Last End; we exist entirely and solely for His glory. Deep in our hearts we cry after Him; created for Himself, we are disquieted until we find Him. But can human hearts really know Him? May they hold converse with Him? If they speak to Him, is there an absolute assurance that they will be heard?

Speaking broadly, only two replies are possible—the reply of irreligion, which is a pronounced negative, and the answer of faith, which is a triumphant affirmative. There are, however, many people who oscillate between these two positions. They would indignantly object to be classed with unbelievers, and yet they lack the triumphant certainty of faith. The notion of prayer is, to them, feeble, and their converse with God is not free.

The subtle attacks made upon faith, both in the Press and upon the platform, have not been without their effect upon Christian hearts. One encounters everywhere men and women who have abandoned their former confidence in Divine things, and who now speak and act with hesitation.

A COMMON OBJECTION.

Before proceeding further, it seems necessary to devote a little attention to one freely-offered objection to prayer, which, more than anything else, is accountable for spiritual paralysis before the throne of grace.

The idea of any interference with the fixed order of Nature, such as prayer supposes, is utterly contrary to all that science creditably teaches. It is beyond doubt that the universe is governed by invariable laws, and it is simply unreasonable to suppose that God will disarrange the universal machinery, simply to satisfy the caprice of praying people. Law reigns supreme, and we must submit to it.

It is of no use to ignore what men are saying, even though their objections (such as these) are so unscientific and thin, since for untrained minds they possess a specious and a fatal power. Let us then frankly face this objection. When "the laws of Nature" are thus opposed to the free action of God, we must be very careful that we are not imposed upon by a fine-sounding phrase.

In our turn, we ask firmly of the objector, "What do you mean by 'Law?'" and "What do you mean by 'Nature?'" No two words have been more abused than these; they are employed most loosely by persons who ought to know better. To conceive of "law" as an automatic, blind, irresistible force, is to entirely mistake its meaning. What do we know of the real "laws of Nature?" Absolutely nothing. What we do know is, that close and long-continued observation on the part of scientists has revealed an invariable regularity in the movement of created things.

LAW—GOD'S METHOD OF WORKING.

From phenomena the laws of Nature have been deduced, but what the "laws" themselves are, we simply do not know, nor are we ever likely to know in this world. Nor can we say certainly that the regular movements which have been hitherto observed will never vary in the future. Nor can we say how many cross-forces are at work in the universe, which may amply provide for continual modifications of minor things, while the grand things remain undisturbed. What men call "law" is, as the late Dr. Liddon said, "simply our way of conceiving of the method of God's working."

Deduction of the unknown from the known is as far as we can get, and no man is entitled to speak as if he knew everything. It is absurd to suppose that all the secrets known to God can be surprised by human investigation. We know much of the working of the universe, but that "much" is infinitely little compared to what is yet to be known. That "little," therefore, does not give any man the right to affirm that "the laws of Nature" make prayer impossible. One day we may know the how of answered prayer, but let no one deny its reality because its method cannot at present be recognised.

The word, "Nature," is also abused by men who would destroy the notion of prayer—"the laws of Nature prevent it, &c." But what is intended by "Nature"? "Nature" is not one monotonous web of one tedious quality. Nature is departmental, and the higher departments dominate the lower. Things impossible to physical nature are simple enough to human nature. The possession of WILL-power gives superiority to human nature over physical nature. For example, the law of gravitation holds to the ground both stones and men. The stones, unable to resist, remain prisoners of this "law," and lie perpetually in its embrace. But men, whose wills impel them to perform certain journeys, supersede the law of gravitation each time they raise their feet from the ground. Or men may, for their convenience, will to remove, from one place to another, certain stones, which could never be removed at all but for their endeavour. In either case there is no violation of the law of gravitation: it is simply, for the time being, superseded.

Now if we are thus free temporarily to supersede certain laws, who will dare in the name of sense or science to deny a similar free action to Him who knows all things, who holds the secret of all forces, and whose wisdom acts with beautiful precision and order?

ANOTHER DIFFICULTY.

But there is, unhappily, another sentiment which, possessing human breasts, tends to stultify the force of prayer.

God is All-Wise and All-Good. He knows better than we do what we really need. His Providence has arranged everything for us. His Omniscience foresees our entire life. To ask Him for anything in these circumstances is impertinence. All that we need is to submit to whatever comes, that being the best for us.

Of course this is pure fatalism decked out in religious garb. Granted that God knows all about our lives, this is no reason for refusing to enter into living communion with Him. But His knowledge of us does not involve the position that there is anything fatalistic about our lives.

Two things we must ever cling to as essentials of thought. First, that God has for each of us a particular goal as well as a general goal. The general goal for the whole universe is His glory; but the particular goal for the individual is His glory in a certain specific direction. Secondly, the route to this goal is free, so far as we are concerned, and being free, it may be changed either by ourselves or by God. But the goal is never changed.

Suppose a man setting out from one point to reach another: he naturally takes the direct way to his destination. But on his way he discovers that the main streets are impassable. He at once makes a detour along certain backways. Why? In order to reach his goal. His purpose to arrive at a given place remains undisturbed throughout, and he changes his route in order to accomplish that purpose. So the definite end which God proposes for Himself and for us remains always the same, but the route is often changed, owing to the exercise of human freedom deranging the direct way. Only in this way is it possible to reconcile the truths of Divine freedom and human freedom. And it is concerning this change of route that there is room for the exercise of prayer.

Our own sin or the action of others may block our path; again prayer is needed for direction as to the detour we must make. And He Who knows whither every path leads will indicate to us the way that we must tread.

The Lord is my Shepherd.

I'm only a poor old creature,
I can only lie here and think
Of the Psalm that speaks of the Shepherd,
And the stream where the thirsty drink.

I sit and read o' the Shepherd,
It eases the pain for a time;
'Twas for me the verses were written,
It says I may call them mine.

Do you think He'll mind my groaning,
It's sometimes so hard to bear?
It'll soon be over, yonder,
Where God wipes away every tear.

When you go, you'll not forget me,
But tell the dear Lord in your prayer
How there's me, and a heap o' others
Who've a lot o' pain to bear.

Then I'm sure He will forgive us,
As it says in the text you told,
And carry us on His shoulder
To the land wi' the streets of gold.

Home Missions.

Reaching the Masses

IN IRELAND.

YEAR by year the Irish Evangelization Society has been able to submit to its numerous friends reports from many parts of Ireland testifying how widely the labours of the workers have been used of God. The record of 1902 endeavours is full of similar encouragement.

Its agents visit different places on the invitation of friends living there, and carry on a mission for three to six weeks, having Gospel meetings every evening, and several on Sunday, at hours which do not interfere with any existing Protestant worship.

From the many centres at which fruitful missions have been conducted, cheering testimony has followed the work. Writing from Knockskagh, where one of the Society's agents held a series of services, a resident says :—

The mission at Knockskagh proved a great blessing indeed to this neighbourhood. Many people of considerable social standing could not, at first, see the need of such missions; these very people, when they heard the Gospel preached with such force and put forth with such wonderful power and earnestness, have been convinced of the reality of eternal things. It is a blessed thing when those whose life was almost absorbed in horse-racing, gambling, the public-house, &c., are now, through the constraining love of Jesus, turned away from such things.

There had not been anything of the kind in this part of the country; old people say they never saw so many come together, and this is to show you the interest that was taken in the meetings in a country place where over ninety per cent. of the people are Roman Catholics. In the closing week of the mission the people got so intensely in earnest about their souls that they came great distances every night, many expressing a desire to be prayed for, and so we urged Mr. Burrows to continue for another week, which he did with blessed results.

In the course of an appreciative letter concerning a mission at Ballymoney, Rev. D. D. Boyle writes :—

The addresses were of the highest order I ever heard any evangelist give. They indicated careful preparation, orderliness of thought, were clearly expressed, and carried power and conviction in every sentence. The attendance was good. I know that a goodly number came from considerable distances, five and six miles, and attended regularly. Spiritual results are not easily tabulated, the full fruit of such work is only gathered after many days. However, I can state that many have been led to think, and to think soberly, of God and duty in relation to life.

Some, without doubt, have been led to decision for Christ, while many have had their Christian life stimulated, deepened and quickened. I have heard prayers offered in the after meetings in which thanks were given to God for doubts removed, the way made clearer, Christ made more precious.

The largest hall of the Society was erected in Dungannon in May, and the mission was attended with encouraging results. The meetings were conducted by Mr. Arthur Parke. Referring to the mission, Mr. Thomas Harte, of Miltown, wrote :—

The meetings increased in size and interest as the mission proceeded, and not only was a good number of the unsaved led into the acceptance of the Saviour; but God's people were stimulated to a "closer walk." I know I am speaking the feelings of a large number when I say we are deeply grateful for such an evangelist, and we hope he may in the near future be again directed to our town.—In the Master's service, yours truly.

A resident of Cullion, writing of a mission by another of the society's agents in that town, says :—

The work was hard and trying, because no evangelistic services were held in these places, but although that has been the case, I am very glad to be able to say that as many of the hardest sat night after night and listened to the old, old story sounding forth in the power of the Spirit from the lips of one of his own beloved and honoured servants, Mr. Crawford, they yielded their all to the pleadings of the Blessed One, and are now walking the path that the meek and lowly Jesus trod. We hope that the Irish Evangelization Society may never want the blessing of Almighty God and funds to carry on the great work of winning souls.

The annual report embodies many similar testimonies which should speak for themselves to all who desire to see the Lord's cause prosper in Ireland. Copies will be gladly forwarded by the secretary, Mr. James Barton, Dundalk.

The Houses of Rest.

SINCE November last year Christians in many parts of the world have been petitioning the Throne of Grace on behalf of the beloved founder of the Houses of Rest, who has been laid aside by a serious illness. These prayers have been answered, and Miss Mason was once more able to take her wonted part in the anniversary gathering on Friday last, to the joy of a large number of friends who assembled. In the absence of Mr. John Cory (who was detained abroad through ill-health), Lieutenant-Colonel Oldham presided.

The first to offer to Miss Mason a warm welcome was Rev. F. B. Meyer. He spoke of her capacity for manifesting the strength and sweetness of the Gospel—a combination that cannot always be found—and voiced the desires of all present when he expressed the hope that Miss Mason would be spared for yet many years to come to be a minister to many.

The review of the year was presented by the Chairman. It naturally opened with a note of praise to God for His goodness in restoring to health the superintendent of the institutions. A cause for much thankfulness is the fact that all the interests connected with the Houses of Rest continue to prosper, and the illness of Miss Mason has not interfered with the usefulness of the work. Of necessity it will result in some small changes in the future. That which she has been able to do gratuitously must now to some extent fall into the hands of paid helpers. Miss Mason hopes, however, to continue the general oversight of the work. The report states that "Patient endurance" has been the watchword, boundless has been the Lord's blessing, and great His mercies, both in spiritual and temporal things.

Although a whole generation has passed away since the first Home was opened, it is cheering to know that there are so many who delight to find in this work an opportunity of supplying the needs of the Lord's labourers, who could not make any appeal on their own behalf.

During the year there have been 844 admissions to the Houses of Rest. Very varied have been the circumstances of the visitors received and very distant the spheres of labour represented. Missionaries returning from their different scenes of labour often find after a long absence few, if any, friends are left to offer them a home. To such as these the door of the House of Rest is always open, so long as there is a vacant room. The Eastbourne Home still retains the valued services of Miss Emily Hawkes, and visitors have not only enjoyed the benefits of health-giving environment, but spiritual help and quickening have been the result to many. Thus the institutions are fulfilling their mission in sending forth again and again labourers strengthened not only to continue their work, but to do so with cheerful hearts. The Aged Workers' Home affords a life-long home to Christian women whose lives have been spent in some definite Christian work either at home or abroad.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch followed with a brief exposition of Psa. lxvi. 9, "Who holdeth our soul in life." He remarked that to the Christian physical life is a precious treasure, because of the innumerable opportunities it affords for rendering service to others, and spoke in appreciative terms of the useful purpose served by the Houses of Rest. Scattered in all parts of the world are those who remember the Pillar Room with gratitude, and the Houses of Rest with thankfulness.

MISS WESTON'S TRIBUTE.

Similar glad testimony was given by Miss Weston (Sailors' Home, Portsmouth). Among the various developments of Christian work, she did not know one more Christlike than that of the Houses of Rest. Miss Mason nearly forty years ago was the pioneer of Homes and Houses of Rest now established in various parts of the country. Christian workers, faint with the heat and burden of the day, weak in body and often depressed in mind, have cause to thank Miss Mason every day that she opens her doors to them irrespective of creed and denomination, provided that they love the Lord Jesus Christ and work for Him. The loving ministrations of Miss Mason and her helpers do much toward renewing the spiritual and physical strength of those who seek rest after arduous toil at home or abroad. The founder of the Homes has given unstintedly of her time, health, and means, and Miss Weston pleaded that every effort should be made to widen the circle of friends interested in the work in order that Miss Mason may be relieved from financial anxiety. A sum of £200 is needed just now for redecorating the Homes at St. John's Wood and Eastbourne.

A few words of encouragement were added by Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, wishing God-speed to Miss Mason in the service she is rendering to all the churches.

The Aged Christian Blind.

THE report presented at the twenty-third annual meeting of the Homes for Aged Blind Men and Women, Crouch Hill, showed that the year 1902 had been a time of encouragement and progress. Mr. J. T. Henderson presided, and there were several addresses by local ministers and friends. The institution has at present 104 inmates, including ten at the Southend branch. Fifty are over seventy years of age, eighteen are over eighty, and four are over ninety. The general health of the old people has been above the average, though several are in a feeble or infirm state.

Vacancies are filled up as they occur from an apparently ever-increasing number of eagerly-waiting applicants. The Homes represent a great and ever-growing want, as there are about 3,000 blind persons in the metropolis, a large proportion being of the indigent kind; and those who find their way into the Homes are generally rescued from a life of suffering.

"The committee rejoice," it was remarked in the report, "that they have been able to befriend many most deserving persons, whose pathetic circumstances would, were they known, excite the deepest sympathy of those who have hearts to feel for the needs of their fellow creatures."

It has been the custom during each successive July to hold a garden-party for blind persons who pass a monotonous life in London workhouses. Gospel meetings are regularly held in the Jubilee Hall of the Homes. There are also held educational classes for teaching the blind to read, &c. The religious services on Sundays and week-nights are undertaken by ministers in the neighbourhood, who volunteer to conduct them. The holiday home at Southend has proved a blessing in many ways, for it is not only used by old people sent down from London, but outsiders who are sightless, as well as others who may be only partially blind, are admitted at a small charge. The Corporation of London has sent a donation to the institution of £105, while lesser amounts have come to hand from several City Companies.

The superintendents of the work are Mr. and Mrs. Bright, themselves both blind, but possessed of wonderful sympathy and tact. The address of the Homes is Hanley Road, Crouch Hill, N.

Clapham Conference.—Arrangements for the Annual Prophetic Conference at Clapham are now complete. The meetings are to be held this year in the Presbyterian Church Lecture Hall, Clapham Road, June 17-19, and the speakers include Lord Radstock, Dr. Woods Smyth, Revs. F. Paynter, J. Gosset-Tanner, T. George, H. C. Sturdy, N. S. Taylor, &c. The circular of invitation urges the necessity of living daily in "an attitude of earnest heartfelt expectation, looking not for death, but for the coming of Him who loves us so exceedingly, not occupied with mere speculative truth, but with our whole heart and soul waiting for His return from Heaven."

A Missionary Breakfast.

THE twenty-fifth annual missionary meeting in connection with the church at Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, was held on Whit-Monday morning, and was more largely attended than in any previous year. Pastor Frank White presided, and twenty-six missionaries were present. These represented witness and work for Christ among Jews, Roman Catholics, Mohammedans, Hindus, Buddhists, and Fetish-worshippers.

Rabbi Lichtenstein's greeting to his fellow-believers in the Lord Jesus Christ in all lands formed a fitting and impressive climax to the address of Rev. David Baron, who acted as the Rabbi's interpreter. Dr. Harry Guinness's appeal for prayer for a revival on the Upper Congo, such as was wrought at Manteke and elsewhere on the Lower Congo some years ago, emphasized the fact that there are "regions beyond" in the sphere of intercession yet to be pressed into by spirit-filled believers. Mr. David Gardiner, of the Ceylon and India General Mission, bore beautiful witness to the faithfulness of God in answering prayer.

Rev. H. Sutton Smith, from Yakusu, Central Africa, spoke of the wonderful works of God in the Dark Continent, and called for a more intense interest in the evangelization of its "few great kingdoms" and "innumerable smaller tribes." Pasteur Le Coat spoke of Gospel progress in benighted Brittany; and Pastor Wright Hay expressed the earnest hope that the money-offering of the morning (the largest yet made at the breakfast) might be the least of the offerings brought to the Lord by the meeting—that lives might be yielded to Him for missionary service wherever He might choose.

In addition to the addresses in the public meeting, brief speeches were made by eight missionaries over the breakfast table, and it was felt that some of these pointed messages were as seed sown, with a graciously-given pledge of fruitfulness, by the Lord of the harvest, who says, "The field is the world."

The Salvation Army.

UNDER the title of "Salvation Army War Despatches," Mr. Bramwell Booth issues a volume of brightly written accounts by various officers of the progress of the work at home and abroad. In the course of some words of introduction, Mr. Booth himself says: "To us who know the facts of our warfare in all lands, the greatest consolations do not come from the contemplation of even the most pleasing scenes of the year's story in Anglo-Saxon lands, but rather from the ever-growing triumph of our flag where it seemed at first almost doomed to defeat, merely because it was carried from this country."

Commissioner W. E. Oliphant, who commands in Germany, writes: "During recent months we have more and more come to the front, and have, whenever possible, hired the most beautiful theatres and the largest concert halls in the country, with marvellous results—results which are an astonishment to all who know anything about the difficulties of early days. But we are in this, as in many other respects, still in an experimental stage—we are still pioneers." As to the social work, "we have now rescue homes, children's homes, an hotel for unprotected women, as well as a home for discharged prisoners, who are often sent to us by the authorities themselves."

Reference is made by Commander Booth-Tucker to the fact that during General Booth's recent visit to the United States: "The vast work which had already been accomplished in America by the Salvation Army was readily acknowledged in the most generous manner by Press, platform, and pulpit alike; while from the White House—when he was the guest of Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, the President—and the Senate, to the humblest homes of the people, every door seemed to swing open to welcome our leader, and all hearts to bid him God-speed on his world-wide mission."

A "winter glimpse of three Scandinavian Headquarters" is given by Lieut.-Colonel Duff. One incident reads:—"A man, who had spent seventeen years in prison, got converted in the Army, and began to do regular work.

"'Why, John,' exclaimed a police-inspector who had taken a good deal of interest in him, 'I am glad to see that at last we have succeeded in turning you into a respectable workman. Your last turn in prison evidently did you good!'

"'No, sir,' was the answer. 'The prison did not help me. The change has come because my heart is different. I have found salvation through Jesus.'

"With tears in his eyes, the inspector turned away." Reporting

PROGRESS IN INDIA,

Commissioner T. Henry Howard says:—

"Perhaps one of the most significant evidences of the adaptability of the Army's methods is that the work is being carried on largely by the natives of India, the majority of whom were, in days gone by, heathen idol-worshippers. About 100 European, American, and Colonial officers are engaged in various responsible positions, but we have over 1,600 men and women of the country fully employed in the glorious work of preaching and teaching salvation in upwards of 1,500 places in India. The rate of progress will be seen in the fact that the number of native officers and teachers, including the cadets in training, has during the past five years increased by over 800 men and women."

Other "despatches" tell of labours in Japan, South Africa, etc.; while the operations in this country are briefly outlined by Commissioner T. B. Coombs.

The Church Army.

AT the completion of twenty-one years' work, chiefly among the poor and destitute, Rev. Wilson Carlile, of the Church Army, is able to point to large and important efforts for the evangelization and social reclamation of some of the neediest classes of the community.

IN PRISONS, REFORMATORIES, AND WORKHOUSES.

The striking annual report—"The Church Army Blue Book for 1903"—is a vivid record of Gospel effort. Among other enterprises, missions have been conducted during the year in 115 gaols, workhouses, and reformatories. The missioners preach the Gospel, delivering their message plainly and directly; they endeavour to make the prisoners feel that they are brothers and sisters, and to lead them to make a fresh start in life. Thousands of prisoners are visited in their cells, and the workers can tell of many and many a life wholly changed, and instance after instance can be given of men first influenced for good during the missions who are now leading useful and honourable lives. A convict prison chaplain writes that a prisoner remarked, "If us chaps had that man (the missioner) to speak to us outside, many of us would never have been here." Missions have also been held in nearly 300 workhouses, and in some of the reformatories. The testimony from the masters and chaplains alike is unanimous as to the good results following.

FROM "THE SUBMERGED."

Recent cases of reclamation illustrate both the difficulty and the effectiveness of the work. Among them is that of "R.W.H., arrested for attempted suicide, and discharged by the magistrate of a provincial police court on the condition that he entered a Church Army Labour Home. For some years he had been employed as an indoor servant in a large establishment near London, which, however, he left on securing work in the country. Owing to illness he was compelled to relinquish this, and after his small savings had gradually dwindled, he found himself homeless and friendless. In a moment of frenzy and despair, he committed the rash act which brought him within the pale of the law. Fortunately, however, the magistrate took a clement view of the case, and R.W.H., after staying two months in the Labour Home, was passed into a situation where he is now leading a respectable life."

Another case, described as that of "a first fall," of one who, "although he was full of energy and willingness to work, came to the Society crushed with the awfulness of his past sin. We were, however, able to help him, and probably his own letter will better describe how thankful he was that a helping hand had been stretched out to him in the hour of need. He writes:—

"'I have been to see the gentleman I was going to start work for. Thank God, I have a chance to retrieve my character, and I mean to do so with God's help. I now start on a new life, with a sharp lesson behind me to remind me that honesty is the best policy, and that there is One on high to look to in trial or trouble. My wife joins me in thanking you for all you have done and have tried to do for us.'"

Encouraging stories could be related regarding the labours of the Army's evangelists, mission nurses, and colporteurs in many parts of the country; while in connection with the women's social work no fewer than 1,445 women and girls were helped to a fresh start in life and hundreds of situations were obtained for the workless.

The headquarters of the Army are at 130, Edgware Road, W.

Soldiers on Salisbury Plain.

MISS PERKS' New Soldiers' Home, at Bulford Camp, was opened by Sir William Stirling on Thursday, June 4. The weather was all that could be desired, and a large company of friends gathered from a distance. Lord Roberts, who had hoped to be present (duties permitting) was prevented from coming; but his sympathy has been with the work from the first. Miss Perks, who is celebrating her thirtieth year of work among soldiers, described the Home as a wanderers' Home for prodigals, a shelter Home for the tired and tempted, a training Home for workers, and a rescue Home for the fallen.

The Chaplain-General, Bishop Taylor-Smith, spoke in hearty sympathy, and, on behalf of the soldiers he represented, said, "Thank you for the new home." He was glad to attend the opening, and was ready to attend the opening of yet another such home. The arrangement of the departments in the building was itself suggestive; first, the bar met the physical needs of the soldier; then the recreation and reading-rooms met the mental needs of the soldier; while the large hall met the higher needs of the soldier—his spiritual needs.

Lady Wimborne told how she had shared the anxieties of Miss Perks, both as to the site and the funds; she now shared with Miss Perks her joy in seeing the work thus completed.

After speaking, Lady Wimborne received purses and special donations towards the maintenance of the Home. These gifts, with free-will offerings at the doors, amounted to £350.

Furnishing the Home and other items connected with draining, to meet the demands of the War Office, and laying out paths, &c., have involved an outlay of over £900 above the subscribed £6,000 for the original cost.

The After-Care Association has helped many cases of a distressing nature during the past year. It seeks to facilitate the re-admission into society of persons who have recovered and are discharged from lunatic asylums. These are mostly poor, and some are friendless, but anxious to earn their own living, and are often capable of doing so. The association has obtained for them, when needful, an interval of change of living by boarding them out in the country or placing them in convalescent homes, or making them grants of money and clothing, and assisting them to obtain suitable employment. Of those who have received help may be mentioned:—An orphan girl, boarded out in the country, and afterwards placed in a suitable situation; a superior middle-aged woman, assisted by grant to meet one made by friends, and is now able to earn her living by needlework; a respectable young man in poor health, by co-operation with another society, was sent to a cottage home for two months, and returned to his work well and strong. The Secretary of the Association is Mr. H. Thornhill Roxby, Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

Progress at Portsmouth.

MEMORIAL stones were laid on Whit Monday at the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, in the new building now in course of erection. After a devotional service, the stones were laid by Mrs. R. Cope Morgan (of London), Mrs. C. de Winton, Commander Key, R.N., Mr. J. W. Seccombe (Fleet Paymaster, R.N.), Mr. G. H. Fison, and a sailor for the "One by One" Naval Band. Much earnest prayer was offered that the new building might be the birthplace of many souls.

At both the afternoon and evening meetings the chair was taken by Major Riley, K.R.R., and the director, Mr. Hogben, made a statement regarding the work. It had, he said, been born of prayer, and the faithfulness of God, during the fifteen years of its existence, was especially seen in the fact that some 3,000 names had been registered of those who had professed faith in the Lord Jesus, many of whom are known to be standing for God to-day, while some have died in the faith.

Helpful addresses were given by Revs. H. Brimmell (Wesleyan Army and Navy Chaplain), J. C. Martin, M.A (vicar of the Circus Church), H. Lindsay Young (vicar of St. John's, Portsea), J. Kemp (minister of Immanuel Baptist Church), G. Hern (minister of Lake Road Baptist Church); also Mr. Paget Wilkes (missionary from Japan), and three sailors. The spirit of unity and sympathy manifested by these representatives of different sections of the Church was both cheering and inspiring. £700 is needed to open the new mission free of debt; towards this £215 has been received.

Woking Soldiers' Home.

FRIENDS of Christian work among our soldiers will learn with interest that two cottages have been purchased for a Soldiers' Home in the Barrack Path, Woking. One of these cottages was rented for this purpose two years ago, and was much appreciated by the men then in the barracks; but it was found too small for permanent work. The committee have now purchased the cottage with one adjoining, and plans have been drawn for the necessary alterations and enlargement. The estimates, however, are much higher than was expected, and some £500 will be required to enlarge and furnish the buildings. It is hoped that the home will be opened in October next. (Miss) L. Churchill, Hon. Sec.

Brentford Canal Boat Mission.

THE seventh anniversary of the Canal Boatmen's Mission and Day Schools was celebrated at Brentford on Tuesday evening last week. Mr. W. Hedges, of Ealing, presided over a large gathering in the Vestry Hall, and among the speakers were Rev. Champion McGill, vicar of Isleworth, and Mr. Owen J. Llewelyn, Chief Government Inspector of Canal Boats.

The report presented by the missionary, Mr. R. Bamber, was an interesting record of good work accomplished under difficult conditions. The men, women, and children who live on the canal boats which pass through Brentford in a continuous stream throughout the year are for the most part entirely dependent on Mr. Bamber's efforts for whatever religious teaching they receive, very few being associated with any Christian church. Even in regard to secular education, the bulk of the children would grow up in complete ignorance were it not for the spasmodic schooling they obtain at the little day-school at Brentford.

The schoolroom and mission premises are quite inadequate for their purposes, and an effort is now being made to obtain the funds for building a new institute. A suitable site has been obtained, and about half the cost has been subscribed; £200 is still needed before building can be begun. Mr. F. Williams, 11, Windmill Road, Brentford, is the secretary.

The Blackgang Mission.—This Mission is now in its 30th year, and more than ever needed on account of the settlement in the Isle of Wight of the Monastic Orders from France. A sale of work will be held at 6 and 7, College Villas, Finchley Road, London, N.W., on Saturday, June 27, 1903. To be opened (D.V.) at 2.30 p.m. by Rev. Herbert J. Crouch, of Hersham. Communications to Mrs. Christopher W. Smith, 4, Cliff Terrace, Blackgang, Isle of Wight, and Mrs. Henry Jennings, 128, Abbey Road, West Hampstead, N.W.

Obituary.

THE LATE MR. ROBERT JOSEPH HALLS.

MANY readers will learn with regret of the falling asleep of Mr. Robert Joseph Halls, for many years an earnest worker at St. Peter's, Colchester, and latterly at St. Peter's, Ipswich. Disappointed in early life of his desire to enter the Church, he cheerfully turned to secular pursuits, and by unceasing diligence in business showed he could thus serve the Lord. He clung to the Evangelical truths of the Church of England, was a warm supporter of home and foreign missions to both Jews and Gentiles, an active Sunday and Ragged-school teacher, and mission hall speaker. He was pre-eminently a man of prayer, and not only spread all his concerns before the Lord, but spent much time in pleading for all sections of the Church militant. Eighteen months of weakness was borne without a murmur, till on May 22 he peacefully entered on the life everlasting.

MRS. DIX LEWIS, CROUCH END.

Last Saturday afternoon, amid the sunshine of a bright June day, there was reverently laid to her last resting-place at Abney Park a saint of God, trained in His school of suffering.

Few lives have been called to bear so much pain; for many years she had been more or less an invalid, but of late her physical distress had become so acute that nothing but Divine grace, and that abounding, could have preserved her soul in such peace and patience through it all. So self-forgetful she was, so sweet and gracious to those who came to her side, she has left a memory which many will cherish, and an example which all should emulate.

Not far away, in the same cemetery, her venerable father, the late Sir Hugh Owen, rests in peace, and the minds of many who formed that sorrowful group of mourners were keenly conscious of being but survivors of dear ones long since gathered home. And all present were profoundly touched with sympathy for the brave, pathetic figure of him, standing there as chief mourner, who will miss her most of all.

The Semi-Teetotal Pledge.

THE committee of the Semi-Teetotal Pledge Association have secured new central offices for the United Kingdom at 76, Regent Street, W., where forms of pledges, the official button badge, and literature can be obtained on application. This Association has been formed, with Lord Roberts as president and the Duke of Fife and the Lord Chief Justice of England as vice-presidents, "to promote temperance by discouraging the ruinous habit of drinking between meals, to make unfashionable the pernicious 'nipping,' to abolish 'treating,' and to invite all who cannot see their way to become total abstainers to at least promise to partake of intoxicants only at the midday and evening meals." The movement has already assumed national and world-wide proportions, and is non-sectarian. The secretary, Mr. J. A. Wakefield Blenkhorn, 76, Regent Street, London, will be glad of offers of help from lady voluntary workers and others, and will furnish information.

The British Chautauqua.—The ninth annual summer gathering at Aberystwyth is arranged to be held from July 29 to August 26, and is being anticipated with much interest. The remarkable growth of the movement is an eloquent testimony to its distinct helpfulness, since the assembly is made known chiefly by those who have participated in its spiritual and temporal advantages. The Chautauqua combines the useful and the enjoyable, and to the stimulus afforded by the lectures is added the "fellowship of kindred minds" and unalloyed pleasures of social intercourse. The proceedings of this year's gathering will be enriched by the preaching and lecturing of well-known ministers and teachers, and the programme of excursions is such as Christian workers will heartily enjoy. Particulars may be obtained from Miss Beatrice M. Webb, Wildwood Lodge, North End, Hampstead, N.W.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE annual Scottish Conference is arranged to take place at Motherwell from September 15 to 17 next.

At the annual meeting of the Montreal Association, plans were approved for an extension movement involving an expenditure of 125,000 dols.

Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, LL B., representative of the English National Council in Burma, has arrived in this country, and will for some months be engaged in arousing interest at home in the Council's foreign work.

The Winnipeg Y.M.C.A. has opened temporary headquarters adjoining the C.P. railway station for the purpose of greeting young men upon their arrival in the city, and giving such information as will be helpful to them in their effort to get settled in the agricultural and other districts.

A beginning has been made in Y.M.C.A. work at Southsea. As the outcome of Bible classes and other gatherings in the interests of young men, a house has been taken. Local friends have pledged support for the work, and an appeal has been issued for help in the matter of furnishing. This will cost about £100, and it is hoped that such as are concerned for the well-being of young men will make a generous response. The chairman is Mr. W. H. Griffin, 139-141, Albert Street, Southsea. Such an important centre as Southsea and Portsmouth should have more than one institution of this kind.

The Transvaal Leader of January 29 says:—"Simultaneously with the settling down of the country after the war the Young Men's Christian Association has embarked on a distinctly progressive and forward policy, which has for its object the extension and consolidation of the work of the organization in South Africa, and that the movement has assumed definite shape is shown by the fact that it is proposed to expend within the next year or two a sum totalling over £100,000 on new premises for Y.M.C.A. work."

The Y.M.C.A. tents at the Volunteer Brigade Camps in North Wales, Andover, Aldershot, &c., have accomplished a remarkable work during the past week. At Conway nearly 8,000 letters were written in the tents and despatched within a few days, and over 300 men signed the temperance pledge. The Brigadier-General described the tents here as an unqualified success. At the Towyn Camp 1,153 letters were written in a single day. At Tidworth Park Camp, near Andover, a special collection was made at church parade in aid of the tent work of the Y.M.C.A. In all cases the informal meetings held in the evening have been crowded by the men, who have also thronged the tents by day.

Writing from Calcutta, Mr. T. Duncan Patton speaks of the advance that has been made at the central branch of the Indian Association. The new building in Calcutta for young men out from home has been completed. At the present there are twenty-six young men living in the home, and many more applications have been received than can be possibly accommodated. "Since the opening of the building every phase of the work has increased, and especially does it rejoice us to state that the attendance at our Sunday evening evangelistic services has increased fourfold. We have been appealed to undertake some special work for soldiers, of whom there are 1,000 in this city and suburbs. We are taking this matter up, and hope in the next month or so to have a work organized under the name of the 'Soldiers' Institute.'"

The Chicago Central Association shows a membership of 4,891, who paid for their dues and privileges last year the large sum of 72,427 dols. Of these 577 are boys, and less than one-third of the entire number are members of Protestant churches. The membership from the Roman Catholic Church is larger than from any one single denomination. The religious activities are crowded with characteristic Western vigour. Over 800 services and Bible classes were held during the year, addressed by eminent Christian leaders and speakers. Monday noon lectures by leaders in religious thought, who discuss current religious and moral problems, attract audiences of between 300 and 400. The noon prayer-meeting, which was established by D. L. Moody when he was president of this association in the early days, averages over fifty men throughout the year. This meeting has not omitted its daily service for over forty years.

Tract Distribution in the Country.—Perhaps some who are discouraged in Gospel work in cities hardly realize that in the country an attractive tract is welcomed. Large type is of much importance to those who read but little. It is better to give one tract that will be read than a dozen that will not. Along country lanes, to men working in the fields, as well as passing carters, and women at small farms and scattered cottages, a large type tract may often be the only evangelist that ever visits them.

Uncle Tom's Cot.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—It is now four years ago since a cot in the Ragged School Union Cripples' Home at Southend-on-Sea was inscribed with the name of "Uncle Tom," and you very kindly undertook to defray the cost of a prolonged stay at the Home of the little girl who then occupied the cot. I well remember the day I first saw little Hannah. She was a helpless—and it then seemed a hopeless—cripple, for she had been discharged from the hospital as incurable. But one of the many kind visitors in this branch of the Ragged School Union's work took an interest in the child, and secured for her a holiday at Southend. There she lay, a pale-faced girl, from day to day, encased in iron splints. Then I went to see good Dr. Waters, the honorary medical attendant, who loves the children, and who is beloved by them, and he said, "Hannah is one of those many cases which need a long holiday in order to obtain permanent benefit. I believe if Hannah could only stay here long enough she could be cured."

I said, "Doctor, I believe if Uncle Tom's nieces and nephews all over the country could only hear you say that they would gladly subscribe sufficient money to maintain her until she was quite cured." Then I told you young folk what the doctor had said, and your contributions far exceeded my expectations. However, we did not expect Hannah's recovery would have taken such a long time; and your fund, large as it was, was exhausted long since. But you have been helping in many good works, and I could not expect you to send all your gifts into one channel. But I think that most of you, even when Hannah is quite well, would like "Uncle Tom's Cot" to bear the same inscription, and for some other little sufferer to be cared for as this child has been.

Now I am very glad to tell you that when I visited Southend recently I met Hannah with a bright sunburnt face on the sea-front, enjoying herself immensely. She was running about, with the use of her crutches, and amusing some of the younger cripple girls. Sometimes she skips about without her crutches; but this is against the rules, you know, and until the last wound is healed, she must keep on one of her splints.

The doctor writes me to say that "Little Hannah still continues to improve, gets about very well on her crutches, and there is still hope of her being able to do without any means of support." This is very gratifying, and I am sure you will all be glad to hear this bit of news.

"I think," said the matron when I called at the Home, "that Hannah would like to write Uncle Tom a letter." "Well," I said, "I am sure he would be delighted to hear from her." And the following is from her pen:—

R.S.U. Cripples' Home, Southend on-Sea, June 1, 1903.

Dear Uncle Tom,—I write these few lines to you hoping to find you quite well. I have been here four years, and my wound is nearly healed up. Tell all the little girls and boys that I thank them very much for keeping me down here. My hip was hurt in the playground; a little girl pushed me down.

I am very happy now. I love Jesus very much, and I am trying to serve Him. I am twelve years old now. I can swing, and can sometimes go about without any crutches. I am learning to write and read, that is why I can write this letter. When I first came here I could not write at all, because I was very ill.

Dear Uncle Tom, I am so pleased you came down to see me. I have got a little friend who writes to me once a month, and she sends me a present. I am able to wash a little cripple girl every morning. I read the Bible every morning, and I am trying to be a Christian. I think that is all I have to say. With love from Hannah Bagnall to dear Uncle Tom. God is love.

The present matron has only recently entered upon her duties at the Home, and I said to her, "I should so like you to send a message to Uncle Tom's nieces and nephews to accompany Hannah's letter"; and the following is her testimony:—

If the boys and girls and other friends who so generously responded to "Uncle Tom's" appeal could see Hannah now they would feel more than repaid for their kindness. We feel so thankful for her recovery—first of all to our Father in Heaven, and then to those whose hearts have been touched to give money to enable Hannah to stay where she has had all the advantages of pure sea breezes, kind doctor's care, and the loving attention of the former matron, whose unwearied efforts have done so much for one of these little ones."

And now in her way Hannah is repaying what has been done for her, by her bright, sunny example in the Home, and good influence over the other girls and boys who come here from time to time. She is quite a little mother herself, and takes great interest in other helpless children, washes their hands and faces, helps to dress them, and is so loving and kind in many ways. She is also learning to read and write and sew, and can clean spoons and forks nicely. She enjoys swinging and other games, and sings so merrily. And best of all, as Hannah tells you, she has learnt to love Jesus very much, and is seeking to serve Him every day.

It would be impossible for me to express the gratitude of Hannah's parents for the kind interest you have taken in her. Though poor they are very respectable, and they are eagerly looking forward to the time when the sweet influences of their child can be transferred to their own little home in the east of London. Still they are willing to wait until there shall be no fear of any relapse, and until she is quite strong again. I hope that visitors to Southend will call at the Home. It is situate on the sea-front at Southchurch Beach, not far from the terminus of the electric trams. Information concerning the Cripples' Mission, or any other of the numerous branches of the Ragged School Union, will be gladly forwarded by the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 32, John Street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.—Yours very sincerely, F. T. WATT.

Jesus and the Little Ones.

"And Jesus called a little child unto Him" (Matt. xviii. 2).

JESUS is so fond of children,
Little girls and little boys,
Loves to see them glad and happy
With their merry games and toys.

And He wants them all to love Him,
(Oh He is so good and kind!)
That upon life's stormy journey
The right pathway they may find.

Jesus wants them to be workers,
Little ones can serve Him well;
What the young have done for Jesus,
None but He can tell!

They have spoken for their Saviour,
Told the tale of His great love;
How He lived and died for sinners,
And is now in Heaven above.

And He wants us all in Heaven,
Room? Oh, yes, there's lots to spare!
All who have believed on Jesus
May come in, for He is there.

Children, give your hearts to Jesus!
Love Him, trust Him for His love.
Then, when earth is past for ever,
You will reign with Him above.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, June 14.

Gold or God (Luke xviii. 18-30).

THE questioner was young and rich; Luke adds that he was a ruler, i.e., an official of the synagogue. Mark says, with a touch of graphic picturesqueness, that he came "running"; as though his eagerness could not be restrained. He had probably been a student of Christ's words, and had often sat at his feet, else he would never have thought, or spoken, of "eternal life"; but his point of view was from the old legalism of the Law of Sinai. He though that he must do something in order to purchase eternal life.

It might have been expected that our Lord would have opened His arms wide to welcome this apparently earnest seeker, in whom there was much so amiable and attractive. Instead of this, He seemed almost to repel him by saying in effect: "You come to Me as good, but you have God, the Good God, always with you, in your heart and in His Word, why do you not go to Him with your question about life? Why not do as He has taught you in His book, and keep His commandments?" How many there are still who know in the secret chambers of their hearts what their duty is, but fail to do it, because they are hiding in their heart some forbidden thing. They see the current sweeping past their feet, but refuse to launch on it, because they are secretly anchored to a sand-bank. And they go from one teacher to another, with an appearance of earnest inquiry after good things, which will never come to anything, because they are unwilling to renounce their secret idol.

In the case of this young man, the idol was the love of money. There is no harm in money; it is one of God's most precious gifts to man, but it is hard to own it without coming to look on it as one's own, instead of realising that one's attitude towards it is that of a steward, and a steward only. It was for this reason that our Lord proposed this supreme test: "Sell all that thou hast."

Francis of Assisi thought that these words applied universally, and founded the order of the Franciscans, pledged to poverty. But it is more in harmony with the spirit of the Gospel to believe that it was a special test put to this seeker after truth, to reveal him to himself, and to show him the hollowness of his apparent sincerity. He assumed that he had kept all the duties of the second table of the law, which includes our relation to our neighbour, because he had kept from injuring others; but the Lord showed him that we can only fulfil our duty to others when we are willing positively to sacrifice ourselves on their behalf. The law of love is not negative only, but positive. The most essential condition for each of us is to be willing, like another young man, who was living at Jerusalem at this time, to count all things but loss, in order to win Christ and be found in Him (Phil. iii. 7). If you would follow Christ, you must be willing to count all things but loss; and when you are prepared for love's sake to surrender all, you will probably be entrusted with "manifold more," because God knows that He may make you His almoner with no fear of the gold dust adhering to your palm in the process of transmission.

There is a great difficulty to be overcome before rich men enter the Kingdom of Heaven, so much so that nothing will avail to carry them through the ordeal, but the mighty power of God, to whom all things are possible. Riches, which open all other doors, will not furnish a pass-key to Heaven's; and only God can carry a rich man through the ordeal of learning this lesson. In Mark's Gospel those who trust in riches are compared to camels being dragged through the little gate which was left open when the gates of the city were closed for the admission of individuals, and was known as "the needle's eye."

Let us guard against the love of money. Let us give away a certain part of every sovereign or shilling that comes into our possession. Whenever we find money accumulating, let us increase our gift for the poor and the cause of God. Let us always act as stewards of God's property. But it is not possible to act like this unless we are perpetually living in fellowship with our dear Master, who became poor to make us rich—"Follow Me." F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Christian Endeavour in Spain has received an impetus through the recent visit of Dr. Clark. The latest statistics give a total of twenty young people's societies, seventeen in the junior section, and seven mothers' societies. There are now 552 active members and 707 associates.

* * *

The speakers at the forthcoming International Convention at Denver number more than one hundred, and include prominent pastors, active business and professional men, and representative Christian Endeavour workers from many parts of the world. The conventions are not simply mass meetings of enthusiastic workers listening to inspiring addresses. They resemble a great university where learners can secure instruction at the hands of experts in every line of religious activity, and afford unique opportunities for the interchange of plans and methods.

Paul's Charge to Timothy. 2 Tim. iii. 14—iv. 8.

Golden Text. 2 Tim. iv. 8.

LINKS between lessons. (1) Two years' Gospel work in Rome—hoped for and planned by the Apostle (Rom. i. 10, 15; xv. 24). Overruled and guided by the Lord (Acts xxviii. 23-31); martial safeguard, Christian fellowship allowed, preaching unhindered, teaching sought for; four Epistles written and dispatched by Tychicus, Epaphroditus, and Onesimus to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon. (2) Release anticipated (Phil. ii. 23, 24). (3) Mission work renewed for four or five years in Ephesus, Macedonia (1 Tim. i. 3), Crete (Titus i. 5), Miletus, Troas, Corinth (2 Tim. iv. 13, 20), and possibly Spain (Rom. xv. 24, 28). (4) Bitter persecution of the Christians. Paul re-arrested, brought back to Rome, and confined in the under-dungeon of the Mamertine Prison about A.D. 64 or 65. The lower dungeon was reached through a hole in the floor of the upper prison, and is still shown in Rome to-day.

Paul's Imprisonments in Rome.

Last week.—A prisoner in his own private house, comforts (Phil. iv. 18) and friends around him; "preaching the Kingdom of God" with all boldness, to Jew and Gentile.

This week.—"Paul the aged," worn and suffering, cold, and almost spent in bodily strength (2 Tim. iv. 6, 9, 11, 13), in a gloomy under cell, writing the last letter to his beloved "son in the faith," while he yearned to see Timothy once more, as he remembered his tears at parting (2 Tim. i. 4).

"Timothy, my own son in the faith" (1 Tim. i. 2). Brought up in a country of pagan mythology, probably of humble parentage, owed the groundwork of his early education in holy Scripture to his grandmother and mother, devout Jewesses (2 Tim. i. 5). Paul preached at Lystra (Acts xiv. 6, 7, 20). Mother and son among the new disciples (Acts xvi. 1, 3 and 1 Tim. vi. 12), made a public confession of faith, and was taken by Paul into closest friendship (1 Sam. xviii. 1). Travelled with the Apostle to Athens, Corinth, Jerusalem, Rome. Before thirty years of age was installed Bishop of Ephesus, the great city of paganism (1 Tim. iv. 14).

Paul's Trust Committed to Timothy.

The Gospel (1 Tim. i. 11, 12) "kept" (2 Tim. iv. 7). "This charge I commit to thee, son Timothy" (1 Tim. i. 18). "Keep it" (1 Tim. vi. 20). The Lord is at hand, "I have finished my course," you have learned the holy Scriptures, studied them (1 Tim. iv. 13-16). You have faith (2 Tim. iii. 15). "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." You will need nothing more (v. 17) (1 Tim. iv. 16). Feed on it (John xv. 3, 7; Psa. cxix. 9, 11). Preach the Word (John i. 1) and nothing else (iv. 3). All Scripture (v. 2). Everywhere to anyone. Endure, watch. "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown (Rev. iii. 11). Be diligent, faithful, fearless. The fight will be hard, the foe wary, but the Captain Almighty. The race will be stiff, but the Judge is righteous. The reward is sure.

Lessons.

1. Contrast. Nineveh was the chief city of the great Assyrian conqueror, but Jonah, though commanded by God, tried to avoid carrying the message of merciful warning to the oppressors of his nation (Jonah i. 2, iv. 2). Rome was the capital of the enemy and conqueror of his beloved people—the Jews, but Paul was even eager to carry God's message of salvation through Christ to the Roman, and even into the palace of the Emperor. Jonah followed his own wisdom and did his own will, but God was too gracious to answer his strange prayer. Paul, filled with the love of God (2 Cor. v. 14), Christ his wisdom (1 Cor. i. 24, 30), was willing to do the will of his God and Saviour (Acts ix. 6). "Take my will and make it Thine."

2. Between the first and last "ready" (Rom. i. 15, 2 Tim. iv. 6), there had come mobs, arrests, plots, prisons, trials, delays, storms, wrecks; but the word of the Captain fulfilled to the last (Phil. i. 20).

3. Note the help and joy and comfort this young Timothy became to the honoured servant of the Lord. Such honour Jesus is willing to give to the youngest and poorest in the class, and count the loving, gentle deeds and words as to Him.

4. Timothy was above all else a Bible student, and not ashamed to own his grandmother and mother any more than the great Apostle as his teachers. Never too young to learn the Scriptures.

A ROYAL GIFT.

An East-End clergyman was once visiting a poor invalid girl, who had recently returned home after being in the London Hospital. The minister noticed that on the wall hung a bunch of withered flowers. When asked about them, the girl replied: "Oh, sir, those flowers were given me by one of the princesses who visited us in the hospital; and, see, they are tied with a piece of her very own sash ribbon." The child was treasuring the flowers, withered though they had become, because they were given her by a princess. Unlike the faded present, the crown of righteousness, of which the Apostle wrote, was unfading, and Paul looked forward to the day when the Lord, the righteous Judge, should give him that symbol of victory (Golden Text). Happy shall we be if we can say at our journey's end, "I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." The crown will exceed any gift of earthly princes or princesses.

FAITHFUL SERVICE.

Sir Frederick Hodgson, the Governor of Barbadoes, is one who has risen by watching, and doing, and taking full advantage of his various positions. As a young man he had a minor position in the Post Office service. By energy and foresight to go beyond his ordinary routine, he obtained an appointment in British Guiana; and again, by learning all he could, became Colonial Secretary of the Gold Coast. When Kumasi was invested both he and Lady Hodgson were in great danger, and they endured much privation ere relief was effected. As the servant of the State has proved his allegiance, so Paul urged Timothy, who was serving his Lord, to watch in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, and make full proof of his ministry (v. 5). At the present time such devotion is asked of all who would work for God. Watch, do, and prove, are the three exhortations of the Apostle, and the words apply to workers now just as they were appropriate in the time of Timothy.

READY TO BE OFFERED.

After spending many years in Central Africa, David Livingstone, on his birthday in 1872, made the following entry in his journal:—"19th March. My Jesus, my King, my Life, my All, I again dedicate my whole self to Thee. Accept me, and grant, O gracious Father, that ere this year is gone, I may finish my task. In Jesus' name I ask it. Amen." A year later David Livingstone had finished his course, and he was taken home to receive his crown of righteousness. To us who are seeking to save the heathen of our own land, and who desire to set men free from the slavery of sin, the Lord asks for our whole-hearted consecration to His service. We may dedicate our lives as truly as did the famous missionary; and then it shall be ours to use the words of Paul: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand" (v. 6).

A REST ACROSS THE RIVER.

Away on the prairies of America, it is no uncommon sight to witness a great and devastating fire. When such a calamity is seen approaching, the people and the animals join in one common stampede and fly for their lives. A man who is hurrying away from the danger seeks for a river or lake across which he may flee for safety. If he can but escape over its waters to the other side he may rest in security, knowing that the flames will not then be able to harm him. The apostle who had braved the fire of life and had fought a good fight, saw by faith the rest to be obtained across the river of death. With confidence he could look ahead and say: "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge," should give him at the last (v. 8). Such a prospect may be ours if we will but trust ourselves in God's hand. The anticipation should rob death of its terrors and enable us to look forward with confidence to the rest that remaineth for the children of God.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

IRELAND.

THE meetings conducted by Dr. J. Q. A. HENRY and Mr. T. ARMON JONES in Ireland have assuredly done much to deepen interest in the temperance cause. Of the gathering in the Bessbrook Town Hall on Lord's Day week, a local paper says:—"Dr. Henry delivered one of his convincing and eloquent temperance addresses, which was listened to with great attention. Mr. Armon Jones sang two solos in fine style. Mrs. J. G. Richardson spoke of Dr. Henry's great work in England, and felt that such efforts as his were greatly needed. There was a large attendance, and almost one hundred pledges were secured."

Of the meetings at Newry, Rev. W. Weir Miskimmin writes:—

"The mission conducted by Dr. Henry has far exceeded our most sanguine anticipations. Over two hundred pledges were secured; but that does not represent a tithe of the good accomplished. Many earnest Christians who for years past have been grieving over the unholy alliance existing between the liquor party and the Church have had their duty so clearly put before them that they determine no longer to grieve, but to strike for its abolition. Dr. Henry also gave a magnificent discourse on the Communion wine question. Had it been possible to continue another week the building would have been taxed to its utmost capacity, despite the fact that the weather has been so oppressively hot, and the attractions of Warrenpoint and Rostrevor so great. We all entertain the hope that a return visit may be possible before Dr. Henry leaves this country. Mr. Jones' singing is of the highest order, and contributed to make the meetings attractive. The first meetings were held in Bessbrook, where Mrs. Richardson, that grand veteran in the fight, gave Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones a right royal welcome, and were most successful."

STRANRAER.

On Sabbath last, Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones commenced a week's meetings in Stranraer, occupying the pulpit of the Sheuchan U. F. Church in the morning, and that of Stranraer Parish Church in the evening, the afternoon being devoted to a children's meeting in the St. Andrew's Hall. A correspondent writes:—"The mission opened most auspiciously with three fine and very full services and over 300 new pledges. Mr. John C. Edgar had devoted much time and energy to the preparatory work—a matter of the first importance in relation to all missions."

The "Birds' Nest."

MANY of your readers are interested in the "Birds' Nest" and its six companion homes in Ireland, begun and carried on by my mother, Mrs. Smyly. She left the legacy of these homes to my two sisters, who still live in Dublin.

We do not like to appeal too often to our old friends who help so much already; but we often wish we could interest new ones. Just now the "Birds' Nest" requires new bath rooms and other alterations to make the house complete. Then the nursery home at Dollymount, on the other side of Dublin Bay, has not yet found as many friends as its parent the Kingstown Nest; it is in need of support.

Another family of little children which stretches out its hands for help is at Spiddal, near Galway. Help is also needed for sending more boys to Canada, where many have done so well already. A few have been sent each spring with Miss Macpherson's party, and kindly invited to the home in Ontario, where her children wait to be adopted by the farmers. Each boy costs £10.

We have a little paper about the scheme for collecting one million pennies, which I will gladly send to any who will ask for it.

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

4.—DEEPENING IMPRESSIONS.

THE revelation of the Master to the disciple, and the impression of the Master on the disciple, were necessarily continuous and ever-deepening; but this constant influence was accentuated from time to time by specially important lessons. Such were the Walking on the Sea, the Feeding of the Five Thousand with the incidents arising out of it, and the Discourse on Eating with Unwashen Hands.

I.—A LESSON ON FAITH (Matt. xiv. 19-33).

Peter's most constant and pressing need was a deepening trust in his Master. This was only possible in proportion as the Master revealed Himself in fresh aspects of His character. Study the Walking on the Sea from this standpoint.

1. A New Revelation. "Among the ancient Egyptians the symbol of impossibility was the simple figure of two feet planted upon a fragment of ocean." The disciples had been in difficulty, "toiling in rowing." Jesus comes and does what was humanly and physically impossible—walks on the waves. A revelation of Divine Power in a new, startling, and suggestive form.

2. A Characteristic Response. Immediately on hearing the voice and receiving the assurance "It is I!" Peter replied: "If it be Thou, bid me come." Note the "If." Jesus had said "It is I." How characteristic this mingling of doubt ("if"), and faith ("bid me come"). What prompted the request? Mere impulse? Or personal vanity? Desire to do something unusual and extraordinary? Probably a mixture of rashness and conceit. His rashness was a rebound from former despair after physical exhaustion to hope on seeing Christ.

3. A Sharp Reminder. Now Peter is to learn his lesson. Jesus only said "Come," as if permitting rather than (as Peter wished) "bidding." Just allowed to have his own way. So he starts, and for a while all is well. But soon comes the test. The state of wind and waves led to fear. Then his faith at once went, and he began to sink. But the Master was near, and in an instant Peter was safe, not, however, without a rebuke about his lack of faith. Peter had already been reminded of his own sin (Luke v.). Now he was reminded of his own weakness.

(1) Faith is evoked by the personal revelation of the Master to the soul (v. 27).

(2) Faith is expressed by the soul's appeal to the Master (v. 28).

(3) Faith is exercised by the soul's response to the Master (v. 29).

(4) Faith is weakened by the soul putting circumstances between it and the Master (v. 30).

(5) Faith is renewed by the merciful interposition of the Master (v. 31).

(6) Faith is instructed by the loving rebuke of the Master (v. 31).

(7) Faith is deepened by the new revelation of the Master (v. 33).

II.—A LESSON ON EXPERIENCE (John vi. 66-71).

1. The Great Sign (John vi. 1-15). The only miracle recorded by all evangelists. A turning point in Christ's life. It led to the attempt to make Him King (v. 14, 15), and this in turn to the testing and sifting consequent on the discourses in Capernaum.

2. The Great Messages (22-65). Note the stages carefully marked: (a) 22-40 Discussion, (b) 41-51 Dissatisfaction, (c) 52-59 Dissension, (d), 60-66 Defection. Then comes as the crowning result, 67-71 Devotion.

3. The Great Conviction.

(a) The Testing of the Twelve. "You will not go away, will you?" (Greek). Jesus anticipates a negative answer.

(b) The answer of Peter. (1) Where else? "To whom?" (2) What they enjoyed. "Thou hast." (3) What they felt. "Thou art."

(c) The terrible revelation. One of the twelve a "demon" (v. 70, 71).

(1) Experience of Christ leads to the consciousness of awful alternatives. "To whom?"

(2) Experience of Christ is realised in the forms of truth and life. "Words . . . life."

(3) Experience of Christ is gradual in stages (believe and know), but with permanent results (both verbs in perfect tense). "We have believed (and are still believing), and have come to know (and are still experiencing)."

(4) Experience of Christ is based on His personal character and His relation to God. "The Holy One of God." (R.V.)

III.—A LESSON ON KNOWLEDGE (Matt. xv. 15-20; Mark vii. 17-23).

1. Religious Formalism. Mark vii. 1-9. Note the circumstances and our Lord's rebuke. Mark the three stages of formalism: v. 8, leaving God's word for man's; v. 9, rejecting God's Word for man's, v. 13, making void God's word by man's.

2. Ignorance. Matt. xv. 15f. Peter could not understand this exalted standpoint, and asks for an explanation. Our Lord is surprised that at this stage ("ye also even yet") he should be unable to appreciate it. Old ideas die hard. Discipleship does not easily throw off old customs and associations. It is only as we continue in Christ's Word that we are "disciples indeed," "come to know the truth," and "are made free" (John viii. 31, 32, 36).

3. Spirituality (Matt. xv. 17-20 and Mark vii. 19). Our Lord shows whence true spirituality comes and wherein it consists. Not bodily foods, or ceremonial and physical cleansings, but thoughts, desires, determinations constitute the essence of spiritual life. Note R.V. of Mark vii. 19, "This He said, making all meats clean." Does this put an end to the Jewish distinctions of clean and unclean?" If so, it has a bearing on Acts x. 15.

(1) Spiritual knowledge comes from close adherence and loyal obedience to the Word of God (Mark vii. 6-13).

(2) Spiritual knowledge distinguishes between ceremonialism and the soul's true relation to God (Matt. xv. 10-14).

(3) Spiritual knowledge realises that life works from centre to circumference and not vice versa (Matt. xv. 15-20).

CONCLUSION.

1. Consider the necessity of these three Lessons.

(a) Without faith it is impossible to be a true disciple.

(b) Without experience it is impossible to be a strong disciple.

(c) Without knowledge it is impossible to be a clear disciple.

2. Consider the order of these three Lessons.

(a) Faith leads to experience.

(b) Experience leads to knowledge.

(c) Faith, experience, and knowledge lead to power and blessing. See this order clearly in Romans xv. 13 and 14, and 1 John ii. 12-14.

Letter to the Editor.

UNFERMENTED WINE.

SIR,—In furtherance of your arguments in favour of unfermented wine to be used at the Lord's table, permit me to point out for the help of any who may not have noticed the fact that the term wine is not at all used in the Scriptures with reference to the institution of the Lord's Supper.

The expression used by our Lord Himself in Matt. xxvi. 29, Mark xiv. 25, and Luke xxii. 18, is, "The fruit of the vine"—"I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine." In 1 Cor. x. and xi., the only term used is, "the cup." It is therefore evident that any demand for the use of the ordinary wines of commerce for the Lord's Supper has no sanction from the Word of God.

In Gen. xl. 11, Pharaoh's butler says, "Pharaoh's cup was in my hand, and I took the grapes and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand." This affords an illustration of the use of the fruit of the vine as a drink. At the Lord's table we must use "the fruit of the vine." But whether the grape juice be first expressed, or whether it has been preserved is immaterial.

Oxford Notes.

AMONG the many parties which visited Oxford on Whit-Monday was one comprising 140 members of Toynbee Hall. They were entertained at dinner by the members of Oriel, and at tea by the members of Wadham.

The last meeting of the Missionary Union for the present academical year was held on Friday last, when Rev. W. St. Clair Tisdall gave a most interesting address on missionary work in Persia.

Eights week passed off successfully in glorious weather. Each evening, after the six o'clock races, tracts were distributed at Christ Church gate by Rev. C. J. Casher, of St. John's College. During the six days over 5,000 were accepted.

Rev. Jesse Mayo, who has been conducting evangelistic missions in the United States and Canada, is about to return to this country where he will again take up work at the invitation of the National Free Church Council. Mr. Mayo writes from Toronto:—"I have had the privilege of starting our Methodist friends here in tent work. They are proposing to operate on an extensive scale similar to that of the Presbyterians in Philadelphia."

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Torrey-Alexander Mission.

TESTIMONIES BY WORKERS.

IN an enthusiastic description of the wonderful time of blessing at Belfast, an experienced worker writes:—We have just returned, and our eyes have seen a manifestation of the Spirit of God, such as has not been known in Belfast since the revival of 1859. On Sunday (May 24), and since, there has been a marvellous time.

There were about 23,000 people in the meetings on Sunday, with at least 6,000 at open-air meetings besides. At 8 a.m. there were 3,000 present, and the hall was packed long before the hour named. The afternoon meeting was announced for 3.30, but at 2.30 the great St. George's Market was crowded with over 7,000 people. Although we arrived with some of Dr. Torrey's party, we had difficulty in getting in. When the after-meeting came on, seat after seat had to be cleared for the anxious ones who flocked to the front.

At 6.30 we found the place crammed again for the eight o'clock service, which was over about the time it should have been opened; and a fresh crowd poured in for a second meeting. Then such an after-meeting! I shall never forget the sight! Hundreds broken down, and we workers not knowing where to turn, there was so much to be done. I think my husband, my girls, and I dealt with over a dozen that evening; but on Wednesday we had to go faster, dealing with at least eighteen who decided, and many others as well. A minister had fifteen cases who decided on the Monday or Tuesday. Our longing was for far more workers.

All over that mass of people, right to the back where they could scarcely have heard the address, there were anxious souls to be dealt with. Dr. Torrey spoke with deep feeling on Wednesday night of the hundreds who had to go away not spoken to. We may well sound a long and loud note of praise for the mighty revival which has indeed begun in Ireland. I spoke to some, broken down under the power of God, who had not been at the meeting, but had come in when the meeting was over. We heard of conversions in tramcars, on the streets, carmen stopping workers to ask if they could be saved; servants who never came to a meeting were asking the way of salvation. Everywhere souls were crying out for help, backsliders being brought under conviction and led back to the Saviour. The praise meeting was a wonderful time of thanksgiving.

Mr. D. A. Black writes to a friend:—"The mission was a great one—great in glory to the name of God, and in blessing to the souls of men. Dr. Torrey is a teacher—I never heard his equal; but he is also a great evangelist. Mr. Alexander is one of the wisest and most successful leaders of praise I have met."

Rev. John McNeill at Gatehouse, N.B.

An eight-days' mission has just been concluded at Gatehouse, N.B., when Rev. John McNeill unfolded to large congregations of attentive listeners the "unsearchable riches of Christ." It was a sight not to be forgotten. People came by brakes, and other conveyances, distances of five, seven, and even fifteen miles to hear the blessed news from the mouth of God's honoured servant. Testimonies of blessing received have come from the surrounding districts, and in Gatehouse, it is believed, a fire has been kindled that, by God's grace, will never be put out; one that will burn the more brightly for the opposition that has been raised to some degree in this little town in the South-West of Scotland, two miles from the Anworth of Samuel Rutherford. To any one inclined to forget the fact that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God"; to any minister who is in doubt as to who are the "natural" men, and who are the "spiritual" men among his flock, may I recommend the holding of a mission, conducted by some such outspoken witness as our friend Mr. McNeill, and no room will be left for doubt or ignorance. Many devout hearts are grateful to God for His servant's message, the blessing upon which runs strong and deep. Henry R. Anderson.

The Evangelization Society.

In the course of an interesting leaflet just issued by the Evangelization Society, Mr. John Wood gives some particulars of the tent work. We make a few extracts from evangelists' letters:—

"We commenced our mission here (Renton, N.B.) with a Conference. The tent was well filled. In the evening, notwithstanding a perfect downpour of rain, we were quite full. On Sabbath evening we were crowded, although we had secured a large number of extra seats. The ministers are very hearty, and doing all they can to further the work. There is a true spirit of hearing amongst the people."

From Belton, Rutland:—"Although very wet and stormy we had splendid meetings yesterday, the tent being full last night; the Word was listened to with rapt attention, and attended we believe with Divine power and blessing. It is astonishing how the people in the village listen to the 'Old, old story of Jesus and His love.' Many walk miles to attend the meetings. Two men, brought to the Lord at H—— last year were with us last night."

From Rochford, Essex:—"On Sunday last, in spite of extremely heavy rains, the tent was packed out and some hundreds were standing outside. The workers are delighted and say they have not seen the like before. Many who have not been attending any place of worship are found at the tent services. The Lord is granting us much blessing."

Echoes from Epsom.

Mr. Barry Wake writes, regarding the recent "Derby" day, and the evangelistic operations on the Epsom Race Course:—"The liberties which last year were so seriously threatened, and indeed, denied to evangelists, have been largely restored to His servants this year, in the providence of God and in answer to prayer. Thanks are certainly due to the police for their considerate behaviour.

"'My word shall not return unto me void' (Isa. lv. 11) was the cheering word given to the brethren, with a faithful charge, by that 'mother in Israel,' Miss Alexander. The Gospel was faithfully and fearlessly proclaimed, both by speech and song, under the direction of Messrs. Frank Cockrem and Williams. The tract department was vigorously administered; Mr. Francis, of the Open-Air Mission, alone delivering 2,500 Gospel portions in one day. The London City Mission Choir surprised people by their singing; the tune 'Diadem' proved particularly effective. On the Thursday forenoon, during the heavy thunderstorm, the workers found a welcome shelter in the tent of the Racecourse Mission, where they were kindly greeted by Mr. O. L. Heatley. A united and memorable service was held."

United Evangelistic Choir.

At the invitation of Mr. Frank Penfold, who recently opened a Gospel tent at Luton, the United Evangelistic choir (conducted by Mr. Charles Reeves) paid a visit to the town to sing the gospel of "free grace and dying love," the special object for which the choir was organized some four years ago. At each of the services on Sunday hearers came from far and near, and in the afternoon and evening the tent was practically full of listeners to the Gospel told out in song and story. It was a goodly sight to see many of the children paying rapt attention to the story of God's love.

Every opportunity was embraced by the choir to sing not only under the canvas but in the open air, and, in fact, on the way to the services the people would stop us and ask us to give them a song. On the Sunday evening after the tent meeting, a crowd of 300 or 400 people gathered round the singers outside the Corn Exchange, where a short open-air meeting was held, and the Gospel sung to the assembled crowd.

On Monday afternoon a visit was paid to the Wesleyan Central Mission, and here again special pieces were rendered. In the evening before the choir left for London a service was held in the tent, and was attended by a number of men, who, attracted by the strains of the Gospel singers, were induced to leave the surroundings of the public-house. They joined heartily in the singing, and listened with great interest as appeals were made to them to forsake their sins and seek the Lord. M. C. Milne, Secretary.

Mr. John Quigley, of the Drummond Tract Depôt, has been addressing for the last two Sabbath evenings large audiences of young men in the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A. Hall. There have been blessed results. To God be the glory. A.

Tent Meetings at Barrow-in-Furness.

A series of services has been conducted by Rev Stanley Parker (Wesleyan Methodist) in an auction tent in Abbey Road, the main thoroughfare of Barrow-in-Furness. The tent accommodates over 1,000 people, and was kindly lent, with the use of gas, platform, and piano. The meetings were held from eight to nine o'clock on Sunday evenings, and there were usually more people outside the tent blocking the thoroughfare and wanting admission than were already within. This crowding has been maintained throughout the series of services. Many souls have been won; people have been gathered in who have not been in the habit of going to any place of worship.

One by One Working Band.

Sister Vera Edmeades (Deputation secretary, "One by One Working Band") has conducted prayer missions of three days' duration in Hertford Wesleyan Church (Rev. F. B. Cowl, superintendent of Hertfordshire Mission) and in Hamilton Hall, Y.W.C.A. Finchley (superintendent, Miss Gregory), with much encouragement, and it is believed that a fresh impetus has been given to the prayer-life of her hearers. The presence of the Lord was felt, and heartfelt testimony given to spiritual help received. Sister Vera has also spoken at Haddon Hall, Bermondsey (Mr. W. Olney's), and at the East London Tabernacle (Pastor Edwin Ellis) to most responsive audiences.

Rev. Jas. Lyall at Bendigo.

Continuing his tour of Australia, Rev. Jas. Lyall has conducted services at Bendigo. A local paper says of the opening meeting:—"It was the Torrey-Alexander crowd over again. Long before the time announced for the meeting at the Town Hall to commence last night the building was packed with an eager throng. At 8.15 it was found necessary to close the principal doors, but this did not satisfy the hundreds who were anxious to gain admission. Many made their way to the rear door of the hall, and succeeded in finding standing room near the platform, while others, less fortunate, persistently knocked at the closed doors." Mr. Lyall mentioned, at the outset, that in New Zealand, where he was recently addressing meetings, upwards of 3,000 souls professed to decide for Christ.

Shafton and District Band of Hope Union.

A very effective Gospel Temperance Mission has been concluded in this district, the missioner being Mr. Bob Johnson, the "Converted Christy Minstrel." The district which this Union embraces is situate from five to nine miles from Barnsley, Yorks, and consists of populous mining villages, about two miles from each other, covering an area sixteen miles in circumference. The success of this mission was all the more striking because it was not held in one village continuously, but meetings were held each night at different places. At each there was a large enthusiastic adult gathering. Mr. Johnson's temperance and Gospel truths were forcibly impressed upon his hearers by song and speech, while the story of his conversion was very effective spiritually. The last meeting, held at Shafton, was full to overflowing. The missioner is a living testimony to Christ's power to save, and he was enabled to accomplish much good.

Tillicoultry, N.B.

A most interesting series of Gospel meetings, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Govan, of the Faith Mission, was recently concluded at Tillicoultry. It was a time of blessing in which all the churches shared. When at the beginning of his career as an evangelist, many years ago, Mr. Govan endeared himself to this community throughout a six weeks' mission, and not a few of our most active workers to-day look back to that first visit as the date of their spiritual birth. We have enjoyed a similar awakening and refreshing on the present occasion.

One delightful feature of this last mission has been the winsome presence of Mrs. Govan, whose solo singing and chorus leading followed up or prepared the way for the Word spoken, night by night. The effect upon our young people, and very markedly upon our young men, of these services of mingled speaking and singing, has been of the most cheering and hopeful character. The ministers have been made glad by seeing so many members of their Bible Classes declare themselves openly as followers of Christ; and parents are testifying that a new brightness has come into their homes. As contributing to the success of the more public services, mention must be made of the laborious house-to-house visitation so unweariedly carried on both by Mr. and Mrs. Govan and by their fellow pilgrim, Miss Chantler. These friends have made us their debtors, and we recognise the obligation laying on us to prosecute the work they have, by God's blessing, so well begun.

William Gallitly, United Free Church.

Mr. W. D. Dunn in Lanarkshire.

Some time ago Rev. JOHN MCNEILL held a series of meetings in Wishaw, which were largely attended, and at which, in his own striking and telling way, the preacher held forth the Word of Life. Though he did not draw the net after the manner of some, preferring to be a law unto himself, his mission was a manifestly fruitful one, and many cheering cases of conversion resulted from his labours. Among others was that of a woman who had previously kept her shop open for seven days a week, but who, since the Lord opened her heart, has closed her shop on the Sabbath. But not only were there conversions, for the seeds of conviction were planted deeply in many other hearts; and in an exceptionally fruitful mission since held by Mr. W. D. DUNN in the Baptist Church, some who were convicted and awakened under Mr. McNeill, have been brought into the light under Mr. Dunn's preaching, the Spirit of God in this way giving these two worthy brethren room for mutual rejoicing.

During Mr. Dunn's month's mission in Wishaw, over 100 professed conversion, and since then he has conducted a mission in Cambusnethan, another town in the same parish, where also the power of God has shown itself in renewing the hearts and changing the lives of not a few. J. C.

Conference in Glasgow.

To inaugurate the transference of the work which has been carried on for twenty years in Mizpah Hall, Pitt Street, to Cranston Hall, a Conference was held in Cranstonhill United Free Church on Saturday, May 30. There was a great array of speakers, and during the early part of the Conference Lord OVERTOUN occupied the chair. In his opening remarks, the chairman said that, in view of the chilling indifference that abounded the Home Mission problem was one of the greatest problems of our time; and very often workers who laboured in the work of rescue were looked upon as fanatics. The one remedy for men's need was to be found in the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. On every side were battalions of evil, and unless they were overcome he feared a decadence of our nation would set in. A sinking of heart often overtakes workers as they look on the forces they have to contend with, but the word "hopeless" was not in God's vocabulary. The dry bones that Ezekiel saw in his vision were made to live through the breath of God, and by the Spirit's breath, through the Name of Jesus Christ, souls were made to live. He trusted that Mr. J. C. BLACKATER and his band of workers would, in their new district, be used to turn many to righteousness.

Rev. ALEX. LINN spoke of regeneration as the keynote of man's need. Rev. G. L. CARSTAIRS welcomed the Mizpah Hall workers to the district, and said there was room for all. BAILIE BILSLAND said that only by teaching people the value of prayer, and of the Word of God, and of the love of Christ, could any real good be done. He was a member of the Housing Commission, and it was painfully evident to him through personal investigation made, that the sad circumstances that surround many were made by themselves, drink being the cause of their poverty. Lady OVERTOUN gave the Apostle's exhortation, "Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

Councillor J. P. MACLAY spoke of what the Corporation had done in providing public parks and palaces of art for the people, but affirmed his belief in their need of the Gospel. Brief addresses were subsequently given by a number of speakers, and a profitable time was spent. J. C.

Tent Work in New South Wales.

In New South Wales during the past sixteen months God has, in a remarkable manner, been showing forth His glorious power in connection with the United Tent Mission. The promoter, the Hon. E. VICKERY, of Sydney, is one who has endeavoured to serve God through a life lengthened beyond the allotted span, and who felt the great need of reaching by the Gospel those of this colony who were without God and hope in the world. He procured a large tent and equipped it with organ, hymn books, acetylene gas generator, &c., and having secured the services of an able missioner, with an assistant and tent manager, sent it forth. The district first selected was the extreme end of the South Coast Railway, to work town by town back to Sydney.

The tent was pitched, and services began at Nowra in January, 1902, when God set His seal to this enterprise in a glorious manner, and a great number were blessed. It soon became apparent, however, that one tent and staff could not cope with the gigantic task of covering a colony nearly three times the size of England, so a second and a third tent were procured. Still, these were not enough, and tent after tent were added, until at present there are seven in active service. The staff includes Revs. D. O'Donnell, W. Scurr, Shanks, and Messrs. R. Robertson and John T. Leafe (who has lately arrived from England especially for this work), in addition to Rev. D. C. Davidson, whose Bible lectures have been so much blessed.

All the tents, capable of holding from 400 to 1,500 each, with their full equipments, have been provided by the promoter, who also pays the salaries and defrays the expenses of all missioners and staff. The mission is undenominational in character, and the inquirers are provided with marked Testaments and suitable religious literature, and are linked on to the different sections of the Church at each place at the close of the mission services. Up to the present 122 centres have been visited by the tents, with the glorious results that 17,374 seekers have passed into the inquiry tents. Most of the ministers of every section of the Protestant Church have been warmly interested in the movement.

The difficulties to be overcome are appalling. The gambling fever rages everywhere; and drinking is increasing alarmingly.

The mission has yet to visit ninety centres, previous to which there were to be two missions of a month's duration each, carried on simultaneously in the suburbs of Sydney, in the monster new tents.

The promoter, missioners and staff are very desirous that the prayers of God's people at home (and England is always home to Australians) should be offered on their behalf, that the land of "The Southern Cross" may be further blessed of God, and thousands more be brought from the power of Satan unto God.

The "Camp Meeting" held on a recent Lord's Day at Ilford, conducted by Mrs. S. J. ALEXANDER, was a time of power. The attendance was large, and blessing was received by many.

A helpful eight-days' mission was concluded at the Harbour Light Church (Free Methodist), Goldsmith's Row, N.E., by Mr. ALBERT E. HOWARD, assisted by the Messrs. GEE. Open-air meetings were also held each night, when hundreds of people gathered to listen to the message of Life. S. G.

Mr. T. CHAPMAN has had effective tent services at Belton, near Uppingham. A very pleasing feature has been the gathering under the sound of the Gospel of the careless and indifferent. To these the Gospel has come as a revelation, and has awakened in many of them an interest in Divine things.

CAPTAIN DAVIS, of the Wesleyan Gospel Car "Florence," has held meetings at Byers Green, Mount Pleasant, and Ferryhill Station. At each place his labours were blessed, and souls brought to decision. The most remarkable work was at Mount Pleasant, where the names of over 100 who professed conversion were taken.

Mr. WM. BILTON has just concluded a fortnights' mission at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Neville's Cross, Durham. Many professed a change of heart; the congregations increased gradually, and on the last Sunday an overflow meeting was held.

A mission of nearly a fortnight's duration has been conducted in the Public Hall, Didsbury, by Rev. A. ALLAN. Many Christian workers attended from the surrounding districts, and received much help and blessing for future service. Many in West Didsbury are trusting that, as a result of the mission, a deep Christian work may be established there. A.

Notable services have been held at the City Temple, Grand National Halls, Glasgow (Dr. John Robertson's). These halls are being converted into a "Zoo," and previous to removing to the City Hall buildings Miss KATE A. GLOVER was secured for the closing day. She is a gifted preacher, and the attention of the hearers was riveted from the beginning. The attendances were large and very appreciative.

Mr. A. E. SIMS has held a ten-days' mission (with the Evangelization Society's tent) at the invitation of the Christian Endeavourers of Rochford Congregational Church, Essex. The mission has been most hearty and well attended, and thirty gave in their names as determined to lead the Christian life. At the farewell meeting, representatives of various denominations testified to the good that had been done.

A Gospel mission at Cork by Mr. MUSA BHAI was held from May 10 to 31. Great interest was manifested throughout, particularly on the Lord's Day evenings, when large numbers were present in the Assembly Rooms. God's children were quickened and refreshed, and it is believed that souls have been born again. Remarkable quietness and attention prevailed on Sunday afternoons during addresses delivered to about 200 to 300 Roman Catholics in one of the main thoroughfares. The services for children were much appreciated by the young people. J. T. L.

Mr. J. BENNETT ANDERSON conducted last week a united Gospel mission in Barnsbury Congregational Church, N., preaching to large congregations. On Lord's Day last the evangelist spoke morning and afternoon, and Mr. Jennings in the evening. In connection, too, with open-air services at Highbury Corner, N., Mr. Bennett Anderson and workers from Barnsbury took an acceptable part in both the children's meeting at 7 p.m. and that for adults at 8. Large numbers were impressed.

The mission recently conducted in Hamilton Road Methodist Church, Bangor (co. Down), by Mr. JAMES DIXON, of Belfast, was remarkable for the power of the appeals which were based on clear and sound expositions of the Word. Nothing was added to the attraction of the preached Word, which proved mighty to draw the people, to hold their attention, and to save souls. Mr. Dixon's account of his conversion, when a soldier in the army, proved a great means of edification to the large numbers who heard it.

The Corporation of Southend have renewed to the Council of the Ragged School Union the privilege of holding Gospel services on the beach during the present season in connection with the Society's Cripples' Home, Southchurch Beach. These services are to be started Sunday, June 14, and will be held daily (weather permitting) until the end of August. The cripple children, numbering about thirty, will, as hitherto, form the choir either in the forenoon or afternoon of each day, as the weather and tide permit. Mr. T. SWANSTON SMITH, who (as last year) has been appointed to conduct the services, will gladly welcome Christian workers.

A mission has lately been held in the parish of All Saints', Burton-on-Trent, the missioner being Rev. A. G. WHALEY. The parish is worked on evangelistic lines by a former curate of Mr. Whaley's, Rev. E. Gilmour. The parish magazine states:—"The special mission so long anticipated and prayed for has been greatly blessed. The Bible readings, on the work of the Holy Spirit, were well attended, and were a source of blessing to many. The Gospel appeals from night to night were characterized with simplicity, clearness, and great power. Many have professed Christ, believers have been strengthened, backsliders restored, and sinners converted."

Request for Prayer.

Ipswich Convention (in connection with the monthly meetings), June 17-19. Speaker, Rev. Robert Middleton.

Praise.

For the Lord's great goodness in granting healing and restoration to a young married woman, who has been suffering from mental trouble, and for whom prayer was asked some time ago.

Mr. Chorley asks praise for partial recovery of his son, for whom prayer was sought a few weeks since.

For answered prayer in the restoration to health of a Christian lady who seemed to be humanly beyond the hope of recovery.

About Books.

BOOKS OF CHINESE MARTYRS.

NOT yet has the complete book of martyrs for China been written, although there have been many records of the noble stand made in different regions, by missionaries and natives alike, during the Boxer rising of 1900. The story is one of individuals and companies of workers, including many native Christians, who met a cruel death, "counting not their lives dear unto themselves that they might finish their course with joy, and the ministry which they received of the Lord Jesus." We welcome two more books, dealing with the tragic occurrences in the province of Shansi.

Steadfast unto Death; or Martyred for China. Memorials of Thomas Wellesley and Jessie Pigott. By C. A. Pigott. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The story of these devoted witnesses for Christ was outlined in The Christian shortly after the news of their death, along with their only child, William Wellesley Pigott, reached this country. The details provoke tears of sorrow and indignation that those who gave themselves for Christ in China should have been so treated; but with the tears there must commingle praises to the Lord for giving to his servants such grace as not only made them "faithful unto death," but fragrant in every act of their lives and every word of their mouths as they preached Christ unto the end. Mr. George F. Trench, cousin of Mr. Pigott, writes an introduction to this very attractive volume, which is embellished with portraits and other illustrations, and the pages of which, by the way, throw light upon the last days of many others who sealed their testimony with their blood at Tai Yüan Fu and elsewhere in Shansi.

Fire and Sword in Shansi: The Story of the Martyrdom of Foreigners and Chinese Christians. By E. H. Edwards, M.B., C.M., for twenty years medical missionary in China. (6s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) In an Introductory Note to this substantial and fully illustrated book, Rev. Dr. Maclaren mentions the fact that eighteen years of Dr. Edwards's life in China "were spent in Shansi, in which province he carried on, in conjunction with his relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Pigott, a mission, the cost of which was largely borne by themselves." The narrative is intended as a memorial of those who were connected with the late Sheo Yang Mission; and after careful inquiries made on the spot, Dr. Edwards is able to relate in full circumstances which other writers have had to mention in outline only. Missionaries who met their death in the same region as the Sheo Yang workers find their memorial in these pages, as do also many of the native Christians, and the firmness of some of these excites warm admiration.

In the words of Dr. Maclaren, "the man is not to be envied who can read, without a lump in his throat," the following story:—"One of the saddest, and yet perhaps brightest cases is that of Chao Hsi Mao (thirty), his mother (fifty-seven), sister (thirty-six), and wife, only nineteen years old. Being a prominent and well-known Christian, he was advised by his friends to leave his own village and flee, and this he refused to do, and in July all four members were arrested by the Boxers and their house and all their belongings burnt. They were then bound and taken on a cart to the Boxer chief at Hsin Chou to ask for instructions. He said, 'I don't want to see them; take them back, and kill them where arrested.' While on their way back they joined in singing the hymn, 'He leadeth me.' Arrived at a vacant spot outside their own village, they were taken down from the cart, and the man was first beheaded with the large knife generally used for cutting straw. Still the women would not recant, and the old mother said, 'You have killed my son, you can now kill me,' and she, too, was beheaded. The other two were still steadfast, and the sister said, 'My brother and mother are dead, kill me, too.' After her death there was only the young wife left, and she said, 'You have killed my husband, mother, and sister-in-law, what have I to live for? Take my life as well.' Thus all four sealed their testimony with their blood."

Dr. Edwards's work bears evidence of having been compiled with great care. The history of events subsequent to the massacres is brought up to date, and details are given of the return of Protestant missionaries to the province, the establishment of the College of Western Learning, and the settlement of the indemnity question. The volume is of great value; and many of the stories are characterized by deep pathos and human interest. It is given to the world as a loving tribute to the memory of all the martyrs of Shansi, and in the hope of advancing the great cause of missions throughout China.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Hush and Hurry: or Thoughts for the Home and for the City, by Rev. Arthur Mursell, is a welcome addition to the "Free Church Pulpit" series. (2s 6d. A. H. Stockwell.) In the course of ten sermons, Mr. Mursell applies some familiar texts to the solution of pressing problems of our day. This is a volume above the ordinary in its class.

"The World's Pulpit" series includes second editions of Old and New, by Canon Scott Holland, and The Glory of Life, by Dr. Monro Gibson. In the former the spiritual inwardness of social difficulties and professions of belief, is laid bare by the hand of a master, himself with a heart of compassion for the needy in body or mind, and a spirit in close touch with God. The reader of the latter volume will find himself with a better understanding of some of the chief doctrines of the faith, and furnished with guidance as to the application of them to his own or his brother's case. (3s. 6d. each. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co.)

Mr. James Robinson, of Manchester, is issuing a series of books likely to prove very useful to preachers and teachers. Each contains about a score of sermons and addresses on subjects of practical importance and present-day interest, contributed by preachers representing various churches. The five before us are Jesus in the Cornfield, in which a wealth of fresh material, from sermons at harvest and flower festivals, is gathered together; Comradeship and Character, in which young men are addressed; The Cross and the Dice-Box, specially intended for working men; The Divine Artist, in which messages of consolation are addressed to the troubled and sorrowing; and Eden and Gethsemane, designed to prove suggestive for Communion addresses. (3s. 6d. net each.) Among the contributors to the volumes are Principal Alexander Stewart, D.D., Revs. George Jackson, M.A., J. G. Greenhough, M.A., Charles Leach, D.D., E. Griffith Jones, B.A., J. Morgan Gibbon, T. G. Selby, and Principal D. Rowlands, B.A. The books are not treatises, but collections of discourses dealing with various aspects of doctrine and practice.

Many to whom the truth of God has recently been brought home, for the first time or with fresh power, through Dr. Torrey as the human instrument, will welcome the publication of some of the very utterances to which they have listened with so much profit—Revival Addresses. (3s. 6d. Nisbet.) The reader necessarily lacks the environment of prayer and praise, which is much to the hearer, and at best the printed page is a poor substitute for the powerful convincing tones of the great evangelist. Yet in this form the addresses deserve to be, and will be, lovingly read again and again by those to whom the words will recall times of the special presence and power of God. To those who have not come into personal contact with Dr. Torrey the volume will show the nature of the message which has been so richly blessed in every part of the world. It is the grand old simple Gospel of the grace of God, which ever has been, and ever will be, with power, when preached, as Dr. Torrey preaches it, with the accent of personal experience, and in the power of the Spirit of God. We heartily commend the book for the careful study of Christian workers, and for distribution among the unconverted.

NEW EDITIONS.

Sir Robert Anderson's very suggestive book, The Silence of God (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), has reached its sixth edition. We described the work on its first publication as a striking contribution to a subject of sublime importance. The silence of God is found to be coeval with the reign of grace. He is silent because He has spoken His last and fullest word of love, and the next must be that of judgment. So the very silence proves that the great amnesty is still in force. The subject is treated with the thoroughness and ability characteristic of the author.

We also give a hearty welcome to Sir Robert's valuable work The Bible and Modern Criticism. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) It seems but the other day that it was first issued, and already it is in its fourth edition. Right heartily do we reiterate our commendation of the book, and repeat the hope already expressed that it will have many readers—we might now say run through many editions. We observe evidences that Sir Robert still has his hand at work; additional notes, and indexes of subjects as well as Scripture texts noticed or explained, make the book still more serviceable.

Scientific Side-Lights, compiled by James C. Fernald (Funk & Wagnalls Co.), supplies illustrations of "thousands of topics by selections from standard works of the masters of science throughout the world, with comprehensive indexes embracing 30,000 topics and cross references, and making all matters contained in the volume instantly available for illustrative use." The ground covered is amazing. The culling of good things from every direction almost produces an intellectual surfeit; and he who comes here for help will come again.

THE THEOLOGY OF CHRIST'S TEACHING.

DURING recent years many attempts have been made to deal with the words of Christ in a way which it would be difficult to harmonize with the express intention of the Divine Teacher, who, by His Spirit, continued to speak through the Apostles whom He sent forth into the world. We welcome a treatment of another kind, one which is not only consistent in itself, but undertaken in a spirit of loyalty to the great Prophet and High Priest of our confession, who said of the Old Testament, "the Scripture cannot be broken," and spoke of the ministry of the Spirit in those who should carry on His work: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; . . . He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you."

The Theology of Christ's Teaching, by the late Rev. John M. King, D.D., Principal of Manitoba College, Winnipeg (10s. 6d. net. Hodder & Stoughton), is a work of real worth, by one who has thought for himself, and is thoroughly reliable as an expositor of Holy Scripture. The thirty chapters in the substantial volume present the class lectures of one who was highly esteemed as a teacher; he had a massive grasp of revealed truth, and his talents included the command of a vigorous English. The Saviour's teachings are thoroughly surveyed—theological, ethical, and eschatological; and in order to a clear understanding of things, chapters are given on the Old Testament Scriptures and the Place and Value of Miracles.

Principal King puts himself on right terms with his readers at the outset, by disclaiming any intention to qualify the authority of other portions of Scripture in the isolation of Christ's personal teachings. He says: "The Old Testament has authority for us largely because He endorsed it; the Epistles, because written by those to whom He promised His Spirit to lead them into all truth. In going to the personal teachings of the Saviour, therefore, we are going to that which constitutes, if not the exclusive, yet the ultimate basis of authority in regard to things Divine and spiritual. In listening to His words, in waiting by His side, we wait by the very fountain of truth, we listen to Him who is 'the Truth.'"

The author of this noble work, in which the field of theology is narrowed so as most effectively to present its vital messages, did not live to see his volume published. Hence a pathetic interest attaches to the brief biographical sketch and appreciation supplied as an Introduction by his friend, Professor James Orr, of Glasgow.

Devout students know best the value and interest which attach to the tracing of a particular line of teaching through the different books of Scripture. Those to whom the thought is fresh will thank Rev. Dr. Rutherford Waddell for the help in this direction given in Behold the Lamb of God, "a Series of Discourses Tracing through Scripture the Evolution and Coronation of the Lamb." (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The first lesson is found in the difference which God saw between the sacrifices of Cain and Abel. Then we are led on through Abraham's experience on Mount Moriah and the Paschal Lamb to the various references by the prophets. The Gospel allusions and the teaching of the Book of Revelation are submitted to minute but reverent examination; and the fact is established that a knowledge of this doctrine will constitute a key to much of the deeper teaching regarding the Divine purpose of grace to men.

Raymund Lull: First Missionary to the Moslems. By Samuel M. Zwemer, D.D. (3s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) A very important and welcome addition to Christian biography. The author has for some years been engaged in mission work among Mohammedans on the eastern coast of the Arabian peninsula, and in the Turkish region north-west of the Persian Gulf. His sympathy with his subject is warm and thorough; he finds in the man who took the Gospel to the Saracens some six centuries ago, a Christian hero and a missionary pioneer of noble character and great power. The marvellous attainments of the man are described; but while showing us the versatile genius—scientist, philosopher, and theologian—Dr. Zwemer dwells with peculiar pleasure upon Lull's labours as an evangelist and foreign missionary. We cordially commend this attempt to supply a chapter that has too long been wanting in the history of Christian missions in the English language. Some of the illustrations have a very curious interest.

Welsh Notes.

THE monthly meeting of Christian workers was held at the Police Institute, Cardiff, a few days ago, when Rev. Principal Edwards, D.D. (Baptist College), gave a very heartsearching and instructive address on "Holy Stewardship." He dealt with the stewardship of Time, Talents, Opportunities, and Money. He deeply deplored the methods sometimes used to procure funds for carrying on Christian work, and declared that this would be unnecessary if God's people realized their responsibility as stewards in this matter. Testimonies were given by several who for years had been in the habit of setting aside a portion of their income for benevolent purposes, as a matter of system, and not haphazard or impulse.

At the meetings of the Denbigh and Flint Congregational Union held at Llanarmon, near Mold, a resolution was passed approving of the action of the Denbighshire County Licensing Committee "in declaring that Ruabon, Rhos, and Cefnmawr are not populous places for the purposes of the Licensing Act, thus securing the closing of the public houses throughout that area at 10 p.m."

The directors of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Foreign Missionary Society have just had the report for 1902 submitted to them. The collections during the year amounted to £6,961 3s. 10d., an increase of £828 8s. 6d. over the previous year. In the Indian mission-field of the denomination there are now 433 churches and preaching stations—twenty-two more than at the end of 1901. The communicants increased by 568, their number now being 5,616. The total number of communicants, candidates, and children stands at 16,659. The Sunday-school scholars increased from 14,776 to 16,162. In Brittany there are ten preaching stations, with a membership of 113, 74 being converts from Roman Catholicism.

Irish Notes.

THE Jungle Tribes' Mission, which is carried on mainly by lay workers in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church, is doing a good work, and has had during the past year a considerable share of success.

A donation of £10,000 has been given by a gentleman in England through the Archbishop of Dublin for the relief of special cases of distress among the clergy and their families in this country, and it is hoped that in time this amount will become the basis of a large fund for aiding such cases as those referred to.

The Assembly's College Colportage Association continues to do a good work. Last year its agents visited over 177,000 families, held over 60,000 religious conversations, and sold over 121,000 religious publications at £1,020 0s. 10d. Rev. Thomas Lyle is the secretary.

During the past twelve months the Irish Church contributed towards the support of foreign missions the goodly sum of £40,121. In pre-disestablishment days it did not contribute the half of this amount. Moreover, the Irish Church has at present 207 workers in the foreign field, and of these ninety-nine belong to the Church Missionary Society.

The annual return of Church members in connection with Irish Methodism is not yet complete; but so far as is known a small increase is certain to be reported. For instance, while Cork, Limerick, and Sligo districts report each small decreases, Dublin, Belfast, Portadown, and Clones districts report considerable increase. Three districts, Derry, Enniskillen, and Waterford, have not yet reported; but two of these at least are almost sure to return an increase.

According to a Parliamentary return obtained by Mr. T. H. Sloan, M.P., it appears that last year £13,504 2s. 4d. was paid to nuns in Irish workhouses. Thus in Trim Workhouse the nun-matron received £55; two nun-teachers got £55 each, and another £45; a nun got £55 as cook, and another nun £55 as laundress. These facts and figures speak for themselves, and show how, in many parts of Ireland, the Roman Catholic Church is being practically endowed at the public expense.

Good News from Chili.—Encouraging news comes from Chili. The pastor in Rancagua has been much blessed, and the work which he carries on in San Fernando, a town some distance off, has resulted in a gracious awakening. Entire families, with their servants, have joined the congregation, and are influencing others to come and hear the Gospel; while twenty-seven persons have joined the church on probation, and several others have notified their intention of doing so at an early date. Of the £300 required for the Rancagua Church Fund all has been received save £49. Mr. P. Rose may be addressed c/o Messrs. Grundy, Izod & Co., 84, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

Church of England.

Rev. F. B. Hadow, who has been one of the curates in connection with the St. Helens Parish Church for six years, is leaving, to become the Church Missionary Society's organising secretary for the young.

Much unpleasantness has been caused in the parish of Sutton, St. Helen's, by the introduction of a cross. When the vicar proceeded on Sunday to dedicate it, nearly the whole of the congregation rose and quietly left the church. The vicar has given notice of his intention to apply for a faculty.

The Bishop of Winchester, in a letter to the clergy in his diocese, forbids without any qualification the use of incense and the practices of Reservation; and the Invocation of the Virgin Mary and the Saints. He also reminds the clergy that for the introduction of pictures, figures, and ornaments a faculty from the Consistory Court is required.

Rev. Canon Cremer, vicar of Eccles, proposes to hold open-air services in the parish churchyard on Sunday afternoons during the summer. The congregation will assemble in the usual way, but will go outside instead of inside the church. The vicar also proposes to hold a series of "At Homes" in the vicarage grounds. He says they will be friendly, informal gatherings of men of all ranks.

The rector of Elland, in Yorkshire, Rev. E. Winter, has experienced some difficulty in raising funds to build his new church, now in course of construction. There was a large mound of earth near the entrance, and this having to be removed, the rector set a good example. Calling some of his parishioners together, he advised them to do the work of removal themselves. To this they readily assented, and the rector, doffing his clerical attire, applied the spade along with the others.

The Church Association draws attention to the distribution of leaflets at the Royal Military Tournament at the Agricultural Hall, N., "by the kind permission of The Colonel." The appeal is made for destitute children, and an orphanage, stated to be at 337, Harrow Road, W. The leaflets were distributed among the persons present, and young children were sent round with the collecting-boxes. The persons responsible for the leaflets did not, however, state that the orphanage is a Roman Catholic institution.

Congregational.

Pastor C. Wickerson, late of Enfield, is to conduct the services at Notting Dale Congregational Church, W., during the next three months.

The oldest Nonconformist minister in the county of Herts, Rev. James Wood, who became pastor in 1850 at Sawbridgeworth, where he has laboured for fifty-three years, has tendered his resignation, and is retiring from the active ministry.

Rev. J. G. Stevenson, of Newquay, Cornwall, has declined the invitation to succeed Mr. Campbell as minister of Union Church, Brighton. Of the 459 members of Union Church who were entitled to vote, only 217 recorded their votes, and of these 153 were for and sixty-four against Mr. Stevenson.

The manual of Junction Road Church, N. (Rev. Archibald Parsons, B.A.), reports a year of activity, growth, and all-round prosperity. Congregations have been large, and all the various agencies are in a healthy condition. The Church roll during the past two years has increased from 180 to 330 members. A Sunday morning school has been launched, and gives every sign of becoming a large teaching centre.

Baptist.

The Baptist church, Welbeck Street, Ashton-under-Lyne, has opened a mission hall at Audenshaw, in a very needy district. The attendances have been most encouraging.

A freehold site has been presented to the church at Chitterne by the Right Hon. Walter Long, M.P., for the erection of a new building in place of the one recently destroyed by fire.

The new chapel at Rosegrove, Burnley, which was built by the Burnley and District Baptist Union recently, received its first pastor on Saturday last. This is Rev. W. T. Garling, of Rawdon College, who was given a hearty welcome.

Rev. G. Hill, of Nottingham, who was nominated as the first governor of the United Baptist College in Manchester, has informed his church that owing to the deadlock in the negotiations he has withdrawn his acceptance of the nomination.

At the Church at Rochester, the Pastor's Anniversary Services were held on Wednesday, June 3, when a sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. J. C. Carlile (of Folkestone), followed by a public meeting at which the chairman was Mr. G. H. Dean, J.P. (of Sittingbourne). The services, which were very encouraging, were continued on Sunday, June 7, when Rev. W. R. Skerry preached at both services. The membership is now 160.

Methodist.

The headquarters of the Joyful News Mission is to be removed after Conference from Rochdale to Cliffe College, Derbyshire.

A new Primitive Methodist church and schools, to be called the "Henry Adams Memorial," have been opened at Wombwell, near Barnsley.

Mr. W. R. Perks, M.P., presided over a meeting at Reading in aid of the £17,500 scheme, by which it is proposed to erect three mission halls; new churches at Tilehurst and Caversham Heights; and new schools at Henley. At the close it was announced that £11,794 was in hand.

As the result of recent examinations, fifty-two candidates for the ministry of the Primitive Methodist Connexion will be recommended to the annual Conference at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Twenty-nine students, who have completed their training at the Theological College, Manchester, will enter upon circuit work.

At the approaching Wesleyan Conference at Camborne 600 ministers and laymen, in equal numbers, will attend the representative session, which opens on Tuesday, July 21. At the pastoral session, attended only by ministers, a greater number is expected to be present. The president-elect is Rev. Marshall Hartley. In the pastoral session of the conference the president for 1904 will be nominated, and in connection therewith the names of Revs. Silvester Whitehead, chairman of the Halifax and Bradford district, Professor G. G. Findlay, D.D., of Headingley College, Leeds, and Rev. J. S. Simon, governor of Didsbury College and chairman of the Manchester district, are mentioned.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Stuart Robinson, late assistant to the Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, has been inducted to the charge of the church at Forest Hill, S.E.

The sum of £2,000 has been contributed by an anonymous donor towards the erction of an English church for the Calvinistic Methodists at Holywell, Flintshire.

Rev. Richard Roberts, late Calvinistic minister at Willesden Green, has been inducted to the pastorate of Westbourne Grove Church, which has been vacant since the removal of Rev. Johnston Ross to Cambridge.

The Salvation Army.

In obedience to orders, Colonel and Mrs. Lamb have bidden farewell to the Land Colony at Hadleigh, Essex. During Colonel Lamb's term as governor a hundred acres have been added to cultivation in the colony, and the produce per acre has been nearly doubled. Among the enterprises inaugurated by the Colonel, the home scheme has been very successful. By its means many estranged husbands and wives have been reconciled and enabled to settle comfortably with their families at Hadleigh. Then, the Service Fund has been much appreciated, because, through its agency, suitable clothing and boots have been obtainable by the colonists, and it has enabled the men to place their earnings in a savings bank which pays good interest. A recreation room has been added to the Colony, and winter evening classes have made it possible for the workers to improve themselves mentally as well as morally and socially. Colonel Lamb has also launched an emigration scheme, and already nearly a hundred able-bodied young men have been sent to Canada and elsewhere.

The proximity of the Perham Down Camp brings large numbers of soldiers into the village of Ludgershall, Wilts; many new houses have been built and the greater part of the available land has been portioned out as building sites. Some twelve years ago the Waterloo Workman's Hall Mission recognized the great need of Christian work in the village, and commenced open-air services. After some months they rented a room for Sunday services and subsequently the Foresters' Hall, which has been used for many years. That building having been sold for a grocery store, the use of the day school has been granted for Sundays. It is aimed, however, to purchase land and erect a suitable hall. The Secretary is Mr. W. Kent, South View, Anna Valley, Andover.

The friends at Claremont Mission, Cricklewood, N.W. have issued their third annual report of work among employés of the Midland Railway Company, with their wives and families. Cottages have been visited with a view to dealing personally with young and old as the Lord opened the way. In this and other efforts God has deigned to bless to the conversion and strengthening of many the word spoken by His servants. At the Gospel services conducted each Lord's Day evening the results have been encouraging. There are, indeed, many departments of work actively maintained, and the Mission deserves hearty support. Mr. F. L. Grosvenor, Hon. Supt., 22, Lichfield Road, Cricklewood, sends an earnest appeal for more workers, lest several important branches have to be abandoned.

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. SLACK, of Ripley, Derbyshire, a well-known Methodist lady, the mother of Mr. J. Bamford Slack, B.A., and of Miss Agnes Slack.—Fleet-Paymaster WILLIAM COPE DEVEREUX, R.N., retired. For some years Mr. Devereux had resided at Ealing, where he took a great interest in the promotion of Evangelical work in the Church of England. He was a staunch Protestant; an active and energetic supporter of Protestant organizations, and an occasional contributor to the columns of the religious press.

A Neglected Class.—Mr. William Forbes, 71, Tollington Road, N., writes:—"I have, for a considerable time, been greatly concerned about the physical, social, and spiritual welfare of the lads who are to be seen in the afternoon rushing off in all directions with the evening papers. I greatly pity them. On foot, or on bicycles, they dash along, as if the fate of empires depended upon their reaching a certain place at a certain hour. The curse of betting and gambling is at the foundation of the business. What can be done for them?"

American Notes.

REV. MR. KIMBRELL, Presbyterian minister recently delivered a sermon to 326 families, simultaneously from a telephone office at Madison, Missouri. He had an appointment at a church in the country, but the roads being practically impassable, he found it impossible to make the journey in time for the regular service. He remembered, however, that almost every family in the neighbourhood in which he expected to preach could be reached from the central telephone office at Madison. So he laid the matter before the manager of the system, and was tendered free use of the wires. In the central office more than a dozen lines are connected with the switchboard. A little work threw all these lines open at once, and an invitation was extended to the families to enjoy the long-distance church service. An organ was moved to the telephone office, and a choir arranged a programme of hymns. The sermon had the undivided attention of all.

At the farewell services in connection with the removal of the Y.M.C.A. from their old Twenty-third Street building, Dr. Cuyler declared the structure to be the pioneer of all the large and well-equipped buildings of the kind on the globe. He stirred the audience deeply as he told of the early days of the movement in the city, and of the struggles which marked its growth and development from the first. Bishop Potter, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, said: "We shall never know how much the Young Men's Christian Association has done toward getting laymen into the pulpit—to restoring the prophetic order, for the prophets were not priests. I submit it has added an enormous advantage to the Church and civilization in calling out the services of laymen." The new building, which will not be ready till September, is a magnificent nine-story building costing nearly a million dollars.

Mr. Charles B. Palmer, National Superintendent of the Gideons, recently organised a "camp" for Greater New York, at the Judson Memorial Church. According to the constitution, "the object of the Gideons shall be to recognise the Christian travelling men of the world with cordial fellowship; to encourage one another in the Master's work; to improve every opportunity for the betterment of the lives of our fellow travellers, business men and others with whom we may come in contact, scattering seeds all along the pathway for Christ." Although only three years old, there are already eleven State organisations, sixty camps, and 3,000 members.

The movement in the direction of total abstinence on the part of bar-tenders has been endorsed by Justice, the official organ of the Liquor Dealers' Protective League. The newspaper says: "There are among bar-tenders, and liquor dealers as well, as many teetotalers as there are, proportionately, in any other business or calling. The fact that a man keeps a saloon or hotel, or is a bar-tender in the same, does not indicate that he is addicted to the use of liquor."

At Christ's Mission, New York, a few days ago, Dr. Aristide Giampietro, late of the Gregorian College in Rome, gave an interesting account of his conversion while studying with the Jesuits. He had graduated with credit in Milan after four years of study, during which he had taken four minor orders. From the beginning of his studies in philosophy, however, his mind became unsettled as to some of the doctrines of the Roman Church. After he came to Rome, he one day bought a copy of a Methodist work on theology, the reading of which sent him both to his Bible and his knees. In answer to his prayers, the Spirit of God made clear the way of salvation through faith in Christ, and he found peace.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To avoid misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

Dr. Torrey's Missions. Some misapprehension has arisen regarding the size of the buildings which Dr. Torrey desires to be provided for use during his missions with Mr. Alexander. The special building to be erected at Liverpool is expected to seat between 5,000 and 6,000 people. While the exceptional accommodation for more than 10,000 at Manchester is gladly taken advantage of, it is fully recognised that this example cannot be followed everywhere. The evangelists are anxious to visit centres where audiences of 5,000 can be reached; and in making arrangements it is their desire that cities in which this requirement can be met should have the preference.

"The Roman Catholic Church in Italy." The first edition of Dr. Robertson's book, "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy," was exhausted soon after publication. A second edition was entirely taken up before issue, and a third impression, which is now being prepared, is expected to be ready before the end of the present month. The work has been carefully revised, and made more easy of reference by the addition of a useful index. Another feature is the introduction of facsimile letters from the King and Premier of Italy expressing their hearty approval.

The Bible in Spain. It is not often that a Roman Catholic priest testifies so strongly to the value of the New Testament as does Rev. Kenelm Vaughan in a recent letter to the Catholic Times. He tells a remarkable story of a conversion in Spain a few years ago, and states that he has agents in all the principal towns in that country for the sale and dissemination of the New Testament—a fact which will be surprising to those who are familiar with the attitude of Rome in regard to the general study of the Word of God. He says that an anarchist was in one of the gaols at Barcelona, sentenced to death, and that the Father Rector of the Jesuit College was unable to convert him to God, and could, in fact, make no impression upon him. He was incorrigibly impenitent:—

> Seeing that he took out of his pocket a New Testament I had given him, and told Ascheri to read it. Ten days afterwards he returned to find him a changed man. He had been reading the New Testament, which proved to be a vehicle of the merciful grace of his conversion . . . He died in the disposition of a true penitent, leaving to his mother the copy of the New Testament that had been the instrument of his repentance, as the most precious thing that he possessed.

The narrative speaks for itself, and its lesson should be obvious to the priest.

"Books for the Soul." The letter published in our letter of June 4 has brought correspondence from all parts of the country, showing that many of God's people have felt the need for libraries of "Books for the Soul." One writer points out that something practical might be done by presenting such literature to local free libraries, when the books would be duly catalogued for the convenience of all comers. Other communications lead us to think, however, that more effective service can be rendered by the formation of small collections of books in connection with churches, chapels, or other meeting places of Christian people. If a few readers were to become possessed of one book each, by a very simple arrangement they might be put into circulation till every reader had benefited by the whole. There are usually in a congregation friends who have such books on their shelves, and who would be glad to send them forth on a fresh career of usefulness. No beginning could be too small, and wherever the benefit was appreciated development would result.

Encouraging Christian Shopkeepers. As we have before pointed out, the circulation of the "books for the soul" could be very much helped if Christian people would make a point of encouraging the small traders in their own vicinity to stock such literature for sale. We do not mean that they should thus incur extra expense. It has been proved over and over again that a little planning on the part of their neighbours would make it possible for dealers in villages and outlying districts to keep a small stock of Evangelical publications. Where colporteurs are unknown the same end might to a large extent be gained by this means. In such businesses a variety of goods must be sold; and the buying of any kind of goods from a brother in the faith may thus be a means of maintaining the light of Gospel truth in an otherwise dark place.

The London Apollos. On a succeeding page will be found a letter commenting upon Rev. R. J. Campbell's declaration at his Recognition Service as pastor of the City Temple. Mr. Olney's protest is courteous, respectful, dignified — yet firm withal; and with the matter and manner of his strictures we are in entire accord. We have already expressed our deep regret at some of the brilliant young preacher's utterances. We can only hope and pray, as we have said before, that increasing years will bring increasing knowledge, and especially a truer insight into Divine truth. We thank God for his devout and spiritual mind, in which runs also an Evangelical vein; but this latter feature is at present overlaid by an accretion of human theory and cultured speculation which pains many well-wishers. Like the eloquent Apollos, he needs an Aquila or Priscilla to "expound unto him the way of God more carefully." Meantime, his teaching is sowing seeds that must bear a sorry harvest in the minds of those whose views are as yet unformed.

God—Father and King. Mr. Campbell's view of the Sovereignty of God ignores an important factor which is well illustrated by an incident in the life of David and his son Absalom. After, and on account of, his murder of Amnon, Absalom had to remain as an exile in Geshur, but "David mourned for his son every day . . . and the soul of King David longed to go forth unto Absalom" (2 Sam. xiii. 37-39). As a father, David yearned to take his erring son to his breast, but as king he could not, on account of his crime. The law of the land had a prior claim to that of the paternal desire. The sovereignty of God presupposes law, and law must be obeyed, disobedience must be atoned for. Therefore the sinner who has broken the Divine law—"alienated from God by wicked works" (Col. i. 21)—can only be received into favour and position in the Kingdom by a willing and contrite acceptance of the atoning work of our Lord Jesus Christ, who "died for all," but God also "commandeth all men everywhere to repent" (Acts xvii. 30).

A Rebel Still. But, it may be urged, Absalom was eventually allowed to return. Yes, but with what result? Only to organize forces for the attempted dethronement of the king, and the usurpation of the throne for himself. He never repented, and he perished in his sin. Were it possible for an unrepentant soul to enter heaven, it would be heaven no longer. "There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth." "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." This is the Divine verdict. God will save all who are willing to be saved. He desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he turn from his wickedness, and live. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

Coming Apart to Rest. It is a matter for thanksgiving that in the midst of the strife into which, unhappily, many servants of God are at present forced, room is being made for gatherings in which the higher things of the soul are proposed as subjects for meditation and prayer. Last week over 700 ministers met at Hampstead to take part in a purely spiritual convention. This week an association of Yorkshire Evangelical Churchmen meets at Leeds for a similar purpose. Later, Mildmay and Keswick will follow. We shall have no fear concerning other issues, if men who are called upon to take the leading places in life will only guard the purity of their own spiritual life. The tendency of all public debate and strife is to secularize the soul. This fatality needs to be jealously guarded against, and these spiritual gatherings will greatly help to keep the balance. Those who are debarred from such helps need not suffer any loss. God offers Himself wholly to the soul at all times, and in every place where the soul is ready to receive Him.

Longing for Revival. One of the strongest notes struck at the Hampstead Ministers' Conference, and one which in the truest way was applauded by all present, referred to the nature of a looked-or religious revival. We thought it was close upon us two years ago, but thus far only isolated sections of the community have been moved. The revival which will once more impose the hush of the Divine presence upon the entire land is yet to come. The work of preparation for it has been long, but we believe it has been deep. And the best thing said about it at Hampstead was that it must, in the nature of the case, be a revival of the reality of Christ to the individual soul. A Christian revival must be, if words mean anything, a revival of Christ in human experience. It would be superfluous to say this, had not so many people put other things first. Men have been busy seeking to settle questions dealing with food and clothing, hoping that the Kingdom of God would be added to their efforts. The word of Jesus remains, "Seek ye FIRST the Kingdom of God, and these things shall be added unto you." When the Church seeks first the glory of Christ, the ethical revival will soon follow.

Scottish Boy Preacher. An interesting account is given on page 25 of the preaching of Colin Livingstone, the Scottish Boy Preacher. Independent inquiry has satisfied us that good work is being done. When God speaks through unusual channels it is natural that His people should exercise caution; but when He unmistakably uses the inexperienced to perfect praise, we gladly join in the thanksgiving.

Congregational Singing. The recent incursion of the German Emperor into the realms of musical criticism might with advantage be noted by other choirs nearer home than those to whom the Kaiser's good advice was tendered. In far too many of our places of worship the musical portion of the service has become too ambitious, and instead of being a help to worship it has degenerated into a hindrance. It is not unusual to hear such historic hymns as "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "Rock of ages cleft for me," around which cluster hosts of soul-stirring memories and associations, sung to tunes in which most of the worshippers cannot join.

Disintegrated Religion. Prebendary Webb-Peploe's views in regard to the degeneration of religion in the upper grades of society, as expressed recently to an interviewer, are far from reassuring to those who are interested in the developments of modern life. The prebendary does not hesitate to attribute the decadence altogether to the spread and increase of wealth and so-called civilization, that increase having given birth to habits of which the nation had no conception little over a quarter of a century ago:—

> Wealth means indulgence, and indulgence means the worship of self, and the worship of self means the ignoring of God. . . God is put on one side for the sake of the luxuries of the present world.

That there will be a rehabilitation Mr. Webb-Peploe does not seem to doubt, and "it must come from those who uphold the living Saviour and His atonement." Through the centuries from the death of Christ these have been the salt of the earth, and the social salvation of humanity to-day depends upon them. A terrible decadence has invariably and inevitably followed in the wake of all great civilizations, and our Lord's words as to the rich man may, indeed, well be applied to them, and to the English empire of to-day.

A Reluctant Protest.

To the Editor of "The Christian."

DEAR SIR,—It is no pleasant task to call attention to the unscripturalness of a late utterance by the new, highly-esteemed minister of the City Temple. But it would be the height of unfaithfulness to allow his gentle and attractive personality to blind our eyes to any teaching from his lips which is at variance with the Word of God. In his sermon upon "Are there few that be saved?" preached Thursday, May 7, and reported in the Christian Commonwealth May 14, Rev. R. J. Campbell plainly states his belief concerning the future of those who die impenitent. He takes two texts, one from Luke xiii. 23, 24, which he dismisses in a few words; the other, "Until he find it" (Luke xv. 4). He prefaces his exposition of his second text by a verse from Tennyson, which, he says, "comes pretty near to what I feel to be the truth":—

> That nothing walks with aimless foot,
> That not one life shall be destroyed
> Or cast as rubbish to the void,
> When God has made the pile complete.

The teaching of the sermon is condensed in a sentence in the early part of it: "There is no question here as to doubt about the length of time in which a sinner can resist God; it can only be so long as 'until' the lost are found." We are not, therefore, left in any doubt concerning Mr. Campbell's belief that God will save all sooner or later. This teaching is elaborated through the sermon in the following sentences:—

> "Until he find it—but He shall find it. The soul that resisteth Him resisteth at his own peril; but God prevails, not the sinner." "The eternally right and good will prevail by the power of God." "I cannot feel that Christ died for this man and that; I hold that He died for all men. We are His own, and when the end shall come, when He shall have put all things under His feet, I look to see it that in all things He must have the pre-eminence; and with my Master's triumph so complete, none can fight against the crucified." "I read God by the best that humanity produces, not by the worst; and the Divine compassion is of such a kind, we can safely trust it for eternity." "When once a sinner has been awakened to his folly, then there is room for the gracious influence of the Spirit of God, and no sin has ever been dreadful enough to incur an eternity of punishment."

The main body of Mr. Campbell's discourse consists of a fourfold argument, which he says convinces him of the truth of the view he is taking, namely, God's sovereignty, Christ's atonement, the Divine compassion, and the claim of humanity upon God.

Against the teaching enunciated in this sermon we bring two indictments. First, there is lack of Scripture for its support. We have examined this sermon of Mr. Campbell's with great care; and, while pathos, human sentiment, reasoning, human opinion, are all employed to confirm his conclusion, there is scarcely the slightest appeal to Scripture. This is to be expected, as the Word of God does not hold out the hope of salvation after death for those who die impenitent. In one of his sentences quoted above, Scripture is referred to, but the passages hinted at may contain quite another meaning to that which Mr. Campbell gathers from them. What we would wish from him is a clear reference to passages which teach that the sinner who dies in his sin may indulge a hope of salvation after death. Such passages are not to be found in Mr. Campbell's sermon; he does not (and cannot) give us Scripture proof of the belief he enunciates.

Perhaps the more serious branch of this indictment is the second. Such passages as he does quote he uses without reference to their context. This is a serious charge, but the fact cannot be denied. For instance, the text which he takes, "Until he find it," and which throughout the sermon he takes to mean that God will seek the lost soul even in eternity until he restores it to Himself, is used in the parable to refer to the sheep which is the Shepherd's peculiar possession. The man has 100 sheep and loses one "of them." This agrees with such passages as "My sheep hear My voice," and "I lay down My life for the sheep." The world of men is never called in Scripture, Christ's sheep.

Again, Mr. Campbell quotes the passage, "If one died for all, then were all dead," teaching by it a universal death with Christ for all men, and so a universal atonement for sin. Had Mr. Campbell gone on with the quotation, his use of it would have been disproved; for the Apostle adds, "and that He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them." It is evident therefore that those who are redeemed bear the peculiar mark of His regenerating grace in this life.

Moreover, Mr. Campbell quotes, "I am persuaded that neither death nor life, &c., shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." It is surprising how so thoughtful a preacher can make this an argument for God's saving grace towards all men even in the lost world, when the qualification is so distinct that this love is "IN CHRIST JESUS." How can those share in it who deliberately reject the Saviour?

I have tried to do Mr. Campbell justice in noting all the Scripture references in his sermon. If surprise is felt by any of our readers that so wide a departure from the usual teaching of the Church for centuries concerning the final condition of the lost should be based upon such a meagre reference to the Word of God, we can only say that we shall be glad to be corrected if we have ignored any passage which Mr. Campbell uses in the discourse in seeking to establish his doctrine.

In summing up these comments upon this teaching of Mr. Campbell's we would point out that in the whole discussion he omits the condition of salvation which is one of the great characteristics of New Testament teaching, that, "without faith it is impossible to please God." The repentance and trust, without which the New Testament suggests no hope of eternal life, are ignored in this sermon by the preacher, and of course rendered absolutely unnecessary by his teaching. He would doubtless say they avail for the possession of Christ and salvation before and at death, but in spite of the dying sinner not possessing them he teaches that God will find him in another world and at some future time.

At the close of his discourse Mr. Campbell notices some objections likely to be raised to his teaching, and many will say that the objections are far stronger than any argument he brings against them, but we are content with basing this criticism entirely upon the unscripturalness of the position he takes.

There is no pleasure in standing up to defend so terrible a truth as the future punishment of the finally impenitent and unbelieving; but God's Word is sufficiently clear. We are bound to abide by revealed truth, whatever be the issues. It would be difficult for any of Mr. Campbell's brethren in the high places of the Church of God in our land to-day to criticise the utterances of so esteemed a brother; but an obscurer worker in the vineyard, whose motives are less likely to be misunderstood, may contest for the Word of truth and the allegiance that the Church owes to it.—Yours faithfully, WILLIAM OLNEY.

One Sacrifice for Ever.

(Heb. x. 12.)

MEN are fond of hearing of deeds of noble daring and heroic self-sacrifice. Great and magnificent monuments have been erected to perpetuate the memory of those who have sacrificed themselves for their country, or the freedom of their race.

But in all the records of human history, where shall we find so wonderful a deed or so complete a self-sacrifice as that of the Lord Jesus Christ on the cross of Calvary? He whom angels worship, who ever dwelt in the bosom of God the Father—the co-equal, co-eternal Son—moved by an infinite compassion, laid aside His glory, and came down, in weakness and humiliation, to rescue this lost and perishing world from sin—no pomp or circumstance of earth to cheer his lonely path, no human smiles, but led cruelly to the cross as a lamb to the slaughter. Though scorned and hated by those He came to save, nothing turned Him from His purpose, and finally He laid down a life of unfaltering obedience to God and love to man.

If we would understand THE VALUE OF THIS GREAT SACRIFICE, and the meaning of the Gospel in the New Testament, we must look back to the state of the sinner under the Old Testament dispensation. The Law that God gave to Moses demanded daily sacrifices for sin, and every year also a great day of atonement. The Israelite could never look back on a completed sacrifice and say: "My sins are all atoned for, and for ever put away." The sacrifices he offered never put away sin.

Not all the blood of beasts, on Jewish altars slain,
Could give the guilty conscience peace, or wash away the stain;
But Christ, the heavenly Lamb, takes all our sins away—
A sacrifice of nobler name and richer blood than they.

They were only a type of the Lamb that God had provided to be offered when the set time was fully come (Heb. ix. 26). Christ hath made atonement for sin for ever; altars and priests and the blood of victims are things of the past; in Him all these types found their fulfilment.

And the wondrous sacrifice of Christ is OF SUCH EFFICACY that it reaches back to the creation of the world, and forward to the end of time (Rev. x. 6). Thus, Abel offering a lamb as a burnt-offering, looking onward by faith to the Anti-type, and the sinner to-day pleading the death and merits of Christ, are both included in that great atonement made on Calvary's cross. Now salvation is free. Whosoever will may be justified freely, be forgiven all his sins, and receive eternal life; he need bring no victim; there is no earthly priest to receive it; the blood has already been shed, and God the Father has accepted the wonderful, free, full, and perfect Atonement of His dear Son for the sins of the whole world. Men ask, What must I do? God says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts xvi. 31).

But before a sinner can be saved, he must be CONSCIOUS THAT HE IS A SINNER; he need do nothing, and can do nothing, to qualify himself to accept the forgiveness of his sins. As a starving man earnestly seeks food because he is hungry, or the man parched with thirst feels his need of water, and cries: "Give me water or I die"—so must the sinner seek Christ because he feels he really needs a Saviour or he will be eternally lost.

We need continually to have a more vivid sense of the terrible character of sin than we usually possess. We should look on every form and development of it as something not only to be shunned, but determinedly and persistently abhorred.

We are too flippant in our conversation about it, too light in our thought and talk respecting it, and too easy in our conduct towards it. Oh for a stronger determination, by the grace of God, to keep away from it, and never willingly to pander to it nor parley with it in any form whatever. It is the deadly thing that brought the Lord of Glory from the bosom of the Father, and nailed Him to the cross. It should be utterly loathed, cast out as vile and unclean. We should rather take the most loathsome creeping reptile to nurse and fondle, than encourage or tolerate in our midst the presence of this monstrous hydra-headed deformity, the curse of the world—sin.

THE

Science and Mystery of Prayer

BY REV. FREDERIC C. SPURR.

II.—The Great Principles of Prayer.

THE Bible nowhere defines prayer; everywhere it urges us to pray. Yet we feel we need a working definition of prayer from which we may go out, and to which we may return. That of the late Dr. Liddon is probably one of the very best—"Prayer is the whole of the spiritual action toward God; intercourse with God with no end beyond that."

Those who are accustomed to regard prayer as consisting chiefly of petition will find Dr. Liddon's definition at first sight defective; but the more deeply the real object of prayer is pondered, the more perfect and exalted will this definition be found. The primary thing in prayer is communion with God. Petition occupies a wholly secondary place. And this communion is internal as well as external—a matter of spiritual atmosphere as well as a definite and conscious approach to God. The exhortations to prayer which are so frequent in the New Testament suppose this. "Praying always" (Eph. vi. 18). "In everything" (Phil. iv. 6). "Continue in prayer" (Col. iv. 2) "Pray without ceasing" (1 Thess. v. 17).

If prayer consisted only in specific and conscious approach to God, then for the majority of persons immersed in the legitimate affairs of life, such communion with God would be impossible. But communion may be maintained when the mind is not engaged with Divine things. Permit a simple illustration. Two towns are in telephonic communication with each other. In order that definite messages may freely pass between them at any given moment, it is necessary that the batteries be always charged, the wires always sound, and the receiving and transmitting apparatus always in order. Unless this were so, the passing of messages would be most uncertain. And if the human spirit is to turn to God in conscious communion and for definite petition, it must first of all possess perpetual harmony with God—what may be called passive communion with Him.

PRAYER—MENTAL AND VOCAL.

It must be further noted that, in the four passages just quoted, the word employed for prayer does not primarily signify intercession or petition. It simply indicates the "speaking out" of man to God—the purpose of that "speaking out" being left undefined. It is not perpetual petition to which we are exhorted, but perpetual communion. And this "speaking out" need not always be vocal. The desire of a heart is a language. The Psalmist "thirsted" for the living God (Psa. xlii. 2), and that was prayer of a high order. Vocal prayer, however, is also necessary by reason of our human constitution. The two sides of prayer are set forth in Psalm lxii.: "My soul is silent unto God" (v. 1, R.V. marg.). Here is mental prayer. "Ye people pour out your heart before Him" (v. 8). Here is vocal prayer.

The true order of prayer is, first, intercourse with God for its own sake, and afterwards petition. This is made very clear by our Lord Himself in the great model prayer. It opens, not with petition for ourselves, but with the recognition of what is due to God. "Thy Name. . . Thy Kingdom. . . Thy will." Surely this is the call to men to seek God first for Himself. It teaches us that we are to be in harmony with God before we offer petition. After that comes petition. "Give us. . . Forgive us. . . Lead us not. . ." These are not capricious requests; they touch the core of our relations with God and men. The Doxology ends the prayer. This is true prayer. God first and last, and ourselves between as related to Him. But how few pray after this manner! The many wish to exploit God to their advantage; hence they commence with request. When men threaten to throw away their faith because God has not answered their prayer, we may be absolutely certain they never prayed after the manner of the Lord's Prayer. All true prayer follows the Divine order. If from the heart we pray the first part of the Pater Noster, we shall not go astray in the matter of our petitions.

Intercourse with God, for its own sake, and petition—these two things are like the two sides of an arch, they need a bridge to connect them. And the connecting thing may be named discipline.

Communion with God is not a sentimental thing. It is designed to make us like God, and this involves discipline by means of which our life's discords are harmonized with the Divine will. Then, our petitions will all be answered, for we shall only ask for those things which are pleasing in His sight. This discipline affects us as related to God and men, and in our own personal life.

THE PLACE OF DISCIPLINE.

1. Towards God. "Delight thyself in the Lord, and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart" (Ps. xxxvii. 4). This means discipline, for it involves the refusal of many other delights which continually allure us. The world offers to-day, more than ever, a multitude of fascinating things, most of which are contrary to God. The Christian has to choose between these and God. The choice is often hard and exasperating to the feelings, but that is just where discipline enters. The question is, have we the courage to decide for the higher things as against the lower? If not, we cannot expect God to grant us the desires of our hearts, since we demand things which are opposed to His order.

2. Towards men. Communion with God is designed also to bring us into harmony with our fellow-men. Love to God and love for men are inseparably joined in the Gospel. If the latter is absent, we are peremptorily told that our profession of the former is false. So our Lord, in stating the conditions of successful prayer, insists upon harmony with our brethren. Even if they have hurt us we must forgive them, or we shall not be forgiven (Mark xi. 25, 26). But this involves discipline. Nothing is easier than to preach forgiveness of our enemies; nothing is more difficult to practise. To forgive our foes means to go against the grain, to accept humiliation, to surrender our "rights" for the good of others. And all this, which must be done if prayer is to be successful, cannot be done unless God does it in us.

3. Towards ourselves. Communion with God leads to the purification of our entire life. Sin is the fatal obstacle to union with God, and this must be removed if our prayers are to be answered (Isa. lix. 1, 2). This also means discipline. It includes, first of all, humble submission to the blood of cleansing, careful watching and prayer, avoidance of the occasions of sin, the cultivation of those virtues most opposed to our besetting sin, and the instant and humble acknowledgment to God of our sins whenever we are surprised into failure.

* * * * *

For the accomplishment of this colossal work we are not abandoned to our own resources. We have a Divine Ally—graciously given to us for the perfecting of our spiritual life—the HOLY GHOST (Rom. viii. 26). Fully surrendered to Him we cannot fail to arrive at our goal.

A Woman's Plea.

By Miss ELLICE HOPKINS.

THE great Bishop Lightfoot once said in a White Cross address: "You know that on the battlefield there is always one spot which is the key to the position, and the army that can win and hold it will win the victory. Now, I say that the key to a man's character lies here—if purity establish itself in the citadel, the whole character is won. And it is characters that are thus won to true manhood that we must have if we are to fulfil our high world-wide task!

Now I think I can best help in this cause by venturing to point out what appear to be two omissions in that otherwise most useful little book entitled, Public Morals*, edited by Mr. James Marchant. I trust I shall not be deemed presumptuous in thus doing. For twenty-five years I have worked, suffered, and thought on this difficult problem, and I draw, therefore, my conclusions as to what tells and what does not tell upon it, from that singularly auriferous bed-rock, experience, and not, I trust, from any presumption or conceit in myself.

Now the first point which I think needs to be more strongly emphasized is this—Has there not been some fault in Christian teaching, both in the pulpit and the home, which has allowed things to come to their present pass? Is there not something spectral in our theology, some defect in our Christian teaching, when so thoughtful a man as Professor James can calmly make the statement in his lectures delivered in Scotland, that Christianity despises the body?† Christianity despise the body? Why, what nobler and diviner description of the body of man has ever been given than that by the great apostle of Christianity: "What, know ye not that your bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost?" emphasized further by the terrible words often so fearfully fulfilled in our midst, "If any man defile that temple, him will God destroy." And does not Christianity alone of the great religions of the world, with one possible but debased exception, promise a resurrection of the body—the body, soul, and spirit, making one risen man?

If on one or two Sundays in the year the great body of devoted pastors, evangelists, and teachers would dwell on as the temple of the Holy Ghost, what higher and purer life might not spring from such teaching?

There is a second point—the existence of a pariah class of women and young girls in our midst. "The very existence of this class at the heart of all our Christian civilizations," as Bishop Welldon observes, "is a fact so remarkable that it would excite astonishment and dismay, if it were not so familiar. To some teachers the full awfulness of the thought has not presented itself, "that, especially in a democratic society like ours," to quote again from Dr. Welldon, "there should exist a class of citizens who have lost once for all time the rights of citizens; who are nobody's wives, nobody's sisters, nobody's friends—who live a living death in the world of men." There are thousands and thousands of such citizens in England and Wales—and all are women! And the strange thing is that even Christianity has added to the depth of their sin and misery. The hetæræ of Greece were in no way looked upon as degraded. But with the advent of Christianity came the higher ideal of manhood and womanhood, and the fuller light necessarily cast a deeper shadow, and that shadow was left to fall upon the woman.

And oh, the pity of the manner of its fall in so many cases! A great rescue worker told Dr. Grattan Guinness, in answer to one of his questions, that in her experience the most powerful influence in the destruction of purity amongst girls lay in the personal influence of girl-companions. I am perfectly aware that this is often the case. But she forgot to add how they corrupt them; simply by parading the money of men that will be theirs if they "go into the life." No hard monotonous toil, but fine clothes, the theatre, the jollity, the whole day to do what they like in. Of three young outcast girls questioned by my friend Mary Steer, one had had £20 in one month, another £32 in one day, and a third £100 in three months; and the choice with these mere children in age and experience lay between hard toil at a little place from six in the morning to eleven o'clock at night for three shillings a week; or six to twelve shillings in a factory or shop, finding board and lodgings; and loose liberty with the handling of such sums!

I often wonder whether men know the pathetic fact which all we women workers in prevention are agreed on—that if, by hook or by crook, we can tide them over their twenty-first birthday, we have, as a rule, saved them from the worst—from going down into the pit, if not from being betrayed by their affections. I do not deny that there are bad women as well as bad men; I do not deny that the woman, to my shame, is often the tempter—these poor outcasts must tempt or starve—but I do say, stop the money of men, and the whole thing so far as the trade of vice is concerned, would be starved out in six months' time.

What is most wanted is an appeal to common manhood. Every man has within him a buried temple. Have but one-hundredth part of your Lord's faith in man, in the publican, in the rough fisherman, in the outcast woman—strike across the rubbish and desert sand of years under which the temple lies buried, and appeal to the man within the man, and some Divine breath of the Spirit will lay it bare, and within will be found the mercy-seat where all the great trusts of his manhood are enshrined, and man and God meet face to face.

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

5.—THE GREAT CONFESSION.

AFTER a period of school life, comes the examination. The daily influence of Master on disciple is now to be tested and the results revealed. A turning point in Simon Peter's history, a landmark in his experience. Study Matt. xvi. 13-20; Mark viii. 27-30; Luke ix. 18-21, and note carefully the precise stages.

I.—THE GENERAL INQUIRY (Matt. xvi. 13f.).

1. Where made? In North Palestine. When in retirement ("He was praying alone," Luke ix. 18).

2. Why made? Current opinions rife about Him. But these were not enough, and so another step was now to be taken.

II.—THE PERSONAL TEST (v. 15).

1. Its Novelty. Hitherto our Lord had revealed nothing about Himself. Such a disclosure would have been premature. Wiser to leave His character and influence to make their own silent but deep impression.

2. Its Meaning. A new stage upward. His earliest word was, "Follow Me!" implying trust and obedience. Now it is, "What think ye of Me?" Conviction necessary as well as Confidence. Ideas are of primary importance to full discipleship. Ideas and convictions about Christ are the natural and necessary outcome of contact with, and confidence in Him. "With all thy mind" (Luke x. 27) is an integral part of our relation to God.

III.—THE DEFINITE CONFESSION (v. 16).

1. Of our Lord's Messiahship. "The Christ."

2. Of our Lord's Divinity. "The Son of the living God."

N.B.—Compare this with the earlier and shorter confession in John vi. 69, R.V. "The Holy One of God." Mark the progress of conviction: (1) Character, "Holy One;" (2) Office, "The Christ;" (3) Authority, "Son . . God."

IV.—THE SPECIAL COMMENDATION (v. 17).

1. Its Nature. "Blessed art Thou." Blessedness in confessing, and also in possessing.

2. Its Secret. "For flesh, &c." Spiritual discernment was the explanation of this. The daily contact and gradual influence had done their work, and now had come an unusual inflow of knowledge on his experience.

V.—THE GREAT COMMISSION (vv. 18, 19).

1. The Promises (v. 18). A difficult passage. Evidently arising directly out of Peter's confession. It is our Lord's acknowledgment of that, and of what it involved.

(a) Study carefully the terms used. "Thou art Petros," "and on this rock" (Greek, "petra." See R.V. marg.). "My Church"; "the gates of Hades."

(b) What is the meaning of "this rock"? (1) Is it Peter himself? If so, how? Note, "Thou art Peter." Cf. John i. 42, "Thou shalt be called Peter." Now the change had come; "art" for "shalt be," and as thus changed he should, by his life and work, be the instrumental foundation of the Church of Christ. His spiritual life is to be the basis of his fitness. Personal qualification is to issue in personal work.

N.B.—This view makes no distinction between "Petros" (masc.) and "Petra" (fem.), which, it is urged, would not be made in Aramaic as our Lord spoke. It is certainly a very obvious and natural view, and is held by scholars like Dr. Hort, whose great scholarship, together with his strong disagreement with Romanism, cannot be questioned (see Dr. Hort's Christian Ecclesia, p. 17). It limits the meaning entirely to Peter himself, and thereby safeguards it against any Roman Catholic interpretation. (2) Is it Peter's Confession? This view takes "this rock" to mean "this confession of My Messiahship and Divinity you have now made." An interpretation which agrees with 1 Cor. iii. 11; Ephes. ii. 20; and 1 Peter ii. 4-8. The last passage is certainly a strong argument for this view, which also has the manifest advantage of distinguishing between "Petros" and "petra," as the Greek assuredly does. If our Lord meant Peter himself it would have been most natural to have said, "And on thee I will build."

For a union of these two views see the new and valuable work by Principal T. M. Lindsay on "The Church and Ministry." "The Rock on which the Church was to be built was a man confessing—not the man apart from his confession, as Romanists insist, nor the confession apart from the man, as Protestants urge" (p. 6).

(c) "My Church." First time of use by our Lord. Note, too, the future, "I will build"; therefore, not then begun (until Pentecost).

(d) "Hades." The unseen world, the world of the spirits departed this life. "Shall not prevail," i.e., shall not keep back or retain any of Christ's followers. The usual interpretation of "gates of Hades shall not prevail" as indicating the futility of all active opposition to the Church, while true as a fact, seems scarcely possible as an explanation of the text. Gates do not fight. They open and shut, and our Lord here promises that not one of His followers shall be kept back from Him by the power of the grave. Cf. Rev. i. 18, "I have the keys of . . . Hades."

2. The Duties (v. 19).

(a) Study the terms used.

(1) "Keys." Symbol of authority. See Isa. xxii. 22; Luke xi. 52; Rev. i. 18, xx. 1.

(2) "Kingdom of Heaven." Distinguish from "Church" (v. 18). Larger and wider idea. The Church is in the Kingdom. The Kingdom is the heavenly reign of God over all things earthly.

(3) "Whatsoever," neuter gender; not "whomsoever." Reference is to things, not to persons.

(4) "Bind," "loose," Jewish formula for "prohibiting and permitting," and taken with "whatsoever" implies disciplinary authority in the Church.

(b) Consider the meaning of the authority.

(1) It is personal. It doubtless refers to Peter's position in the early Church. He opened the Kingdom to the Jews (Acts ii.) and to Gentiles (Acts x.). He exercised disciplinary authority in the case of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v.), and of Simon Magus (Acts viii.). Yet this authority to exercise discipline was not unique, for in Matt. xviii. 18 we find it given to all the Apostles. Peter's leadership, however, was undoubted, though the difference between him and the others was one of degree, not of kind.

(2) It cannot be continuous, i.e., beyond Peter himself, as Rome alleges. There is no authority for transmission, and no proof of it, because there is no possibility of it. It was obviously intended for him alone. Nor do we find any supreme authority exercised over the rest of the twelve. (See Acts xi., where Peter was called to account for his action. Also Acts viii. 14, where we read, "They sent unto them Peter.")

To sum up: The commission was a personal recognition of a personal confession, and was a promise and prophecy of special personal work in days to come.

SUGGESTIONS.

1. The value of a true creed. It does matter what a man believes. Creed influences life. The finest creed is seen here; personal belief in Christ.

2. The secret of a true creed. How did Peter arrive at his belief? By personal contact with Christ. Conviction arose out of experience taught by God.

3. The confession of a true creed. An absolute necessity for real life (Rom. x. 9; Matt. x. 32). And always brings blessing ("Blessed" v. 17).

4. The connection between creed, confession and service. Cause and effect. What we possess we profess; and what we profess we propagate.

SUNDAY, June 21. Psalm xxxiv.

A Psalm of Deliverance.

THIS Psalm commemorates that humiliating incident in David's life when he pretended insanity to save his life in Goliath's city of Gath. Probably it was written long after that event, as the king, saint, and poet looked back on it from across the ravine of years, and it seemed to him as though he could not think of his own part in the matter because he thought so much of God's. The word deliverance is clearly the keynote!

It is an acrostic Psalm. Each couplet begins with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet. It may be divided into the parts of the solo and the chorus, the latter taking up the idea of the former and expanding it.

1, 2. Introduction. A vow of unbroken praise. 3-6. A solo of personal experience. 7-10. The chorus of those who know because they have proved. 11-14. A solo for the instruction of the untaught. 15-18. The chorus—the nearness of the Lord. 19, 20. A solo—saved in the heart of the fire. 21, 22. The chorus—no condemnation in Christ.

MONDAY, June 22. Psalm xxxv.

A Litany of Judgment.

The Psalmist was in peril of life. He was accused of crimes of which he was absolutely innocent, and he turns to God with eager prayer that He would arise to plead his cause. Surely this plaintive cry dates from the days of the Sauline persecution, when men sought after his life and plotted for his hurt.

The Psalm may be divided into three parts, but each resembles the other two in describing the enemy as ungrateful and malignant, and insisting on the singer's innocence.

1-10. What a magnificent figure! Jehovah armed with target and shield is depicted as starting to His feet to help His persecuted servant. We are reminded of Stephen's vision of the Son of Man. Notice the rendering of R.V. marg. for verse 3: "Draw out the spear and the battle-axe against them that pursue me." Of course the strong expressions of desire that his enemies should flee as chaff before the wind, and tread a slippery downward path, are foreign to the Divine ethics taught us by our Lord; but we may at least accept this picture of flight in the dark, down a slippery path, as when the Amorites fled down the pass of Beth-horon, as being true of those who set themselves against God. If men yield to God, they are blessed for ever; but to resist Him is to expose themselves to defeat and sorrow.

11-18. It is a strange thing, how, in this world, the good have to suffer from causeless hatred. Their goodness extracts by its very quality the hostility of men, as sunheat extracts poisonous malaria from the swamp. Whoever lives near God will be the target of popular dislike. We may as well make up our minds to it; He will vindicate us.

19-28. The time will come when the hunted soul shall be able to rejoice in its complete deliverance. Then surrounded by loving friends, the happy soul (as Prof. Cheyne renders it) "shall musingly speak in the low murmur of one who is entranced by a sweet thought," of God's righteousness and praise.

TUESDAY, June 23. Psalm xxxvi.

The Song of Life's Fountain.

1-4. In the most sombre colours the Psalmist depicts the secret beliefs and the evil deeds of the sinner. By a bold image (see R.V. marg.) Transgression is personified as speaking in the heart of the wicked, as in some dark cave, such as that which in the heathen world was employed by the Delphic oracle. And the answer given from that secret oracle is full of smooth but beguiling words. Transgression promises all manner of delights, but, as the Apostle says, it beguiles. So, too, our first parents found it.

5-9. In contrast to the false oracle of sin, behold the glorious realities of the Divine Nature and the blessedness of God's guests! Lovingkindness begins and ends the series. The golden bracelet begins and ends with a similar link. The guarantee that God's love will continue is furnished by his Faithfulness. God's righteousness is as permanent, as lofty, as far removed above men's ideals, as soaring Alps; there is safe hiding in the fastnesses of that mighty nature. God's acts are like the ever-moving sea, with its mystery of depth and ever-changing light. Those who fly to God become His guests, and are royally entertained. They are satisfied with God, as hungry men with banquets, and thirsty men with rivers. Union with God is the one all-satisfying experience of human life; and godly men may enjoy some participation in God's own pleasures. The life of all that lives rises from God as an inexhaustible Fountain, and He is "the Master Light of all our seeing"; that is, we must be in living union with Himself before we can understand the mysteries that surround us.

10-12. Serenely sheltered under the wing, or in the house of God, the soul may look out on "the wreck of matter and the shock of worlds," and behold the irrevocable ruin that must overtake the wicked, notwithstanding all the assurances of their oracles.

WEDNESDAY, June 24. Psalm xxxvii.

A Meditation on the Prospect of the Wicked.

This is another Acrostic Psalm, grappling with the problem which always tried the faith of Old Testament saints—namely the apparent failure of God to reward His servants and punish His enemies as they deserved. Of course, the whole future world was very shadowy to the eyes of those ancient lovers of God. Life and immortality had not been brought to light. Without the vista of eternity, where God will right the wrongs of time, the inequalities of the present life are indeed inexplicable.

But though the solution suggested by this Psalm is not all, yet its teaching of the blessedness of absolute trust in God's Providence and care is very delightful and comforting; and its anticipations of ultimate triumph for those who trust, and of overthrow for those who do evil, will be absolutely realised, when God has had time to work out His whole scheme.

"Fret not thyself," i.e., do not glow with the fiery tint of kindling passion. Do not let the prosperity of wicked men shake your faith in God's government of the world, nor excite you unduly; God will do away with the anomaly when the time is fulfilled. In the meanwhile, live in God, find your delight in Him, roll on Him the choice of your life-course, trust God to supply all your need and to work for you, be still before Him, silent in love, submissive to His dealings, expectant, and hopeful.

How dramatically this picture of the happy, restful child of God is contrasted with the rage of the wicked, and his certain doom, like the barrenness of the pastures, withered in the heat, or like the evanescence of the thin column of curling smoke.

When Paul Gerhardt was banished from Berlin by the Elector, he turned to a small wayside hostelry, not knowing where else to go. Seeing his wife greatly depressed, he quoted the fifth verse; composed his memorable hymn, "Commit thou all thy griefs;" and that same evening two messengers arrived from Duke Christian of Mecklenburg, offering him an honourable position in his kingdom.

THURSDAY, June 25. Psalm xxxviii.

A Dirge.

This, says one, is a long drawn-out wail, passionate at first, but gradually calming itself into submission and trust, though never passing out of its minor key.

Delitzch thinks that it should be classed with Psalms xxxii. and li., as belonging to the time of David's penitence after his great fall from purity. The Psalm is at least full of God's judgments, the singer's consciousness of sin, and his mental and physical sufferings.

1-8. God's wrath is compared to an outburst or explosion, as igniting, or as bubbling over like the hot lava of a volcano (1). Under the pressure of the painful discipline through which he is called to pass, he remembers his sins, he enumerates the symptoms of the disease with which he is afflicted; and then begins to pour out his soul before God.

9-14. The tone is calmer and more submissive. The soul is beginning to nestle back to the side of God as its salvation, though it cannot forget its desertion by its friends, and the hostility of its foes.

15-22. Notice the fourfold repetition of For. Be dumb to man, O stricken soul, but speak to God. Let Faith marshal her arguments before Him. Out of stony griefs build your Bethels. Like the Syro-phenician woman, extract encouragement out of discouragement; and like Samson, find honey in the lion's carcase. Yes, in life and death, from myself and my foes, in sins and sorrows, Thou, O God, art my salvation.

FRIDAY, June 26. Psalm xxxix.

The Song of the Pilgrim.

We have seen on the walls of Christian homes, the motto, Ut migraturus habita: Live as one about to depart. Such is the spirit of this plaintive outburst. Prolonged suffering, which the Psalmist had recognized as chastisement for sin, had worn down his strength. For long he had suffered silently, but at last the floodgates had been burst.

1-3. The resolve to keep silence had been frustrated. For God's honour the Psalmist had put a restraint on himself. He had put a muzzle on his lips, lest some expression might escape them, which would give the foes of God occasion to blaspheme. But his hidden grief burnt in his heart like a smouldering fire, which finally bursts from all control.

4-6. Our days are measured out by our God; but compared with His eternity, how brief they are! They may be covered by one breadth of the hand. A breath that curls up for a moment in the frosty air! A shadow like those that pass over the mountains, sweeping across vast tracks of country, and leaving no trace!

7-9. But God is sufficient. How blessed when the thought of God's variety drives us into the everlasting arms! To be dumb before Him, not complaining or murmuring, like the lamb led to the slaughter, or as a sheep before her shearers—this is best.

10-13. Life is short, and from many aspects unsatisfactory; but we are guests with God (12). This is His world, in which we are being entertained as a man in the house of his friend. Surely He will ever do His best for us.

SATURDAY, June 27. Psalm xl.

A Song of Thanksgiving.

1-3. Oh, the blessedness of waiting on God! How certain His stooping down to deliver! How established our goings, when He sets them on the rock! How joyous the song, which He puts into our mouths!

4-5. There is a transition here from purely personal experience to more general reflections. Notice the contrast between the servant of Jehovah and the sons of men, who are often arrogant in their self-reliance and turn away to lies.

6-8. The thankful heart gladly accepts the will of God, so far as it is revealed. The servant says to the Master, whom he loves: "Here am I, I am come." These verses are quoted in Heb. x. 5-7, where a slight paraphrase is suggested, since the body is, of course, the instrument for fulfilling the will of God. The pierced ear has been supposed to refer to the ancient Hebrew custom of nailing the lobe of the ear of the slave to the door of his master's house. So in loving submission our Lord yielded Himself to the will of the Father, and was nailed to the Cross; and so we may well ask that we too should be nailed to the blessed Cross.

> My Master, lead me to the door;
> Pierce this now willing ear once more;
> Thy bonds are freedom, let me stay
> With Thee, to toil, endure, obey.

9-17. The Psalmist in the first three verses pleads the faithfulness of his past stewardship as an argument for further experiences of God's grace. Ah, but we have a better plea. The Psalm ends with pleadings for a complete revelation of God's attributes in delivering his poor and needy servants.

Awakening in Germany.—2.

By COUNT A. BERNSTORFF.

IN my last letter I tried to show the historical development of the present religious revival in Germany. It is still necessary to say a few things about the organization of the movement and about its position to the churches.

The question of organization is a very difficult one. As soon as a spiritual movement tries to find human forms, the danger begins lest the form take the place of the spirit. The history of the Christian Church is a dreadful example of this. The body of Christ ought to be visible on earth; but with the growth of outward organization the decrease of inward life generally went in parallel lines on the other side. Where there is life, this life quite naturally seeks forms in order to influence men.

We must trust to the Lord for the future; but we can gratefully acknowledge that the new movement has now an organization which creates a common bond between the different Christians in all parts of Germany. In the year 1888, about 120 friends met in the small Moravian village of Gnadau. All parts of Germany were represented, and common interests were discussed. Since that day, the Gnadau Conference has taken place every second year. The impulses given from there have always furthered the work, and have shown that, notwithstanding local differences, the movement is one in spirit. English friends, who have often visited the Blankenburg Conference, perhaps ask what is the difference between these two. I might answer that the charm of Blankenburg consists in the fact that the Conference has no object, and the charm of Gnadau, that it has one special object. The Blankenburg Conference is an Alliance Conference, but there is no special practical object connected with it. Christian brethren go there with the one great desire of meeting their Master, and of obtaining help for their inward life. Nevertheless, it has done a great deal to and to do away with ecclesiastical prejudices.

Gnadau has one special object. The Conference naturally also helps to promote spiritual life, but its main tendency is to give fellow-workers the opportunity to hear from each other and to discuss the necessities of the work. The Gnadau Conference, which has now been held eight times, has always remained the headquarters of the movement. From 1888 to 1892 Baron Oertzen presided; after his death Count Pückler succeeded him in this capacity.

There also exists a Central German Committee for Evangelization and Christian fellowship. Of course, this committee has no outward authority. It does not mean to rule, but to help by advice, and to form a link. In the different provinces a few leading men form a "Brüderrath" (council of brethren), in order to do the same work in a more local manner, and a member of these councils is delegated into the central committee. The movement especially defines itself as "for evangelization and Christian fellowship." The two objects, though different in principle, must necessarily go together. Only a living congregation can evangelize with success. An evangelist has a poor position when he is left alone, when the whole spiritual influence devolves upon him. Helpers are required, not only for the outward work of spreading invitations, &c., but the evangelist must have a band of Christians who pray for him, and who help to spiritualize the tone of the meetings. A second reason is this, that the new converts must be taken care of: they are babes in Christ, and want tender nursing.

When Dr. Stöcker called the evangelist Schlumbach to Berlin in 1882, he invited all the pastors of the large city (of the National Church) to a conference. Only six came, and one of them said: "If people are converted, what shall we do with them?" This most extraordinary question was, after all, not without foundation. Our large State Church parishes are not the places for spiritually nursing young converts for Christ. The present movement, therefore, tried to combine two things—evangelization in order to reach the unconverted; ingathering of believers to give spiritual care to the newly-converted, and to prepare a people whom the Lord may use.

Such "fellowships" (Gemeinschaften) now exist in great numbers. They begin by hiring apartments, and as soon as it is possible they try to obtain houses of their own. These houses generally contain a large hall for evangelization, tea-meetings, Sunday-schools, &c., with smaller rooms for minor gatherings. There are generally a large Gospel meeting on Sunday, and one general Bible Class in the week; and besides these, meetings for men, for young men, for women, and for young women. As the care of all these meetings requires much work, it is generally difficult to find sufficient voluntary workers, and a regular agent is mostly employed to lead the work.

These fellowships are already a power in the religious life of Germany, though their members (with the sole exception of Berlin) chiefly belong to the poorer classes. They contain a large number of devoted Christians and those who are ready to give. Therefore the foreign missionary societies try to obtain their favour.

Among Jews in Russia.—5.

AFTER leaving Kischineff, another long and wearisome journey brought me to Lublin, in Poland, a handsome little city of 60,000 inhabitants, and considerable historic interest. Though Russia has a firm hand on Poland, and another uprising is not likely, the national feeling and the use of the Polish language have increased rather than decreased. Half or more of Lublin's population is Jewish. The Jewish quarter is Asiatic in its squalor and odour, and the dividing line between Jew and Gentile is more marked than in larger cities. They mix in the markets, shops, and exchange; but religiously and socially they are as distinct as in dress.

Here is another Bible Depôt of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, under the charge of Mr. Joseph Silberstein. It has been harder work here than elsewhere, but fortunately the permit held from the Government includes the privilege of colportage in the town and province. So the streets and shops have been our brother's field of labour, not merely the depôt. More than once he has borne blows from angry opponents of Jesus and His followers. Lublin being essentially Catholic, he has had no Christian intercourse, except from Pastor Schöneich, the very loving and godly pastor of the Lutheran Church, with whom I spent a profitable hour. There are, however, in the villages around, some colonies of German Baptists, to whom, unfortunately, I was too unwell to minister.

The province of Lublin contains possibly 200,000 Jews. In London among a less number we have a dozen active agencies, and workers by the score; here but one man, and all but no Christian fellowship for him. Does he not need our prayerful support? We hope to give him the companionship of a brother worker in visiting the various towns in the province. From Lublin, after a stay of a few days, I came on to Warsaw; but now so unwell that most reluctantly I had to forego all further public opportunities of testimony.

The Bible Depôt of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews in Warsaw is the most important in Russia. It occupies premises in the Bank Square, in the very centre of the city, and requires the full attention of two brethren, Messrs. Levinsky and Rosenberg. It is visited by an average of 150 Jews every week. Few Jews of the immense Jewish population of Warsaw are in ignorance of it. An average of thirty New Testaments weekly are given to earnest-minded people, besides great quantities of tract literature.

Saturday (the Sabbath) brings the largest number of Jews, and for hours long it is nothing but an informal Gospel meeting, the congregation being a group of some twenty or more heads round the counter. There has also, amid much patient labour and often disappointment, been fruit in lives won for Jesus.

While here I met in conference with the pastors of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, who interest themselves in Israel; and we trust in brotherly harmony to be able to accomplish more in Warsaw, in Lodz, and in Poland generally, than we could do separately. The Lutheran Church has recently appointed one of their own pastors (Pastor Gerhardt) to work among Israel, and he will work hand in hand with the brethren of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

I earnestly trust that these brief notes will do something to awaken a deeper prayerful and practical concern for this greatest and most needy Jewish mission field. There is much yet to be done; large centres of Jewish life are still untouched by Gospel witness; while again, for efficiency we require a great increase in all kinds of Gospel literature suitable for Jews, for which the wide distribution of Scriptures during the last fifteen years has prepared the way.

I had some opportunities of witness to Jewish fellow-travellers while passing from place to place; and thus the journey also closed. A Jew joined the English boat train, who was returning to South Africa viâ London. Recent bereavement had prepared him to listen to the message of comfort and hope. I asked him whether during his five years in South Africa he had never met with a Christian who spoke to him about his soul. "Yes, one," said he, "a Mr. Spencer." "Spencer Walton," I suggested. "Yes," said he, "that was the name." May it be that dear Mr. Walton's testimony shall yet bring fruit in this man's heart and life.

SAMUEL H. WILKINSON.

Travel in South America.

THE graphic story of travel and adventure in South America, which was unfolded by Pastor Emilio Olsson in a meeting at the River Plate House, E.C., on Monday afternoon last week had an especial interest for Christian people, since, wherever the traveller went, he took with him copies of the Holy Scriptures.

Mr. Olsson said that his journeys have covered all the fourteen countries of the "Neglected Continent." First, he spoke of the land as a whole, and then of Brazil, which alone has an area one-fifteenth of the entire land surface of the globe, but a population of only eighteen millions. The speaker pointed out that while London and British cities generally are overcrowded, there is ample space in South America for something like two hundred millions of people.

In his last long pioneer journey through the heart of South America, Mr. Olsson was occupied for six months, and had to travel in the face of almost insuperable difficulties. He had to pass seemingly impenetrable forests, where wild beasts and reptiles were plentiful, and for part of the time was accompanied only by one native.

On the present occasion Mr. Olsson was largely occupied with the commercial side of affairs. He is deputed by the Argentine Government to call attention to the advantages of the country, and he had evidently spared no labour to render himself master of the subject.

After a description of the river systems, the wild tribes of the interior, and the agriculture of the land, Mr. Olsson emphasized the point that it is the missionary who is the chief explorer of unknown lands, and in his train comes the trader. The Bible Society, in its world-wide dissemination of the Holy Scriptures, has done great things for commerce as well as for true religion. Indeed, the high position of the British empire to-day is largely due to the extent to which the work of Bible distribution has been carried on by its Christian workers. Evangelization and civilization are the chief stepping-stones to the future possibilities of South America.

Church and State in France.

EVENTS in France appear to be marching rapidly towards a crisis in the relations between the churches and the state. Once more, as at former periods of French history, the lack of a mediating class between the extremes of clericalism and atheism is felt; the fatal consequences of Louis XIV.'s persecuting policy are manifest even after two centuries.

The measures taken to suppress the religious orders, whether preaching, teaching, or commercial, have stirred up in the ecclesiastics and their followers—a small but by no means insignificant minority of the people—angry excitement, breaking out in occasional riots, and open insults of constituted authorities. Some time since, M. Combes, the Prime Minister, felt it necessary to warn the Church that, if it continued to resist the action of the Government, the only result must be the denunciation of the Concordat—in other words, disestablishment.

The Concordat concluded by Napoleon I. with the Church of Rome re-established Roman Catholicism, not in its former position as the only lawful church, but in that of a Church whose ministers were recognised and paid by the State. Two Protestant churches, the Reformed Church, which is that of the Huguenots, and the Lutheran Church, chiefly confined to Alsace, now lost to France, and the district of Montbéliard (which Louis XIV. had annexed without destroying its Protestantism), received in like manner official status and pay for their ministers; but these constitute less than 2 per cent. of the total population of France. The Jewish rabbis were similarly treated. These arrangements have, in the main, continued down to the present day.

A DRASTIC MEASURE.

A startling contribution to the controversy is the Bill for the separation of Church and State recently presented to the Chamber of Deputies by Francis de Pressensé, on behalf of himself and fifty-six other Socialist members. The author is a very interesting personality. The son of the eloquent Church historian, Free Church pastor, and senator, Edmond de Pressensé, he was so attracted by the writings of the now extinct liberal school of French Catholics, that a few years ago he was near joining the Church of Rome. Then came the Dreyfus case; and in exploring its iniquities, the brilliant journalist became so disgusted with the doings of the clericals that he went to the opposite extreme, and became a Socialist. As such he obtained a seat in the Chamber last year. His Bill is a bold and, generally speaking, a logical one embodying the saying of Cavour: "A free church in a free state."

But two of its provisions appear inconsistent with this ideal—it forbids the erection of fresh places of worship, and it forbids the Church, after disendowment, to raise the price of its services (marriages, funerals, &c.). It carries logic so far as to require that the Church shall pay a full rent for all religious edifices retained by it. As these provisions apply equally to the Protestant churches, it is not surprising that many Protestants are making common cause with the Catholics in protesting against the scheme. One can but sympathize with many worthy men to whom the passing of such a Bill would spell ruin; yet the Protestant Church of to-day would probably be the better for a little persecution and suffering!

The temper of the present Chamber, reflecting that of a great majority of electors, gives cause to fear that an even harsher measure than that of M. de Pressensé is likely before long to be passed. The intolerance of Catholicism begets intolerances in those who throw off its yoke, and the freethinkers of France are often just as bigoted as their opponents. It is only too probable, then, that the cause of Evangelical religion may be made to suffer for the excesses of its bitterest enemies, the upholders of its clerical counterfeit, and that measures aimed at the latter may place serious impediments in the way of the evangelization of France. All the more reason is there for strengthening the hands of those who are diligently making use of their present freedom to make known the glad tidings of the Gospel. J. G. A.

Notes from Algiers.

IN October, the beginning of the winter season in Algiers, my hopes as to our Father's business in this city were not exactly brilliant. We had just come through a very trying summer, a temperature frequently between 105 and 118 degrees in the shade. I began the season with a rather tedious illness, but God heard prayer and gave grace to re-commence active service for the winter months.

At that time we were being encouraged in our efforts among the Jews, a work in which Sion Mathieu Guiz, an ex-Rabbi, co-operates with me. The little premises in which we were carrying on this work were proving too small for the numbers of Jews who were attending our beggars' meetings; the attraction to this meeting was a piece of bread (about half a loaf) given to each beggar on leaving. We had, however, the assurance that many among them who came so regularly, and who joined in a hearty "Amen" to prayer to God in the Messiah's name, came also to partake somewhat of the "Bread of Life:"

Ultimately, we found larger premises—this time a small shop on the ground floor. As soon as the walls were covered unsparingly with the Word of God in different languages; and the open Scriptures, also in various languages, arranged in windows—the doors were opened, and on the first days numbers of Jews were continually in and out. These heard and saw God's blessed truth; the meetings soon increased, with every sign of among the Jews. Several became interested in the Gospel, and two openly testified to accepting Jesus Christ.

We were not surprised that the enemy roused up. Has he not always done so? Progress and encouragement met with serious opposition and persecution on the part of the Rabbis and synagogue officials. Their cunning devices seemed to cut the work like a tree, as near the root as they could get; but, thank God, the root remained, and the tree is shooting up again.

Another branch of the work is among Europeans, and this goes on with increasing encouragement. We have Gospel services in two different halls among our countrymen: one of these halls has been lent to us, but has to be given up next month. Through these meetings a few souls have been gathered in. There is a group to be seen each week around the Lord's Table, and also around the Word at the Bible-readings. One of the halls is in the Kasbah, the most notorious part of Algiers. The work there has been a fight with Satan face to face. But for the grace of God it would have been impossible to have gone on in that quarter; but, thank God, there is and we believe souls have been brought to the feet of the Lord Jesus.

Alas, how hard it is to make headway among the natives! Owing to the lack of having better means, our efforts among them have been limited to visiting the cafés, where at any time one may get a group to listen. Such work it is not possible to follow up. Then there is visiting at the homes of the people, where one can get an entrance; my wife finds much to do in this way. Our hearts are ever longing to establish a more definite work among the natives. The best means for this would be a little medical work, such as we had in the interior, and which opens so many doors; but we cannot do this without the assistance of God's children. There is no space to speak of the "mothers' meeting," "children's class," &c.

There is a great need for French Christian workers in this vast field of Algeria. One becomes more and more convinced that the natives are to be reached successfully by French Christians, rather than by workers of foreign nationality. ALLEN MOORE.

A Plea for Bohemia.

ONCE ahead of many nations in the enjoyment of the Gospel, Bohemia and her sister country, Moravia, are now prostrate in Popish darkness. Only a small remnant of faithful confessors of Christ holds out against the foe, hoping against hope for the victory to be won. In Moravia there are 50,000, and Bohemia 100,000 Protestants, of whom 70,000 adhere to the Reformed Church, and are organized in four presbyteries and sixty congregations. One of the smallest and poorest of these congregations is that in Prelouc, a town in the vicinity of Prague. This congregation was organized in 1887, after several years of missionary labour. Forty-two of the 258 communicants were received, on confession of faith, from the Roman Catholic Church. The members are of the working-class, drawn from twenty surrounding villages.

The building that has served as a place of worship, erected for temporary use, is in danger of collapsing. The members of the congregation are anticipating this calamity by making efforts to erect a new church, but their means are insufficient for the task. The building will be an unpretentious though spacious edifice; and it is also proposed to build a new manse to take the place of the damp and dilapidated hut, now under the same verdict of evacuation.

The eagerness with which the people read creates a demand for a church library. Good books are scarce, while it would be almost incredible if the literary products given by the priests to the people were described, and with what rage the priests persecute the Bible. The necessary equipment for Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavour societies is also required. About one-third of the estimated cost of meeting the present needs has been raised by the congregation, who are willing to do more; but it is felt that, without the aid of brotherly hands and hearts, their work will soon be without a home. Communications may be addressed to Pastor Francis Klapus, Prelouc, Bohemia.

London Children in Canada.

THE latest party of children sent to Canada by Miss Macpherson attended a public gathering at the Boys' Home, Stratford, Ontario, recently. A Dominion newspaper, in an account of the proceedings, says:—"Rev. W. J. McKay occupied the chair, and the children made a good impression on the visitors. Mr. James Merry, who came out with the party, explained to the audience the care which was taken by the Boys' Home authorities, as well as by the Government officials, in seeing that the children brought to Canada are healthy, physically, mentally, and morally. The present party had had to go through seven examinations, including the doctor's, before arriving in Stratford. If the same strictness were used in admitting Canadians, for instance, to England there would be many of them stopped! His Honour Judge Barrow spoke briefly in appreciation of the brightness of the children, and referred in a very kindly way to the work being done by the Home. Mr. Wm. Buckingham also spoke briefly, stating that Mr. J. J. Kelso, superintendent of neglected and dependent children in Ontario, considered that the children brought to Canada by Miss Macpherson's Home are the best of those brought here, 98 per cent. of them turning out well."

Bible Teachers' Training School, New York.—The Bible Teachers' Training School, of New York, with Dr. W. W. White as president, has just come to the end of its third year, with very encouraging results and a larger outlook for the future than ever. Extension work was done in Brooklyn, Washington D.C., Philadelphia, Baltimore, Poughkeepsie, &c. Rev. George Soltau, who has been one of the teachers, expects to return in October next. During the summer he will be in England attending Mildmay and Keswick Conferences. He would be glad to confer with any persons interested in this movement, and in its possible development in Great Britain. His address will be 85, Lordship Park, N.

An Experienced Evangelist.

IT is with considerable pleasure that we briefly sketch the career of one whose name is familiar to a great number of our readers, and whose ministry as an evangelist is widely known and esteemed.

The early life of Mr. Barry Wake had, perhaps, few outstanding features prior to his coming to London in 1853. On settling in the metropolis, he took a seat (No. 60) in Great Queen Street Chapel, merely out of respect for the wishes of his parents. This was termed, to suit his companions, when they were anxious to find him, "No. 60 in the pit." The place of derision, however, was destined to become to its occupant a sacred spot, and under the preaching of Rev. John Rattenbury he passed "from death unto life." The possibilities of the young convert soon appeared, and he was sent to various places as an "exhorter." At this time the reading of Wesley's Journal brought much blessing to him, and the fact that the great eighteenth century evangelist made for the market-places, highways, and commons of England, deeply impressed his young mind.

In 1859 Mr. Wake made his first attempt at street preaching in Lincoln's Inn Fields, obtaining a singularly attentive audience. For some years he felt that God was calling him to proclaim the gospel in the open air; but such work loomed before him as a cross to be borne rather than a duty to be performed. "Many a time," he says, "I had wished it would rain, or something else prevent my going. But I was well aware that such a temptation was from Satan."

All this, however, soon changed, and the call to aggressive evangelism was honoured with a whole-hearted response. During the years that have passed since then, he has been brought into contact with many leaders in Christian work, some of whom have long since passed to their reward. His associations with Gawin Kirkham are among the happy experiences of his life. It was in 1866 that the two first met, and on the first day that permission was given for public speaking in Finsbury Park, they unitedly opened a campaign, which is still carried on under Mr. Wake's presidency. It was Mr. Kirkham who introduced him to "the Derby." Since the death of his friend, Mr. Wake has laboured in connection with the Open-Air Mission, and has visited almost every race meeting and fair of any importance in England. Realizing that the crowds at such gatherings call for special dealing and discreet handling, he is fully alive to the position, and adapts his message to his audience with singular fitness. Those who have witnessed his labours under such circumstances know that the secret of much of his usefulness lies in his power to surprise, interest, alarm, and beseech his hearers. His addresses are alive with incident and point, and under all his plain talk there runs a vein of pathos which breaks down opposition.

An instance of this occurred on the evening of a notable St. Leger Day. During Mr. Wake's address, a man in the crowd gave constant annoyance, and challenged the speaker repeatedly to find in the Bible a hell for the ungodly. Taking the man out of the crowd, he pointed to many passages of Scripture pertinent to the subject. The word was owned of God; there, by the street lamp-post, the scoffer was changed into a penitent sinner. Visiting him some time afterwards, Mr. Wake found the man and his wife rejoicing in the consciousness of sins forgiven.

Experiences on the racecourse have always been turned to good account, and one of his most striking productions is the "Pale Horse Card," which he indited in 1899, and thousands of which were distributed at Doncaster Races. At some of the great provincial fairs, such as Lincoln, Peterborough, Nottingham, and Leicester, Mr. Wake has found concourses of country people ever ready to listen to the Gospel. Numbers of those who have been converted on former occasions, have been known to repeat their visit to the fairs for the purpose of attending and joining in the services.

At the commencement of 1900, when thousands of soldiers from all parts of Great Britain were being despatched to South Africa from the Royal Albert and Tilbury Docks, advantage was taken of the occasion by Mr. Wake and other members of the Open-Air Mission to render a somewhat novel but acceptable service to the men. Not only were the troopships visited and marked Testaments handed to the men, but having been asked by so many for a scrap of paper on which to send a line home, our friend realized that something was needed, and drew up a postcard as follows, for the men to fill in: "I arrived safe on board just now. We are going to sail at once. I hope, please God, we shall have a safe passage and a victorious return. God bless you all. Pray for me. Farewell." Space was left for filling in the name and date. The cards were struck off and stamped, and distributed by Mr. Wake and his helpers among the soldiers. Their gratitude was unbounded, and it was touching to witness the eagerness with which they availed themselves of sending a farewell word to the dear ones from whom they were being parted. In some instances it proved to be a final message, for many of the writers were among those who fell on the field of battle in the early engagements.

Mr. Wake's physical fitness for the work of open-air preaching is well known. A commanding presence and exceptionally powerful voice are greatly in his favour, giving force to his earnest, pungent, and persuasive discourses to the unconverted. The burden of his seventy years rests lightly on his shoulders, and he is hopeful that the ensuing summer will find him still prosecuting his much-loved labours. Mr. Wake is president of the Harlesden Y.M.C.A., and has written the life of Ned Weeks, the Northampton evangelist. To him it is a matter of deep thankfulness that his ministry is not only approved by brethren beloved, but that it has been effectual in that which is the end of all true preaching of the Gospel—the salvation of souls.

The Halt and the Maimed.—Mr. R. J. Lloyd, writing in the June number of the Westminster Review on "The Education of Physically and Mentally Defective Children," points out how it became evident that the mission of education was not being fulfilled by the State in regard to children "too lame, or too feeble, or too mentally deficient to attend with safety, or to profit by the instruction of an ordinary school." Various countries of Europe had, since 1865, been dealing with the question of such suffering little ones; but, in quite an independent manner, the London School Board took up the matter, and those pages in the Board's records which contain the story of the movement are, indeed, cheering to read. To-day these defective children are carefully looked after, physically and mentally, and their lives have been brightened and cheered by that practical charity and kindness, which has proved none the less effectual under carefully thought out municipal regulations.

Evangelical Unity in Danger.

IT is interesting to note the feelings with which our kin beyond the sea are watching the struggle which is gathering round the education question. The fact that it is regarded by many—some of whom at least cannot be classed rash, uninformed, or fire-brands—as one for religious freedom has naturally awakened a responsive chord in New England.

At the Baptist anniversary meetings held at Buffalo last month, representing more than four million church members, a resolution was passed in which they solemnly re-affirmed their unfaltering faith in the doctrine that God ordained all men to be free in the exercise of religion; and that parents, as natural guardians of their children, should not be required by human law to send them to sectarian schools where instruction is given contrary to their religious faith; and that they should not be taxed for the support of such schools; and express to British Baptist and other Nonconformist brethren sincere sympathy for them in their battle for their God-given right; and pray God to give them success.

That the tide of "passive resistance" to the operation of the provincial Education Act already coming into force, and of opposition to the passing of the Bill for London now before Parliament, is gathering in force becomes more evident every day. Never during the past generation has there been graver danger of separation between Evangelicals within and without the Church of England, and such an outcome would be disastrous in the highest degree. Without the surrender of vital principle on either side, it has become imperatively necessary for those who have recognised the true unity in the bonds of the Gospel to be instant in prayer and effort that bitterness may be kept out of the controversy, and the way opened up for a settlement which shall reaffirm the "crown rights of the Redeemer" and the essential harmony among His people. No price short of principle can be too great to pay for the prevention or closing up of such a breach as that with which we are threatened.

The Token.

A race of slaves, in bondage sore,
The seed of Israel lay.
Oppressed by man, to God their cry
Ascended, night and day.

Would He to save them interpose,
Their cruel wrongs redress?
Despite their sins and failures, would
His arm be stretched to bless?

He sees! He hears! Remembers, too
His covenant of old,
With Abram, Isaac; now their sons
His wonders shall behold.

Yet they have many a truth to learn—
With sorrow must deplore:
Not only slavery, but sin,
And seek their God once more.

The Pascal Lamb must smitten be,
The life blood be forth poured,
Sprinkled on post and lintel, ere
Their freedom is restored.

"This be the token; when I see
Sheltered beneath this sign
The trembling soul, however weak,
I seal it henceforth mine.

"Twixt Me and thee, this token true
The pledge for aye shall be,
That whosoever trusts therein
For ever safe shall be."

Cheshunt College.—An "open letter" has been addressed by Rev. J. B. Figgis (Brighton) to Rev. F. B. Meyer asking serious attention to the proposal to close Cheshunt College. We feel with the writer that such a step would involve serious loss to the Church of Christ. The College not only represents some important movements in the religious life of England, but has sent forth some of our most trusted Evangelical leaders. It occupies a place of its own, inasmuch as, though identified with Nonconformity, the use has been retained of that liturgy which has endeared itself to so many of the people of God in our land. To amalgamate Cheshunt with one or other of the existing colleges, would be to rob it of its essentially distinctive characteristics.

Fifty-Seven Years a Pastor.

DR. MACLAREN RETIRES.

THE step which Dr. Maclaren is taking in retiring from the pastorate of Union Chapel, Manchester, is not altogether unexpected. Recent indisposition has led up to that point; and, though the intelligence will be received by multitudes with keen sorrow, many will hope that in the providence of God such a course will render possible some years of further activity in influencing by his pen the life of our times. His request to be allowed to remain honorary pastor, with the privilege of occupying the pulpit occasionally, indicates the deep affection which exists between the venerable preacher and the church he has served for forty-five years.

The son of a Glasgow merchant, Alexander Maclaren was educated at the High School and University of that city, afterwards preparing for the Baptist ministry at Stepney College, since transferred to Regent's Park. Under the tuition of Dr. Davies, the young student learned the habit of ascertaining at first hand the grammatical meaning of the text. The charms of Hebrew appealed to him strongly, and he soon became proficient in the language which he has studied ever since, the result being his remarkable power as an expositor, which is known the world over.

Being of a retiring disposition, and somewhat of a recluse, the social side of college life did not attract the Scotch student, though some of his contemporaries have dim remembrances of late hours, after the strain of study, spent in listening to his lively talk. Before his term was completed, he had graduated at London University, and those who remember him describe him as a hard worker and particularly painstaking over his studies. Loving knowledge for its own sake, he drank deeply at its springs.

Among those who had a strong belief in the brilliant future before the young student on leaving college, was Thomas Binney. When Dr. Maclaren preached the now famous sermon on "The Secret of Power," in connection with the London Missionary Society, at the old Surrey Chapel, Binney was so deeply moved by the eloquent appeal that when, at the close, a friend asked him what he thought of the discourse, he was too much overcome to make a reply. The next day he told his friend that he went home and wept, humbling himself before God, for not only had he not reached the ideal which had been held up, but feared he had scarcely tried to attain to it.

Remarkable continuity has characterized Dr. Maclaren's ministerial career. In fifty-seven years he has been pastor of only two churches. He occupied the pulpit of Portland Chapel, Southampton from 1846 to 1858, and since then has preached at Union Chapel, Manchester. The preparation at Southampton fitted him for world-wide service as a preacher. "I thank God," he once said at a public breakfast, "that I was stuck down in a quiet little obscure place to begin my ministry, for what spoils half you young fellows is that you get pitchforked into prominent positions at once, and then fritter yourselves away in all manner of little engagements that you call duties, going to this tea meeting, that anniversary, and other breakfast celebration, instead of stopping at home and reading your Bibles and getting near to God. I thank God for the early days of struggle and obscurity." Dr. Maclaren is a striking illustraton of this gift of concentration, and all through his ministry he has given himself to one object—the preaching of the Gospel. From his first appearance in the pulpit at Southampton the people felt that a prophet was in their midst. And such indeed proved to be the case. His sermons have always been marked by full and clear scholarship, remarkable felicity of expression, and, above all, an intense loyalty to Evangelical teaching.

The gift of spiritual perception he has enjoyed in abundant measure, and with this has been combined the power to see truth in all its meaning and its bearing upon human life. Not only so, but he commands the ability to shape the truth until others with duller vision see it in the light in which he would have them behold it. Of the qualities which characterized his preaching, his instinct for souls dominated every other. The purpose of all his pulpit utterances has been to lead men in intelligent captivity to Jesus Christ. The power of realizing the condition of others does not come to all speakers, but with the doctor it has been cultivated until it has become more than a habit. Mingling much with his people, he has entered into their trials, temptations, and sorrows, and the feeling of sympathy has always led to a desire to help.

REV. DR. MACLAREN.

From Photograph by Mr. Coxen, Ramsay, I. of M.

Much might be written of Dr. Maclaren's labours at Manchester. His thoughtful, cultured preaching attracted men of varying shades of opinion from all parts of the city. Mrs. Maclaren became a force in temperance and mission work, and a great help to her husband in his labours. The church life was quickened and developed; and when the chapel proved inadequate for the growing congregations, a new building was erected at a total cost of £22,000. The church has been loyal to its pastor, and through all the forty-five years there has not been a breach of that confidence and affection without which a ministry is weak, and worship difficult. Throughout Manchester, in missions and Sunday-schools, Union Chapel is represented, for the pastor's teaching and influence have always inspired personal effort. Besides the societies at the home church, with their many-sided activity, there has grown up a steady interest in aggressive work—an unfailing test of the life of a congregation. The Wednesday evening gathering became much the same as Dr. Parker's mid-day service at the City Temple. Ministers sat at the preacher's feet, and workers came long distances to find new thought in the exposition of familiar words.

In 1875, Dr. Maclaren was elected president of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, an honour that was repeated in 1901, when the memorable joint sessions of the Congregational and Baptist Unions were held in London. His utterances on the former occasion are stated to have done much to mould the style of the young ministers to whom he addressed himself, and the following excerpts show that he was no less loyal to the Evangel then than in his subsequent career:—

> If we had to offer to the world a Gospel of rites, the form of our ministry would be sacerdotal. If we had to offer a Gospel of thoughts, it would be professorial and didactic. But we have a Gospel of fact, and therefore we preach. Not, we perform, not we argue—we preach. The metaphor in the words is full of instruction. We are heralds, criers, tellers of a message. We have not evolved it from our own brains; we have received it from the King.
> I venture to express the conviction that all the churches need to be roused anew to the prime importance of the first part of their work—the preaching of the Gospel to those who are without. No reform is more needed than the restoration to its true place of the evangelistic character of the Christian ministry and the Christian Church. There should be a tone of pleading, urgency of invitation. It is not enough that we deliver our message plainly and faithfully. If we have any conception of our work, or any communion with our Master, we shall feel that we poorly represent it, and wholly fail in resemblance to Him unless we plead with men. The voice tremulous with earnestness, persistent in entreaty, is, at its softest and most winning cadence, but a poor echo of His. But it will carry further than the thunders of a whole park of logical artillery, and move hearts as nothing else will. Let us not be afraid of letting ourselves down. Let us not be ashamed of emotional preaching. We have much more need to dread and be ashamed of an unloving handling of the message of love, a transposition of it into another key which mars its music.
> There is no need to be perpetually talking about modern thought, but there is need to be fully conscious of "this great storm that is thundering over Christendom." There is a doctrinal preaching which richly deserves all the hard things that have been said against it, where Christianity is presented rather as a system of metaphysics, theological abstractions, than as the proclamation of a Redeeming Person and a Redeeming Fact. There is no danger in doctrine, but there is much danger in doctrines cut loose from Christ or hiding Him in their misty folds. . . . It is possible to hide the Cross behind the cobwebs of doctrine, be it ever so orthodox. Let us take heed that we do not conceal Him by the interposition of what is meant to reveal Him, and that we set Him forth as what He is—the origin and the meaning and the end of all our theology.

The persistent youthfulness of the great preacher has often been the theme of comment among friends and admirers; but latterly his congregation have noticed unmistakable signs of waning strength. The cessation of this remarkable ministry involves a loss not to the Baptist denomination only, but to the Christian church at large.

As an author Dr. Maclaren is known far and wide. In English sermonic literature, his volumes have always taken a prominent place, while others of his works rank high among devotional expositions. The fact that so many of his books have gone through several editions, and are still readily sold, is evidence of the eminent service he has rendered in this direction.

Home Missions.

Livingstone College.

COMMEMORATION Day at Livingstone College, Wednesday of last week, was the occasion of a large gathering of friends interested in this important work.

In the course of a brief statement concerning the progress of the College, Dr. Harford (principal) said that since its foundation in 1893, some 171 students had passed through the ordinary curriculum, in addition to many others who had attended lectures for shorter periods. He quoted extracts from the recently-published Year Book to show the value of the training given at the College. Among others the experience of Mr. Savidge, a pioneer missionary in Assam, was given:—

I believe every missionary who has once been in the field, is of the opinion that it is an immense advantage to have some medical knowledge. To a man stationed in an out-of-the-way corner of the world, the advantages are too obvious to need any discussion. If a manufacturer were to refuse to adopt any new machinery which would greatly increase the output of his productions, he would be considered an imbecile by his fellows. But he would never do such a thing. In that respect the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light. . . . I have never regretted my furlough spent at Livingstone College. In fact, I do not see how the Gospel could be introduced to the people among whom we are situated, without some knowledge of medicine. When we go to a village, the first request is, "Give us something to cool our burning bodies." "Give us something to heal our smarting eyes," and they will not listen to anything else, until their bodily ailments have been attended to.

During the past year special steps have been taken to render the course as complete as possible, and the addition of a new member to the permanent staff in the person of Dr. Price, now makes it possible to undertake work which could not be attempted before. Another point of special importance was the fact that Dr. Sambon, lecturer at the London School of Tropical Medicine, has become a lecturer on tropical diseases at the College, thus preparing the students to meet the special risks of a tropical climate.

The Bishop of St. Albans, who presided, expressed the hope that the name of Livingstone would be a perpetual inspiration. He felt certain that those who came to the College as students before going out to mission work in various parts of the world remember and retain the permanent influence of that inspiring name. There were many advantages attached to the work of the College, one special one being the help and assistance it gave the missionaries in the preservation of their own health and strength in the work to which they were called. There is little doubt, continued Dr. Jacob, that the life of the average man abroad is considerably extended when due care is taken to observe the rules of health. Recalling his experience in India, he referred to the unique opportunities the missionary with some knowledge of medicine and surgery enjoys in winning the hearts of the natives.

Further testimony to the valuable service rendered by the College was given by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, who has just returned from a six-months' tour among mission stations in India. The information imparted by Dr. Harford had been of immense value to him in his journeyings. Referring to the benefit of medical mission work, Mr. Mantle said that in India it had proved the "open sesame" to the preaching of the Gospel. Rev. S. R. Morse (C.M.S.) spoke in grateful terms of his period of training in the College, and the distinct advantage it had been to him in his labours at Behar.

At the close of the meeting the guests were free to inspect the various departments of the College. Among the interesting exhibits on view was Dr. Livingstone's medicine chest, the only relic of the great missionary in the possession of the College.

Ministers in Conference.

CONGREGATIONAL ministers to the number of nearly seven hundred attended the convention at Hampstead last week, arranged by the Lyndhurst Road Church to signalize the pastor's year of office as chairman of the Union. Realizing that the usual sessions of the Congregational Union become so crowded with business, and that definitely religious subjects find too small a place, Dr. Horton desired that the convention should be of a purely spiritual character. The reception in the Town Hall on Monday evening was a season of helpful fellowship, and the many introductions and re-unions of the pastor from the busy city with the minister of the quiet village were among its happiest features.

The convention opened on Tuesday with the first of a series of early morning prayer-meetings, when the burden of the numerous petitions was that God would manifest His Spirit in all the gatherings that were to follow, imparting wisdom and light to His servants. The subject appointed for the morning session of the convention was "The Practice of the Presence of God." The President touched the heart of the assembly by saying that he should leave the central chair vacant, as a sign of their common desire that One unseen should preside over all their meetings.

The first to speak on the subject was Rev. Arnold Thomas, of Bristol. He referred to the difficulty, not so much to believe in God, but to feel His presence. Men had very different apprehensions of that presence. The Psalmist felt himself beset by God on every hand; he could not get away from Him; but Job, eager for the face of God, searched everywhere and could not find Him. There was a longing in men's hearts to know more than the name—to know the presence and person of the Father.

Rev. F. B. Meyer emphasized the distinction between belief in a fact and the emotion of a fact. Many people, he said, try and appreciate a fact through their emotions. It is necessary to appreciate the presence of God, before feeling His presence. Religious life is like a spiral. We are always coming back to the same point, but at a higher level, where we reach a higher range of laws. Among others who took part was Rabbi Green (Hampstead Synagogue) and Rev. W. Brock (Baptist).

In the evening the church was crowded for the public conference, "Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ" being the subject set down. Dr. Forsyth spoke first on faith as the victory that overcometh the world. Faith as a moral power flows only from the Cross. The hunger such gatherings as that convention indicated was a hopeful sign. Yet there would be less need of conventions if ministers used the Bible more. If they waited for God in the study of the Bible they would be less poverty-stricken in the spirit. An impressive communion service followed, over a thousand remaining for the solemn function.

Wednesday morning's proceedings were opened by Rev. F. B. Meyer, who spoke on "The Work of the Holy Spirit." It was not possible, he maintained, to consider the Holy Spirit apart from Christ. The conditions for receiving the Spirit, as illustrated by Christ's own life, were self-devotion to the work of redeeming humanity, and the doing of righteousness. In the heart of every man there is a witness to the Holy Spirit, and the witness of the Church is corroborative rather than creative. It is the preacher's task to keep continually in line with the perpetual witness of the Spirit in the consciousness of humanity. Revs. Dr. Goodrich and C. Silvester Horne also spoke; and at the public conference in the evening the subject was again considered under the special aspect of "Receiving the Spirit."

Thursday was another full day. The conference at the morning session turned its attention to the discussion of means for reaching the outside world. For the public gathering in the evening the church was again well filled. A powerful address was given by Rev. J. H. Jowett, setting forth what is meant by "conversion." He disassociated the conception of conversion from experiences which sometimes accompany it, but are by no means essential. Conversion, urged the speaker, is not always attended by (1) a tumultous movement of the emotions, (2) a profound sense of sin, or (3) an ecstatic love of Jesus Christ. These are experiences which come sooner or later in the life of the convert, but do not always accompany the desire for a change of heart. Conversion is a certain inclination of the thought and a fixing of the whole being on Christ—the lifting up of the eyes and the laying down of the will.

Others who spoke on the same theme included Revs. E. H. Titchmarsh, Cornwall Jones, &c. Two sessions on Friday—one for dedication and the other for thanksgiving—brought to a close a memorable convention.

Miss Steer's Cottage Homes.

DESPITE weather conditions which rendered the surroundings somewhat depressing, the anniversary festival of Miss Steer's Cottage Homes at Chingford was one of much encouragement. Apart from the capital programme of recitations and part songs, the bright, intelligent appearance of the young people was itself a telling testimony to the sheltering care and skilful training that are given at these admirable institutions. It will be remembered that the work sprang out of Miss Steer's well-known rescue operations in East London. While the arduous task of reclaiming the wanderers of the street was pursued with much blessing, Miss Steer realised that preventive work was an absolute necessity. Accordingly she commenced to rescue young girls from positions of moral danger, and the outcome of years of toil is seen to-day in the large block of cottages, close to the borders of Epping Forest, in which a happy colony of little lasses are safely sheltered and taught to walk in the paths of righteousness.

Undismayed by the tempest of rain which swept upon the iron building, behind the cottages, in which the festival was held, the children gave huge delight to their friends by their singing, a troop of "tinies" in long blue gowns and white mop caps and aprons being particularly effective in their "nursery rhymes" and other charming action songs.

Mr. E. C. Straker, who presided, made an earnest appeal on behalf of the institutions. An enormous number of women and children have been helped during the twenty-five years the work has been in progress, and most cheering of all are the efforts that are made in the interests of the little ones who are rescued from the slums. There are eight cottages in use. Six have already been purchased, and in connection with the present anniversary it is hoped to raise a sum of £900 in order to purchase the remaining two. Mr. Straker subsequently distributed the prizes, and addressed to the children some wise counsels, to follow the Saviour and study the Word of God. Another agreeable feature was the handing of silver watches and money gifts to young women, former inmates, who had retained their first situations in domestic service for three, or two, years respectively.

Miss Steer followed with a brief outline of the operations. She spoke in high terms of the eight cottage "mothers"—whose labours "behind the scenes" are beyond praise; they feel amply rewarded in seeing their young charges grow up to reflect credit upon the place of their training. The teaching is efficient, and in every way there is ground for regarding the future with anticipations of enlarged usefulness.

"The Family Altar" was the subject for meditation at the thirty-fourth monthly meeting of Christian workers of all sections for united prayer and fellowship, held at the Cardiff Police Institute. It was introduced by the Hon. Rev. D. T. Phillips (American Consul). Rev. Charles Davies read selections from Rev. Dr. Harris's "The Altar of the Household," and Mr. James, of the Police Institute, read "Taking Time to Serve God," by Rev. F. W. Robertson. There was a large and representative attendance, including many ministers of the town. A deep spirit of prayer prevailed throughout, and a heavenly unction rested on the meeting. J. M.

The Bible League.

ON Friday the eleventh annual meetings of the Bible League took place at Exeter Hall. In the afternoon, when Lord Kinnaird presided, addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Wace and Sir Robert Anderson. A review of the year's endeavours was presented by the organizing secretary, Mr. A. H. Carter. The report opened with the acknowledgment that no error has ever advanced with more rapid pace than that which, wearing the guise of Christian scholarship, is now rapidly undermining popular faith in the Bible.

Side by side with this advance, however, it is gratifying to note that there are signs of awakening to responsibility on the part of the Christian Church. But the need for such a line of activity as that followed by the Bible League is beyond question, and it is a matter for profound thankfulness that it is able to look back on a year of progress. More meetings have been held, larger numbers have attended, and deeper interest has been aroused, while the tokens of appreciation and testimonies to the value of the work accomplished increase in number.

In the course of the year, 178 new members have joined the League. Several additions have also been made to the number of prayer circles, which are proving a source of real spiritual benefit to the work.

Special mention was made of the remarkably fruitful gatherings at Cambridge. Considerable difficulty was experienced in making the arrangements, but happily the Council were enabled to send a personal invitation to every member of the University, and the hearty response of the undergraduates and townspeople was most cheering. Reference was also made in the report to the kindness of two friends through whose generosity 10,000 copies of Dr. Pierson's tract, "A few words on Inspiration, Prophecy, and the Attitude of so-called Higher Criticism," have been printed free of cost and widely distributed.

Mr. W. H. Seagram occupied the chair at the evening gathering, and reminded his hearers of the testimony of our Lord to the truth of the Scriptures. The critics call into question the writings of Moses, but Christ puts his imprimatur upon these writings. The critics try to shake our faith in the words of prophets, but our Lord confirms their message, and indicates what the prophets foresaw and wrote concerning Himself. Referring to the purpose of the Bible League, the Chairman remarked that it seeks to strengthen the hands of those who are defending the Word of God against the onslaughts of its enemies. Many become agnostics through disbelieving the Scriptures, and fall away from the right track.

In the course of a brief statement, Mr. A. H. Carter referred to recent conferences in Scotland, where a deep sympathy with the League has been evinced, and where there is every prospect of its work being widely extended. Among the arrangements for the ensuing year are conferences at Plymouth, Southport, and Brighton, where Christians are already giving themselves to prayer for blessing on them.

A telling address by Pastor Fuller Gooch followed. Having indicated some parallels and contrasts in the reports for the first year of the Society's history, and the record of 1902, he expressed the fear that it is not always apprehended that the work of the organization is more than speculative; it is a struggle for souls. The highest interests of men are at stake, for if the Bible be not the Word of God, there is no certain Gospel to preach, and if there be no certain Gospel, there is no message to offer to a perishing world. The speaker called attention to the three axioms followed by the Bible League. (1) The unbroken entirety of the Holy Scriptures as the Divinely-inspired Word of God; (2) the unbroken unity of believers in the Word of God in upholding the infallibility of the Bible; and (3) the unbroken testimony of the ages to the necessity for the Word of God being maintained as the only weapon essential to spiritual warfare. Dr. C. H. Waller showed how a reverential study of Holy Scripture leads to resisting the attacks made upon it as the inspired and infallible Word of God.

Gloucester Convention.

ANOTHER Convention here has passed into history, and many have been the prayers that the seed sown may abound into a glorious harvest. Those who were privileged to meet in the Raikes Memorial Hall at these gatherings, and listen to the addresses of God's servants, have returned to their spheres of labour and life renewed in strength, quickened in faith, and encouraged in heart. The clear Bible expositions by Dr. Elder Cumming, the winning simple appeals of Mr. Barclay Buxton, the bright, instructive, pithy, and yet hard-hitting talks of Revs. C. G. Moore, H. Montgomery, and S. A. Selwyn, and the plain, outspoken truths by Rev. J. Brash—the whole backed up by the ever-loving word and work of Rev. J. J. Luce, have all contributed to make this convention a very practical one. The need of absolute abandonment to God and faith in Christ to cleanse from sin, to be following by the incoming and indwelling of the Holy Ghost were the salient features of nearly all the addresses.

Our attention was first drawn, by Dr. Elder Cumming, to the short striking sentences at the opening of St. Mark's Gospel. The shortest of phrases filled with the greatest of meanings. In a few words, and in the most effective manner, John the Baptist's life and work are declared:—1. His nothingness—"Not worthy"—"A voice." 2. His work and message—"Prepare"—"Repent." 3. The glory of Christ, from Whom he is so far removed that he was unworthy to do the act of a slave for Him—and 4. The wonderful summation of Christ's work and purpose in one sentence! Thirty-three years' earthly life and centuries of heavenly purpose all packed into one line of eight words. Could a convention or a ministry be complete that left out that magnificent declaration, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost"?

"The pure in heart"—so it was possible! Rev. J. Brash said Dr. Cumming had taught how to get it; he would like to show its character, so that we may be assured of having such a heart. (1) If pure, it will be humble—"Doth not behave itself unseemly." (2) It will be unselfish—"Seeketh not her own." (3) It will be submissive—not having "no will"—that was only poetical sentiment, for the Master had a will apart from His Father, "not My will but Thine be done." Not without self love, for the commandment was, "Love your neighbour as yourself," but its whole life and purpose derived, dependent and divine.

Nathaniel (John i. 45-51) serves, said Rev. H. Montgomery, as a type of a practical Christian life, and one sorely needed in these days. (1) "Delivered from Guile." In spite of his ancestry, an Israelite without the very thing that characterized the first Israel, a proof that God can take away nature's most prominent characteristic! (2) "One who Communed with God." The Miltonic idea of the Fall represented Satan in the form of a toad seated in the ear of Eve. For Satan to have the ear of Eve meant her seduction, and for the child of God to have the ear of God means life and uplifting. (3) As the Man of Faith. Because he believed the alphabet of Jesus he was promised "greater things." When the faith of Christ enters a man he is as transformed unto God's image as when a tiny gas jet upon a piece of simple lightless lime changes the two so completely that the lime is lost sight of, and the light gets another name!

Another striking message was that on "Sin," as "trying to be God," by Mr. R. C. Morgan. Satan's fall came in that he tried to be as the Most High. Adam's temptation was to fall upwards and be "as gods"—and the antichrist is yet to sit "as God." So all sin tries to usurp God's place. Self-life is sin, in that it seeks to originate its own life plan. Our Lord says that he who would be His disciple must deny self, and follow—not precede—Him.

The Missionary Day was the climax. The whole of Friday was devoted to putting our new knowledge to a practical test. If our life had received new impetus it must be in the direction of soul-winning and life sacrifice.

The darker side of missionary life in North Africa was described by Mrs. R. C. Morgan—the monotony, the unbelief, the trials of faith, the opposition of Governments, the loneliness and solitariness—the deadening effects of a prayerless, Godless community. Later, Mr. Bridgford told of the brighter side—of the sympathy shown by the Sultan of Morocco at Mr. Cooper's sad death, and of the hundreds that were almost persuaded, and who need much the real sympathy and intercession of God's people to bring things to a decision.

Of China many encouraging things were told by Mrs. Beauchamp; while at the same time the warning note against Spiritualism was sounded, lest China's curse should invade our land under a more refined name.

Mr. Barclay Buxton told of Japan's awakening, of groups and centres of Christian life and work in that far off Eastern Emerald Isle.

The Congo and North India and South America had their share in the telling by Rev. W. G. Pope of the work of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, and of the missionary training colleges over which Dr. Harry Guinness acts as director.

The Jews came in for their full share. That beloved lover of Israel, Rev. John Wilkinson, tried to pour out some of his love into the hearts of others, and many were the interesting stories told of the love of the poor shown to God's ancient people.

The final meeting closed with an appeal by Mr. Walter B. Sloan for missionaries, and five responded. A few years since a local paper wrote of the Gloucester Convention as a failure; yet at that very convention two persons volunteered for the field, and to-day are there! We pray for such effective results for this year's gathering. Field Lane Refuges.

THE Lower Exeter Hall presented a bright, inspiriting spectacle on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Field Lane Refuges. Some hundreds of boys and girls were present from the well-known schools, and by their capital singing contributed largely to the success of the evening's arrangements.

Mr. Peregrine Platt, secretary, was again able to report that the year's labours have been crowned with the Divine blessing. Large numbers of people, old and young, have heard the glad news of the Gospel of peace. The Refuges have befriended 731 men and women, 280 of whom were helped to employment, making a grand total of 52,691 sheltered, and 13,788 aided to obtain work since the establishment of the institution. By means of the Crèche, children have been sheltered from unhealthy homes and well cared for by capable nurses, so that their mothers have been enabled to go to work. Nearly 6,000 little ones have been entered on the books during the year.

EIGHTY PER CENT. DOING WELL.

In the boys' school much encouraging work has been done. There are 130 lads under training. The institution was never in a better condition. H.M.'s Inspector says of it in his last report: "The school has excelled itself this year in more than one department." The lads who have left the school are constantly communicated with, either by letter or personally, by the superintendent or some other officer, and at least eighty per cent. of them are doing well. It is encouraging to note that one "old boy" is actively engaged in Christian work in the West of England; another is hon. sec. of a ragged-school in London; another is an accredited speaker for a Protestant society; while others are in business for themselves, and doing well.

THE MISSION WORK

among poor children and men and women has given great encouragement. The attendances at all the evangelistic services have largely increased during the year, no fewer than 19,185 men and women have been present at the Ragged Church Service on Sunday mornings, and the attendances at the Sunday and week evening services have totalled to 29,646. At the mothers' meetings 18,721 attendances have been registered, while the roll books show the children have made nearly 50,000 at the various classes. Other departments of work include a temperance society, and well organized efforts for the relief of the deserving poor.

The chairman, Lord Aberdeen, congratulated both the boys of the Industrial School at West Hampstead, and the prize-winners of Vine Street, on their creditable performances. He spoke in high terms of the organization and effectiveness of the various institutions.

A characteristic address followed from Rev. W. R. Mowll, who spoke as "an old Ragged-School teacher." Through a godly father's influence, Mr. Mowll used to go up night after night in a school where the boys had no shoe to their feet, in a building innocent of ventilation. In after years not a few have warmly thanked their old teacher. "One came up and greeted me in the Brixton Road only the other day; he was a well set-up costermonger, getting on well, and remembering the old days with gratitude." Proceeding, Mr. Mowll pointed out that friends of the institutions had not only the excellent report of the secretary, but a living testimony in the children themselves. Times change, but human nature does not; we may educate, and we ought to educate, but secular instruction will never do away with vice. Hence, such institutions as those of Field Lane will still be necessary. The day has gone when the young could not read or write; but such has been the neglect to teach a clear knowledge of the Bible that it is to be feared we shall soon need "an educated police to deal with educated criminals." The Bible puts first things first; and the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ must be the "A B C," not the "X Y Z" of all good work. That is, the wonderful story of the love of God through Christ must have the first place in true education. The speaker praised the institutions, too, for taking a stand in favour of total abstinence, and for inculcating habits of thrift.

A NATION'S CHIEF ASSET.

Rev. Chas. Brown, of Ferme Park, referred to the over-crowded condition of our great centres of population, of which, grinding poverty and a measure, at any rate, of immorality are logical outcomes. There is a lamentable cleavage between the well-to-do and the ill-to-do; and to take a walk through the mean streets is to be appalled at the conditions under which many of our fellow-creatures live. The Institutions meet the need by working "at both ends" of life; that is, the old are helped, and the wreckage of life reclaimed, and at the same time the young are rescued from lives which threaten to end in drunkenness and all kinds of vicious indulgence. Describing a recent visit to the Schools, Mr. Brown spoke in glowing terms of the wise, kind, and loving management. "I saw boys baking; boys drilling; boys knitting and mending stockings; and I saw boys at prayer. I had the pleasure of addressing a few words to the boys, and never had a more responsive congregation." As to the workers, they need no commiseration, for, "find people who are living for others, and you find people who are happy." Character is the most valuable asset of the nation; and here is a society which is working for the formation of all that is noble in human character, for the salvation of the lost, and the binding up of broken hearts.

Village Evangelization.—For many years the Protestant evangelistic work in connection with the Hants and Southern Counties' Village Mission has been signally fruitful. It embraces 500 villages and hamlets, and a large number of out-of-the-way places, and has been the channel through which untold blessing has flowed to thousands of isolated homes. Mr. J. H. Charlton (The Depôt, Hartlands Road, Fareham, Hants), superintendent of the Mission, writes: "In order that we may consolidate the good work already done by keeping in close touch with persons and places visited, and listen to earnest appeals for our return visits as soon as possible, it is imperative that we should provide another van at once to go right out into the work during the coming summer. Our vans are not expensive, but plain, roomy, and well adapted for the work, costing £60 only."

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

THE annual meetings of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews were held last week at the Mission's Central Hall, Philpot Street, E. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who presided at the afternoon meeting, said that there were gathered together in that new Jewry of East London 100,000 Jews.

Rev. Frank H. White based his address on Acts xxii. 14, 15, and said what a blessed thing to be so addressed, "Thou shalt be His witness unto all men." Those present were not apostles, but they could be witnesses for Christ; and no one was any good as a witness unless he could speak of what he knew. Mr. White then took his theme from Col. iii. 10, "Christ is all, and in all." The secret of the union of all nations—Greek, Jew, Barbarian, Scythian—was in that One Christ.

Pastor Fuller Gooch gave a most interesting address, urging all to pray for the Jews as a nation; they had a God-made nationality—at the present they were as two sticks, but they would undoubtedly be joined together and again be one stick. Then would come the peace, which the Jews never know at present—which the world at large will never know—until the Prince of Peace be sitting on the Throne of David. Israel is God's own creation, God's formation, God's first-born, and God gave that nation the name—the Israel of God.

The head of the medical staff, Dr. John Dixon, gave an interesting account of the work since its commencement in 1880. The reception by the Jews in the early days was most discouraging. Much personal violence was shown; but that was now changed, and those who had been most violent were their most devoted helpers. God had wrought great wonders, and by the aid of the Medical Mission had broken down the prejudices of His people, and many had accepted Jesus as their Saviour. Last year 23,000 cases had been medically attended, and to each patient the wonderful Gospel of Jesus was told.

Colonel Morton (of Mildmay), presiding at the evening meeting, took as his text Psa. cxiv., which, as he said, was a beautiful little history of Israel.

Rev. John Wilkinson told the story of the mission which seeks to preach Christ fully and faithfully "to the Jew first and also to the Gentile," relying on the Holy Spirit to use it. The Lord has hitherto sent in the means to carry on His work, in gracious answer to prayer.

The aged head of the Mission, in his address, dwelt upon the work done in the Jewesses' Sewing Class during the last nine months. Thirty-one classes had been held, the attendances being 7,257; the lowest attendance was eighty-four, the highest 314. Two thousand one hundred garments of all kinds had been cut out and prepared for the class (no light job), 3,207¾ yards of materials used, of which 487½ had been given. The garments were bought by the women attending the classes, 1,291 ranging from 1d. to 6d. each, the remainder up to 1s. 6d. each. The women are paid for their work, but they buy the garments if they require them. Some of the very poor get the garments given to them. A meeting or class is never held at which the wonderful love of Jesus Christ is not proclaimed; and there is never a meeting held for amusement. The night school is held four days a week. Speaking of the free distribution of the Scriptures he said that it was borne in on him to ask God in 1885 for £5,000 in order to distribute 100,000 copies, so that the Jews might have a photograph of the Lord Jesus. For centuries they had been taught to revile Him; he thought that if all the beauty of his most lovely character were brought before them they could not but believe in Him. He got that £5,000, and when that money was expended he received other sums of £5,000. Of the first 100,000, 50,000 were distributed in Russia, and Russia was now open to the Mission. They had these "portraits of Jesus" translated into every tongue and jargon spoken by the Jews the world over, and 1,300,000 had been distributed.

Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness, Dr. Rocha, and Dr. Pedley also spoke.

National Vigilance Association.

THE annual meeting of the National Vigilance Association, held last Friday at 24, Grosvenor Place, S.W., was an influential and representative gathering. The Earl of Aberdeen, who presided, said that the Association was a work of patriotism. They wanted to educate public opinion to a more healthy and pure moral tone, and in so doing they felt that they were contributing in a large measure to a most truly patriotic movement. It is a religious work, not in the sense of representing any distinctive creed, for it embraces believers of all creeds. It was religious also in that the members of religious communities who joined in this work were generally among the most earnest, active, and courageous workers in the various bodies to which they belonged—they, in fact, carried their religion into this work and made it a religious movement. The year's report was a record of serious and effectual effort.

When moving a resolution referring to the suppression of the White Slave Traffic, Mrs. Creighton said that, though she was an outsider, like most of those present, she used the Association, and whenever she had need to do so, she found that it responded to the call. The report for the past year afforded another instance of the very watchful eye of this Association and the energy with which it seized upon any opening in order to carry on the great work it had taken up, as instanced in the new development which had taken place with regard to the suppression of the White Slave Traffic in Europe to which this Association had first called attention. The secretary of the Association had done what diplomatists had failed to do—namely, he had united nations. Among other things he had got together committees of the various nations of Europe, including the Argentine Republic, for this international work.

They might dare to hope that if the various nationalities combined in this way to root out this White Slave Traffic evil, the combination might in the future develop into more far-reaching results. When philanthropic workers met together in a common cause, they might differ in some of their opinions, and working together might not help them to change their opinions, but it would help them to understand one another better. And so in this international work; the nations needed to understand one another, and to be drawn together in stronger unity and concord on this great question.

The Bishop of Rochester seconded the resolution. He felt that if they had faith and perseverance enough to recognise that the forces of good must have some organized representation of a permanent kind, when the opportunity offered they would be able to seize it and to deal with questions as they arose. It was well to recognise what was good as it existed before our eyes. He thought certainly that one good thing in this work was to be noticed, the greater readiness on the part of officials to acknowledge the need of the work, and to welcome it and co-operate in it. The Association's report mentioned that "one of the most interesting signs of the times is the readiness with which the authorities do much of the work which at one time was left to our Association."

Sir Mark J. M'Taggart Stewart, M.P., voiced the pleasure of all concerned in the fact that the Home Secretary had expressed his willingness to receive information from the Joint Committee working in this matter, with a view of bringing the forces of the police and the Government to their aid.

The fact was emphasized by Mr. Percy W. Bunting that those who put their hands to this work from a sense of the grievous injustice suffered by the victims will be speedily led to recognition of the foundation of all in the sin that lies behind. The progress already made held out the hope of being able in the future to go beyond Europe to "the great black East" in the vindication of the rights of young people to be protected in their moral relations.

Dublin Believers' Meetings.

THESE annual gatherings were held at Merrion Hall (June 9-11), and proved, as in times past, seasons of great spiritual refreshment to many Dublin Christians, as well as to those who came from distant parts.

The hours of meeting were as follows:—Eight o'clock, prayer; twelve o'clock, ministry of God's Word; four o'clock, conference on special subjects; and 7.30 o'clock, ministry of God's Word. "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him," was the deep personal experience of many hearts. Among other brethren who took part, were Messrs. John R. Caldwell, Max J. Reich, George F. Trench, Henry Varley, Dr. Robert McKilliam, C. F. Hogg, Dr. McLean, F. S. Arnot, E. H. Broadbent, and H. B. Thompson.

At the opening meeting, Mr. F. S. Arnot referred to Ps. lxviii. 9, 10, "Thou, O God, didst send a plentiful rain, whereby Thou didst confirm Thine inheritance, when it was weary." . . . "Thou, O God, hast prepared of Thy goodness for the poor," which at once directed all hearts to the Person of Christ as to the One from whom all blessing must come. Mr. C. F. Hogg directed attention to verses 18-20 of the same Psalm, and spoke of the ascended, triumphant, risen Christ sending down upon the people, delivered by His death and resurrection, the gifts procured by His glorious victory. Linking with this, the declaration of Peter at Pentecost, the speaker pointed out that the resurrection of our Lord was not so much to be looked upon as a miracle, but rather that it was not possible that He could be holden of it.

Mr. H. Varley spoke from Rom. xv. 29, the message of the Apostle to the saints at Rome concerning his longed-for visit to them: "I am sure that when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of Christ." From chap. vi. 10, 11, he showed how every blessing that the believer can enjoy of life and power over sin and for service comes to him through the risen Christ, and the exhortation of v. 11 is the natural outcome of v. 10.

Dr. Maclean read 2 Cor. iv. 5-12. How did Paul accomplish his purpose and assurance of coming to Rome in the fulness of the blessing of Christ? No triumphal entry this, but as a shipwrecked prisoner bereft of everything, in chains, and yet as fully assured then as when he wrote the words, that he was coming in the fulness of the blessing of Christ.

The prominent feature throughout was the exaltation of the risen and glorified and coming Christ, and almost without exception the subsequent ministry followed upon the same lines.

In the afternoon the subject of Prayer was opened by Mr. Varley, followed by Messrs. Reich, Anderson (Italy), Arnot, Hogg, Torre, Trench, and Dr. Maclean, and was most helpful.

In the evening, Mr. E. H. Broadbent (lately returned from Eastern Europe) spoke of the Lord's work in Russia, Hungary, &c., telling us many things to draw out our prayers and increase our interest. On the afternoon of the second day the special subject for consideration was the Character of Ministry, specially suited for these days, which was opened by Mr. Caldwell. A ladies' meeting was also largely attended, when Mrs. Torre (Buenos Aires), Mrs. Purdon and Miss Grissell (Tunis), and Mrs. Hogg (China) spoke to a deeply-interested audience of the Lord's work in their respective spheres of labour.

At the noon meeting on the third day, Mr. G. F. Trench, speaking of 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4, 20-28, directed attention to the distinction between the revelation given to the four Evangelists to make concerning the birth, and life, and death of the Lord Jesus, and that to the Apostle Paul—he, in fact, began where they left off. "I delivered unto you first of all . . . how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures." This is for us the starting point. He died. He is risen. He is ascended. He is glorified, and He is coming again.

This afternoon was, as usual, devoted to accounts of missionary work, when the following brethren spoke of service in Asia Minor, Tunis, Buenos Aires, and Venezuela—Dr. Chambers, Messrs. Purdon, Torre, and John Mitchell.

In the evening, Mr. J. S. Anderson (many years in Italy) gave a most interesting account of the great need of and work carried on in that country. These happy meetings were brought to a close by an address from Mr. Caldwell on Rom. viii. 7, 8. T. O.

On Saturday (13th) afternoon and evening a very pleasant garden party (on the lines of the old Willow Park meetings, but much smaller) was held at Blackrock (near Dublin), at which many of those attending the meetings and other Christian friends from the neighbourhood were present. The following spoke:—Dr. Robert McKilliam, Messrs. Hogg, John Mitchell, Torre, and H. B. Thompson. The addresses were felt to be in the power of the Spirit, and came home to all present.

Mr. Henry Varley also writes:—"It was delightful to meet the goodly company of faithful men, who, in 'wisdom, power, and a sound mind,' stood together for the bold presentation of the everlasting truths of the Word of God. No 'uncertain sound' was heard. As one of the speakers expressed it: 'The mind of God is and must be the same as it was ten thousand years since.' 'I am the Lord, I change not,' gives the authority and everlasting stability of the Word which He hath magnified above all His Name. The whole conference was a noble testimony in confirmation and defence of 'the Gospel of the Glory of the Blessed God.'

"Good tidings brought from Belfast concerning the Torrey and Alexander Mission and the work of grace in that city imparted fresh stimulus, and hopes for expected revival were felt in many hearts. The missionary meetings were admirable, giving profound cause for gratitude, the whole audience in one meeting joining in applause. What a healthy sign! Not the discoveries of gold and diamonds, but Christ found by many sitting in darkness, firing our hearts. What was so grateful to hear and such a stimulus to prayer was the fact, again and again brought out, that human instrumentality was so little, and the power of the Holy Ghost in the work, so much.

"A most interesting feature of the conference is seen in the fact that the days are spent in a goodly measure of fraternal intercourse and table hospitality. What a monument of world-wide blessing Merrion Hall stands for! Growing out of the wonderful revival in Ireland, which centred about 1859, especially in connection with the honoured names of Henry Bewley, Denham Smith, and Mr. William Fry, eternity alone will disclose the rich and continuous blessing which has rested, and still rests, upon this noble centre. It was a joy to meet the last-named of these three brethren, and though past four score years to find this Gaius of long-continued hospitality and welcome still strong and hearty in all the work of the Lord.

"After some years of absence to find the noble hall crowded twice on the Lord's Day preceding the conference was indeed cheering, showing the faithfulness and continued blessing of God among this goodly company of the Lord's people. We think it may be said that the keynote of the meetings was struck in the noontide service when, using the triumphant words spoken by the Lord, 'All hail!' we sought to disclose some of the mighty and conclusive reasons for this condensed note of complete and triumphant victory over sin, death, and hell at the instance of the risen Lord. With this confidence holding heart and mind at the instance of the Holy Ghost Paul might well say: 'I am sure that when I come to you I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of Christ.' Surely this was fulfilled among us in the hallowed conference just closed.

"Our first memory of presence at the Believers' Meetings in Dublin dates back to the year 1862, and for numbers as well as for the strengthening might of His Spirit in the inner man, we suggest thankful and favourable comparison. How much we missed the presence of many of the beloved brethren who are now 'with the Lord.' The old Metropolitan Hall, where the meetings were held many years since, gave a testimony of homeliness and altogetherness (to coin a word), which we miss somewhat in the more stately Merrion Hall. Some of us prefer brotherly homeliness to modern architectural greatness. Can anyone tell how it is that the glory of many a former and homely house has not descended to, and does not attach to, many of the modern stately piles? Are we to learn that architectural beauty must not be confounded with, or mistaken for, spiritual worship, and the power of the Holy Ghost in ministry and assembly? Some of our American cousins would say, 'I guess that's so, stranger!'" s.s. Minnehaha, June 6, 1903.

Dr. Torrey's Journey.

THE Minnehaha has had favourable breezes and a pleasant voyage. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander have accordingly experienced themselves what they have brought to thousands lately—a great revival. It has been delightful to see Dr. Torrey pacing the deck, watching the usual games, and chatting gaily with all whom he meets. You look in vain for any sign of the weariness which might be expected after all his exhausting work of the last year and a half. He and Mrs. Torrey are naturally very eager to meet their family after this long absence from home, and there is little doubt that there will be a happy reunion of parents and children at New York.

Probably the party will stay in New York three or four days before proceeding to Chicago. The great auditorium in Chicago has been secured for a welcome meeting, which will give expression to two predominant feelings—delight at the safe return of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, and gratitude to God for the blessings which have followed their labours everywhere.

To all in Great Britain who know them the evangelists send heartiest greetings. They are already anticipating their return with much hopefulness of still greater spiritual blessing.

A Long and Faithful Record.

ST. JOHN'S Church, Southsea, has lost one of its oldest and most earnest adherents by the death of Mr. James Willing, who has passed away at the age of eighty-one. Marked by patient, faithful continuance in well doing, his record of activity in Christian service has not often been surpassed. Between sixty and seventy years he laboured in connection with St. John's Church, superintending its Sunday-school for fifty-seven years of that period. On leaving the dockyard seventeen years ago, he took up the work of a Scripture reader, devoting himself to its duties till the time of his death.

In the course of a sympathetic notice of Mr. Willing's death, the vicar of St. John's (Rev. H. Lindsay Young) writes:—"The event came as a surprise to a great many who were not aware of the serious turn which his illness had taken. Sad to us was the event, but to him intensely joyous. He is now away from the scene of toil and conflict of life, in the presence of the King whom he so loyally and earnestly served. Large, indeed, is the number of those who rise up and call him blessed. You can imagine how many generations have passed under his spiritual care while superintendent of St. John's Sunday-school."

Troops in Ireland.—In connection with Miss Sandes' work among the troops in Ireland, an excellent site has been presented for the erection of a Soldiers' Home at Cahir, co. Tipperary. Three batteries are stationed here, comprising 450 men. Nearly £600 has been collected locally, leaving about £700 still to be raised. In making an appeal for practical sympathy to be shown towards this effort, Major Wingfield writes that the need for such a home has been intensified during the long, wet winter. "The other officers are greatly in favour of the scheme. For myself I can only say that during all my service at home, in India and the Colonies, I have not seen a more needy place." Mr. W. H. Smith, Cahir, is receiving communications relating to the project.

"Climbing."

MOST people, especially young ones, are fond of climbing. It seems as if there is something within us which urges us on, and tells us how happy we shall be if we can always be getting up higher and higher.

Even babies try to climb. I once left the nursery door open, and lost my baby, and there he was struggling to mount the stairs, and when he sat down on the top step how proud and delighted he was! You boys and girls love to climb ladders and trees and difficult places, and men and women are not satisfied with English climbing, but go to other countries to try the higher mountains.

So it is with our spirits. God made us with longings to rise upon the ladder of life, the top of which is in Heaven. You remember Jacob's ladder. Who stood above it? (Gen. xxviii. 13). Even so the Lord is at the top of life's ladder, and, if we keep looking up at Him as we climb, He will encourage and help us on, though Satan may try to drag us down.

I wonder how many of you have climbed up a mountain. I live near the highest mountain in England, and I well remember my first ascent. Among our party were two children only seven years old; they were the youngest who had ever been known to ascend it, and their feat was put in the papers as a great wonder. It was very hard work, and when nearly at the top I gave up altogether, and sitting down on a rock said: "Not one step further for me!" But some of the younger people said I must go on, and by dint of pulling and pushing they got me to the top! How thankful I have always been that they did so. Far away across the sea, the sun was shining on a hilly island, the bright clouds above it were reflected in the water below, and it looked as if it were coming down out of heaven. It was such a glorious sight. I was reminded of that wonderful verse Rev. xxi. 2. Thus it will be for all who will patiently climb upwards and heavenwards; it may be hard at times, but go on in the strength of the Lord, and the glory that will follow will be ample reward (Heb. xi. 25, 26).

There is a good deal about mountain climbing in the Bible. God told Lot to escape from the doomed cities and climb up the mountain, but he thought that too hard, and begged to be allowed to stay below; however, in the end he found out that God's way was best (Gen. xix. 17-30). Moses was called by God to meet Him on the mountain top, that he might be taught how to lead the people (Ex. xix. 3); and both Aaron and Moses had to ascend mountains when the time had come for them to go to Heaven (Num. xx. 23-28; Deut. xxxiv. 1-6).

But do not imagine that climbing a mountain brings you any nearer to God, if your heart is not right towards Him. If you have not had the sin cleansed away by our dear Saviour, all your efforts to climb will be in vain. You may read in Num. xiv. 41-45, how some people would go up a mountain when God said "No," and what befell them.

Our Lord Jesus was fond of climbing the mountains for quiet, and rest, and communion with His Heavenly Father. It is so quiet there, away above the din of earth and even the singing of the birds. It was on the mountain that our Lord's glory shone forth and Moses and Elijah came down to talk with Him (Mark vi. 46, ix. 2).

In climbing the hill of life there is great danger of slipping back. On some of our mountain sides are loose stones and bits of slate; and when you try to go up, you slide down. It is easy work to stick your heels in and slide all the way down. Once when we were up a high mountain a cloud came upon us, we thought the quickest way down would be to slide, so down we went in that way; but suddenly we found ourselves close to a steep precipice, and were only just in time to save ourselves. If you know you have been slipping instead of climbing, cry out: "Lord, hold Thou me up and I shall be safe."

How shall we climb life's ladder successfully? Climb—Carefully (Heb. ii. 1)—step by step, in the narrow way. Lovingly—(Luke x. 33, 34)—Helping another when you can. Industriously—(Gal. vi. 9)—Doing your daily tasks cheerfully. Manfully—(1 Cor. xvi. 13)—Being brave and not daunted by difficulty. Becomingly—(Phil. i. 27)—Showing whose you are by your conduct.

Those who climb difficult mountains have to take a guide, who cuts the steps as you ascend and fastens you to himself, so that he can hold you up if you slip. Just so it is in our spiritual life. The Holy Spirit is our guide (John xvi. 13).

Two young men were climbing a very steep mountain near Geneva. Before they started "Conrad," the guide, made them promise that they would obey him implicitly. All went well till they were about to descend; then one of the lads said he would like to go down another way, which looked smooth and easy. Conrad said, "No; there are narrow passes and a steep precipice." The young men persisted; but he said, "I will never guide you that way." At last they got angry, saying they were strong and able, and would go. They paid the guide, and sent him home. Alas! the next day at the foot of that precipice the elder was found dead, the younger a cripple for life!

Young people, never dismiss your Guide; follow in the footsteps of your Master; say to His Blessed Spirit, "Thou shalt be the Guide of my youth" (Jer. iii. 4).

The Birds' Bowl.

"Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. xxii. 17).

I ONCE visited a beautiful garden on the cliffs overlooking the sea. On the lawn was a three-legged stool, supporting an earthenware pan which was filled with water for the birds, and around which I should like to have inscribed the above text.

The great ocean was near, but the birds could not drink of its waters; the great waves would have swept them away. How that earthen pan seemed to represent Jesus in His humanity, filled with blessings for us little birds. We fear to come to the mighty God lest He overwhelm us, but the weakest may come to "Gentle Jesus, meek and mild."

All sorts of birds came and took of that water—sparrows, thrushes, robins, and even blackbirds; and all sorts of sinners may come to Jesus. When the birds came they had to take the water, or they would not find satisfaction. Our text is emphatic about this: "Whosoever will let him take the water of life."

Some of the birds not only took a drink, they also took a bath. We, too, may find cleansing in Jesus, cleansing from all sin.

Do you think any of the birds brought payment for these blessings? They had no pennies, no purses, and no pockets; nor did they need any, for, like the fulness that is found in Jesus, all was to be taken "freely."

As we were watching these birds, the lady who had provided the luxuries said: "See, there is the lame one," and looking we saw the little cripple; but he managed to get a drink. Are you a lame sinner? one with a special weakness? You need find no difficulty in coming to Jesus; lame ones of old came to Him, and they always got a blessing. It is even easier to come to Jesus now than when He was on earth.

There were in that garden beautiful fruit trees, and the birds were tempted when thirsty to steal the sweet juices of the fruit; but if they drank of the water which was provided for them, they would not desire these forbidden things. When the soul is satisfied with what God provides, we do not need to steal joys that are not intended for us, for Jesus said: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life" (John iv. 14).

As each little bird sipped of the water provided, it seemed to lift up its head and say, "Thank you!" Have you ever thanked Jesus for salvation? You cannot thank Him if you have not taken it. Come and drink; then how you will rejoice and sing!

The lady who had planned this treat for the birds found great pleasure in watching them as they enjoyed what she had provided, and was specially pleased when any new birds came to drink. Is not God made glad when we take the water of life? Will you be a new bird coming for the first time?

Now I have something sad to tell. One day a bird came, but could not drink; and when they watched, they saw the end of his bill was broken off, probably in a trap. He came a few times, and then disappeared. He had lost his bill. Let us mind we do not lose our will and perish, not because God has taken His salvation away, but because we have lost the power to take it; for our text says: "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Will you?

How to Read the Bible (Psa. cxix. 9-16).

THE service of the Bible in our inner life, in cleansing us—"the washing of water by the Word"—is most necessary. But the composer of this wonderful Psalm evidently considered that the study of the Bible was a panacea for all the ills to which the soul of man is subject. I believe there is only one verse in the whole Psalm that does not, under one name or the other, refer to it. (9)

10. We must seek God in His Book "with our whole heart." Some people read the Scriptures lightly and superficially, but we must put our whole heart into the sacred exercise. The early morning is the best time, when we are fresh; then with undivided attention let us give ourselves to the Book, and it will give itself to us.

11. We must lay the Word up in our heart (R.V.). An old writer says that some books are to be tasted, some to be swallowed, and some chewed and digested. The Bible is of the latter sort. It is a book that you can never take too much of, and it must be retained in the mind and heart, as children a sweet in their mouths, that it may linger long on the palate. Depend upon it, when the soul is full of the Word of God, the Devil will find it hard to get a foothold. It is like the bundle of camphor which the house-wife hides in her blankets and flannels to keep the moth away, or like the money which is hidden in the bank to be drawn upon in the day of need.

12. There is no leader like the Holy Spirit. Lift up your heart to Him each time you open your Bible. Bless him for giving you the Scriptures, and ask Him to be your teacher and guide to their inner meaning. Read a difficult passage over and over again, and presently in His light it will yield light. When the stone-breaker has a harder stone to crack than usual, he goes down on his knees to it.

13. As soon as you have learnt a little more of the Bible, pass it on to someone else. It has been said that there are four things needful in Bible study—Admit, submit, commit, and transmit. The last means, pass it on, and is very important. We learn by teaching and gain by giving.

14. Be sure to read the Bible as a pastime. Take pleasure in it. One way to do this is to have method in your reading. It is a good thing to read one Book through at a sitting to get the drift of it, and then read it chapter by chapter. When you have read a chapter, ask yourself and write down the object for which it was written, the chief lesson in it for yourself, the verse you like best, and the Bible character whom it reminds you of. Whatever you do or don't do, be sure to read the Book through from Genesis to Revelation. My own favourite way is to look out the marginal references, or to make them for myself. Some people are fond of marking their Bibles, and drawing railway connections between verses and words on the same page. You will thus become rich towards God. As men amass riches, so do you be eager to amass new and larger nuggets of Bible knowledge. Ask every Christian you meet to tell you the best thing he knows about the Bible—this was Mr. Moody's plan.

15. It is not enough to meditate, you must obey. Take delight in turning the word which you read in the morning into practical service and obedience during the day. In each chapter and verse God is speaking to you; understand what He says; take it to your heart, and obey it. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

During the week ending June 6 twenty-six new societies were registered in the British Christian Endeavour Union.

* * *

The recent convention of the Japan Christian Endeavour Union was the largest and most representative of any yet held in that land. Seventy of the 114 societies in the Empire were represented, and delegates came from centres in almost every part of Asia. Special features were a session conducted in English, an impressive sunrise service on a hill-top (attended by 140 early risers), and a two-hours' consecration service. There was abundance of fraternal fellowship, high spiritual exaltation, and helpful discussions.

3. Profound faith in the power of Scripture.
4. Loving, fearless faithfulness in preaching repentance to sinners in high places as well as to the poor and lowly.
5. Always the courteous, Christian gentleman, even under most disturbing circumstances (Acts xxi. 37).
6. Faith, sparkling with hope, in God's watchful care and sure word of promise.
7. An increasingly humble opinion of himself (1 Cor. xv. 9; Eph. iii. 8; 2 Cor. x. 10).
8. Steadfastness of purpose to go where the Spirit of God guided him.
9. "The will of the Lord be done," was not turned aside even by loving friends (Acts xxi. 13). "Going where God would have him go; doing what God would have him do"—the two wills did not cross. Paul was calm, trustful, safe, happy, and brighter in hope at the end of his course than at the beginning (2 Tim. iv. 8; Prov. iv. 18).

Lessons Gathered.

1. The Lord Jesus was to Paul "a living, bright Reality," whether he was preaching to crowds or only earning his living by the work of his hands; writing epistles to the churches, or trying to win the soul of Onesimus the slave in prison.

2. The voice of a judge is terrible to the guilty prisoner, but his own children love to hear the tones of their father's voice (2 Tim. iv. 8). When Jesus comes again He will be "the Lord the righteous Judge," and He has a crown of righteousness laid up for Paul, and for all who "love His appearing."

"There's a crown for little children above the bright blue sky,
And all who love the Saviour shall wear it by-and-by."

UNFAITHFUL AND UNLOVELY.

In his book, "The Stones of Venice," Ruskin writes that when he was examining the magnificent tomb of Doge Vendramin, he climbed up to view the effigy surmounting it. He found that the figure had but one hand; one side of the forehead was worked elaborately, the other left smooth; and so on. The sculptor knew that the figure would only be seen from below, and from one side, and not being a lover of his work or of his people, he was unfaithful in what he doubtless considered a small matter. Ruskin adds that the man was equally unfaithful in greater methods, for he was banished from Venice in 1487 for forgery. The law of love was not in the sculptor's heart, for "love worketh no ill to his neighbour." By putting on the Lord Jesus Christ and serving Him, we shall be fitted for faithful work in our daily life. The love of God leads to a love for one's neighbours and for one's duties. (The Law of Love, April 19).

LOYALTY TO OUR KING.

When, some time ago, the king was very ill, it was noted that in Liverpool the usual patriotic songs were all absent, and only the National Anthem was heard in the streets. In some parts the people gathered in crowds, and offered prayers for the king; and until very late there were hundreds around the statue of Queen Victoria singing, "God Save the King." At that time the whole nation thought of its sovereign, and it illustrates the devotion of the Apostle to the Lord his King. Before Felix, Paul proclaimed, as he had done everywhere, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and proved himself a fearless, faithful witness of the Cross. If we, who are followers of the Lord, had but the enthusiasm and the earnestness of the Apostle, or were as loyal to God as to our earthly sovereign, we should have little reason to bemoan our half-heartedness. (Paul before Felix, May 17.)

SELF-DESTRUCTION.

A story of real heroism was recently related in the papers. A lady, who was mentally afflicted, broke away from her nurse, and running towards a railway, leapt on to the line. As an express train was nearing, the nurse caught the poor creature, and a desperate struggle ensued. With a wrench the demented lady escaped and threw herself in front of the engine, being instantly killed. The nurse narrowly escaped a like fate, and, as it was, the locomotive struck her, and she was conveyed in an unconscious condition to the hospital. In the attempt to save a fellow creature, the brave nurse nearly sacrificed her life. The Apostle, with deep concern for the souls of Festus and Agrippa, risked his freedom and his life, in order to save them. Agrippa was almost persuaded, and the poor lady of Birmingham was nearly rescued. Both were almost saved, but lost. (Paul before Agrippa, May 24.)

GOD'S WATCHMEN.

Some time since it was suggested that a large sum should be expended in the defence of London. In reply it was shown that if ever an enemy could get within forty miles of the capital, it would be a sad thing for the country and the empire at large. In view of such a possibility, experiments have been made recently at the mouth of the River Thames. Under cover of darkness, torpedoes have been placed near Southend, and the defenders of London have used powerful searchlights, in order to discover and locate the attacking weapons. The preacher is a man who should guard God's kingdom, and be watchful lest an enemy approach its capital. Paul charged Timothy to watch and to endure; to protect himself with the Scriptures, and fight, if need were, the good fight which he himself had endured. We have need to-day to be on the look-out for all approaching evil, and to turn the searchlight of God's truth on all who would assail us. (Paul's Charge to Timothy, June 21.)

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

FOR many years past Mr. William Wheatley, superintendent of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, has laboured to reclaim the criminal classes, and to prevent younger offenders from becoming permanently vicious. Steadily the work has grown until it has attained very large proportions, and in the past year it has made fresh progress.

DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

At the annual meeting, held on Friday last at the Mansion House, E.C., Mr. G. D. Freeman said that morning by morning discharged prisoners are met at the prison gates; almost hourly, friendless juvenile offenders are admitted into the Homes, at the request of judges and magistrates anxious to give them a chance in life; day and night the doors of the Refuge for homeless women and girls are open for such as need its benefits; the distinctively spiritual agencies are not allowed to slacken their efforts; and the work among young children is increasing by leaps and bounds.

For seventeen years the operations were almost entirely confined to preaching and house-to-house visitation, together with the administration of sorely-needed relief. Then, as has often been related, some ex-prisoners attending our services said, "What is the use of only preaching? Why don't you help us?" This pertinent question led to the commencement of the prison-gate work among adult ex-prisoners. Then it was realized that it is better to lessen the ranks of criminals by saving the boys and girls. So, Homes were opened for their reception and training into law-abiding people. A further useful step was to open an institution for children in grave moral danger and a Holiday Home for the little ones of the slums who are physically weak. While giving special attention to the children, the other branches of the Mission are maintained with unabated vigour. Last year no fewer than 22,127 ex-prisoners were provided with a free breakfast, and while they were partaking of this welcome meal God's Word was read and expounded to them; 5,426 were induced to sign the pledge; 273 convicts were received and assisted on their release from penal servitude; 200 maternity cases were dealt with; and 206 adults and children had a holiday at the Maldon Home.

"A CASE FOR MR. WHEATLEY."

The Lord Mayor, who followed, related the circumstances under which he first came in contact with the Mission. Twelve years ago, when first appointed a magistrate, the speaker had to deal with the case of a young lad, charged with theft, but too young to send to prison. "This," said the clerk of the court, "is a case for Mr. Wheatley." "Since then," said the Lord Mayor, "I have sent many cases to Mr. Wheatley, and he never fails. Magistrates do not know what they would do but for Mr. Wheatley."

The next speaker, Mr. W. Wheatley himself, said that although much has been accomplished, much remains to be done. Last year there was an increase of 2,000 in the number of men provided with breakfast on discharge from gaol. From among these, as well as from cases sent by judges and magistrates, many are gathered who are anxious to do well, and it is therefore necessary that the public should adequately support the Mission.

DRUNKENNESS AND CRIME.

Sir Henry Knight, speaking as a magistrate of many years' experience, said that he has to deal with a variety of cases, particularly those of juvenile offenders, in which the Mission is of inestimable value. A magistrate desires to prevent an offender from developing into a criminal. Drink, in the bulk of cases, is the chief source of crime, and when we think of the vast number of inebriates reclaimed through the operations, surely we must realize a great debt of gratitude.

Pastor W. Cuff said that having spent thirty years in Shoreditch, in constant touch with people in circumstances of difficulty and distress, necessarily, he had been in continual communication with Mr. Wheatley. Mr. Cuff graphically pourtrayed the assiduous labours of the workers, who met the discharged prisoners at the gaol gates; the homes where ex-convicts are received, and the fatherly care with which the erring are directed into paths of rectitude.

A "WAY OUT" FOR MAGISTRATES.

Sir Albert de Rutzen (chief metropolitan police magistrate) said that in the course of his long experience on the bench he has sometimes been "at his wits' end" to know what to do with certain cases, but Mr. Wheatley has invariably found "a way out." Even in most discouraging cases, of really bad lads, he never lost hope. His work is well known to employers of labour, with whom he is perfectly frank and open. The speaker concluded with a testimony to the excellent administration.

Sir R. M. Littler, who has to deal with hardened criminals rather than juvenile offenders, said that at every sessions he has a number of oblong envelopes to open; they all refer to cases in which sentence has been postponed from the previous sessions in order that the prisoner should be reported on by Mr. Wheatley. If that report shows that the man is worthy of being helped, he is generally discharged and handed over to the care of the Mission. In the great majority of cases this system has answered admirably, and has proved to be, not "a premium on crime," but "an insurance against the continuance of felony."

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

STRANRAER.

DR. HENRY'S recent Mission in Stranraer began on Sabbath, June 7. On the morning of that day he preached to a large congregation in the Sheuchan United Free Church. In the afternoon he addressed the school-children of the town, and in the evening spoke to a large assembly in the parish church, over a thousand persons being present. The meetings were afterwards held in the last-mentioned building, which had been kindly granted for the purpose by the minister and kirk-session, a favour which the local committee highly appreciated.

At the week evening meetings, Dr. Henry treated the Temperance question from various standpoints, but there never has been a Temperance speaker in Stranraer who has raised the subject to such a high level, basing his case, not on mere worldly expediency, but on the highest Christian principle and Scriptural authority. Dr. Henry is evidently a man of very wide knowledge, not only on temperance, but on other subjects, and in his case, passionate eloquence was not, as it sometimes is, divorced from close reasoning and hard-headed logic.

His audiences grew from night to night. Many who had been indifferent before were deeply impressed, and others who had been impressed before were stirred to enthusiasm. Over six hundred pledges were received in this comparatively small town.

Dr. Henry has a most valuable colleague in Mr. Jones, who expressed in song all the emotions, joy and sorrow, pathos, tenderness, and triumph, and who established himself as a favourite in the hearts of the people of Stranraer.

Very elaborate arrangements had been made by a strong local committee for many weeks prior to Dr. Henry's visit, and the work of organization was not light or easy. Credit to whom credit is due, and in this campaign, hearty recognition must be made of the indefatigable labours of the secretary of the local committee—Mr. Robert B. Dyer—to whose careful and businesslike arrangements so much of the success of this important mission is due. May the Divine blessing continue to follow Dr. Henry as he goes forth to fight new battles and win new victories in God's Name! As the Stranraer people looked at him each evening, they were struck with his remarkable courage. They thought of Knox, who never feared the face of man, and of Luther, who when asked to desist and to retract, said, "Here I stand; I can do no other; so help me God."

John M. Gordon, Chairman of Committee.

BELFAST.

On Sabbath last, Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones began a mission at Belfast in a large marquee erected in the Chapel Fields. The Belfast News Letter says: "There were large congregations at both services, and it was evident that the powerful appeal made by the preacher had a very deep effect. Rev. Henry Montgomery led in prayer, and the Fellowship Choir were conducted by Mr. Armon Jones, who also contributed a number of sacred solos."

In the course of his address, Dr. Henry said that the kingdom of drink represents a system of wrong relations. By it, men are put in wrong relations towards God and towards their fellow men. It does not increase holiness, multiply purity, or make men fitter to bring about the establishment of God's kingdom in the world. The manufacture of drink destroys the sweetness and concord of life, and its history is one of injustice. The speaker concluded with a telling appeal to Christian men and women "to put God first of all."

Of the evening meeting the Northern Whig says: "The great canvas auditorium was crowded with an eager congregation, and Dr. Henry delivered a powerful appeal. Mr. Jones again sang very effectively." Writing of this gathering a correspondent says: "The spirit of soul-concern was very deep; twenty open confessions of Christ were made, and many more were dealt with in the audience. The city has been deeply moved in connection with Dr. Torrey's mission. I believe we are to witness a continuance of this mighty work in the coming days."

Women's Temperance Union.

THE sixth convention of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union has just closed a delightful three days' session, held in the beautiful Victoria Hall at Geneva. In the absence of Lady Henry Somerset, the deliberations were presided over by Mrs. Stevens, of America. There were representatives from all the British possessions, from the United States, including the Philippines, and from nearly every country of Europe.

The papers and addresses were heard with great interest and enthusiasm, and much solicitude was expressed over the fact of drunkenness among women, which was found to be alarmingly on the increase in all countries. With one exception total abstinence was the keynote in all addresses. The leader of a well-known temperance society, in extending fraternal greeting, made the statement, that since Jesus Christ used wine they could not condemn wine-drinking as wrong, and hence only urged moderation. Is it not high time that ministers and Christian workers should meet in conference, and from the Bible decide whether or not the sinless Son of God made use of intoxicating drinks? He is being wounded in the house of His friends, and steps ought to be taken to remove the reproach that rests upon the life and character of our Lord. Margaret Weddell Henry.

Lausanne.

A Practical Suggestion.

DEAR SIR,—During the summer months there will be many leaving their homes for coast and country, and these will be shut up.

It has occurred to me that there are those who would, for Christ's sake, lend their houses to Home and Foreign missionaries on furlough, who are unable to afford to pay rent for a much-needed change, or perhaps even to those receiving help from the Indigent Gentlewoman's Fund, a class containing those whose lives have not now "fallen to them in pleasant places," seldom through their own fault, and whose characters are assured. What a blessing to such to be offered even free residence in a nice house for a week or two—filling their hearts with gratitude: and the givers will not be unrewarded or unblessed themselves.—Yours faithfully, For His Sake.

New Boy Preacher.

REMARKABLE STORY OF A SCOTTISH YOUTH.

From The Daily Express.

A SLENDER, timid lad of sixteen, who looks a good deal younger, clad in a boyish knickerbocker suit and Eton collar, standing up before the hard-headed, slow-thinking, rugged men and women of the west of Scotland, rousing them to new enthusiasm by an eloquence whose chief charm is its absolute simplicity and directness—that is Colin Livingstone, the boy preacher of Motherwell, the busy town in the heart of the Lanarkshire mining district which is slowly sinking down into the workings which honeycomb its base.

Colin Livingstone was a Board-school boy, and attending last winter the meetings of the local "Hallelujah Mission," as it is called, he took so earnest and active an interest in the work, and developed so phenomenal a genius for preaching, that he was induced to speak in public.

Nervous at the outset only, but without any suggestion of self-consciousness or precocity, the lad sent a strange thrill of religious fervour through the town.

At his first public appearance at a Motherwell mission hall he addressed a gathering which might easily have abashed his seniors. Members of all the various denominations in the district were there, and not a few who came as critics went away as friends.

AUDIENCE SPELLBOUND.

The fresh young voice rang out full and clear in a simple prayer for guidance and for the obliteration of his own personality, and then, disclaiming any pretention to the title of preacher, he spoke from the text, "For God so loved the world," and for half an hour held his held his audience breathless.

It was an old, old text, he said; they had heard it and read it over and over again; but it was no use getting it into their heads unless they also got it into their hearts. And it was all so simple and so clear and close, everything that that familiar old text signified, that people inevitably went out of their way to look for it, not dreaming it was near at hand.

In accepting what that text held out, people were apt, he said, to imagine that they would undergo some physical sensation, but there was none; and moreover, there was no middle way—if they had not crossed over the line between faith and non-faith, then they were still outside it.

But the printed words give only the ghost of the impression created by their delivery. The boy must be heard before the sensation he has created can be understood.

Much of the charm of it lies in his modesty. To an Express representative who spoke with him after one of his recent meetings, he spoke of his gift with great simplicity and a total absence of affectation. For two years while at school, he said, he had pondered over the religious side of life, and when the evangelistic mission began its work in Motherwell it "all came upon him in a flood."

His method is to skeletonize his subject, and then clothe it in words as he stands up to speak, committing nothing to memory. The words all come as soon as he reads his text.

A very blessed time has been experienced at Piddington, Oxon, during a six-weeks mission conducted by Mr. Herbert Pout, of the Evangelization Society. Numbers have come miles to the services, and above all many have been led to accept the Lord Jesus as their Saviour, rejoicing that their sins are forgiven. The Lord's own children have been helped and strengthened in their onward way. To Him be all the praise! J. J. Sulston.

Mr. F. N. Charrington's Work.

There are few evangelists who can look back to 1873 and say "Ever since that date I have taken a month's mission every year in connection with the Tower Hamlets Mission." Mr. Charles Inglis, who has just completed five weeks services in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E., can remember the early date and the blessed times he had in those early years of Mr. Charrington's work, and it is most refreshing to hear from his own lips that his last mission has been one of the best he has ever had. To a crowded audience, on the last night of his mission, he said, "I have enjoyed my mission with you, and I think after all these many years I can say that it has been one of the best I have ever had. Not one meeting has passed without souls being brought to the Lord, and I look back upon my thirty years coming in and out among you as some of the most happy periods of my life as an evangelist. Few have been able to watch this glorious work as I have, and I thank God from the bottom of my heart for all He has accomplished by His servants these many years. Thirty years is a big slice out of a man's lifetime, and I can only pray that there is as much blessing in store for us in the future; in fact, I pray for more."

It is needless to try and describe Mr. Inglis's faithful proclamation of the Gospel. His earnestness to the Master's service is so well known all over the world, especially in Australia and America, that it is no wonder when he visits the East End of London he gets good audiences, and the Word is blessed to the salvation of men and women. Mr. Henry Beaumont sang most sweetly the solos on Sunday evenings, and Mr. R. S. Bradbrook conducted some impressive Gospel temperance meetings on Thursday evenings.

Mrs. Baeyertz in Norwich.

Mrs. Baeyertz came to Norwich a perfect stranger, except to a few of us. She was invited by Miss Octavia Jary, who had attended her meetings at Felixstowe, and had received such blessing herself that she was anxious for the friends here to receive the same.

The Bible readings were largely attended from the first, but the night meetings kept increasing, and the mission grew, until at last the large Assembly Room in the Agricultural Hall was not large enough to hold the crowds. One cannot hear Mrs. Bayertz without feeling that it is not so much she that speaks, but that God is speaking through her. All through, it has been a marvellous opening-up of God's Word; much light has been poured upon the Bible, and we hear all around "it has become a new book, I want to read it all over again." We shall never forget her addresses on Prayer, Temptation, and The Atonement.

Every night anxious souls were dealt with in those crisp "Bible readings for the unconverted." We do not give numbers; they are recorded above; but the last night nearly forty professed to trust the Saviour.

The mission closed on Monday last with three services, to which the people came from long distances. The night meeting was most remarkable. The advertised time was 8 p.m., but at 7 o'clock a great crowd had gathered outside. They streamed in, and quickly filled the hall. The people sat on the window sills, or stood in the aisles, and even then crowds had to be turned away. Few will forget the solemnity of that meeting, and the close, heart-searchings as sin after sin in the Christian's life was dealt with so faithfully. One felt that God was moving over the meeting, and one could see by the chastened look of the people as they moved out that they had come into contact themselves with God, Who had made them conscious of a need of being more absolutely possessed by Himself. Canon Hay Aitken and Rev. R. Middleton rendered much help during the mission. Canon Hay Aitken also came in on Sunday night after his three services, and closed with prayer. Many other clergymen and ministers were present at different services, some coming a long distance, so we are encouraged to trust that the blessing will be carried far and wide. J.

Tent Missions in Glasgow.

With the advent of the fine weather the summer plan of campaigning under canvas has in different parts of the city been set agoing, and souls are being won for Christ.

In the Townhead district, at the head of Parliamentary Road, Mr. John Hawkins, of London, under the auspices of the Railway Mission, commenced a tent series of meetings with the last week in May, and there has been a steady growth of interest and blessing. Souls have been saved and God's servants have been cheered.

Mr. J. W. Moodie, of the Evangelization Society, pitched his tent in Govan, and began on the last day of May. From the first the meetings have been large, and there has been much to encourage the workers. Mr. Moodie purposes going on right through June, and probably longer, if the tide of interest continues to flow.

On the first Sunday in June, under the management of the executive of the Scottish National Convention, with the co-operation of the local churches, Mr. W. D. Dunn commenced a tent mission in Clydebank. Everything promises well for a good time, numbers having already indicated their desire to follow the Lord. J. C.

Blackpool Hippodrome Services.

Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, was the speaker on Sunday last at the Y.M.C.A. Gospel services in the Hippodrome, Blackpool. There were gratifying attendances, considering that the season has not really begun. The afternoon meeting was for "men only," and the subject was "The Story of a Great Athlete" (Samson). Mr. Oatts was supported in song by Rev. Raleigh A. Scott, the ex-slave singing evangelist of Tennessee. There was also a good outdoor meeting to close the day at the "Central Lamp." L. J.

The Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen, are to have four tents in use this season, one in Aberdeen and three in the surrounding counties. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. A. Smith.

On Thursday last about 100 theatrical women and girls accepted Mr. W. Forbes' invitation to spend the day in Epping Forest. The unfavourable weather prevented many from coming. After tea a short service was held, and illustrated Gospels were given to all the guests.

A mission extending over several months has just terminated in the Poole Wesleyan Circuit. Sister Alice Adams has been the missioner. Many places in the circuit have been visited with a ten days' mission, and it has been very encouraging to see chapel after chapel filled with overflowing congregations, and to hear from many penitent hearts the cry for mercy. Sister Alice, who preaches and sings the Gospel most impressively, is much beloved in the circuit, and many are the converts who date their spiritual birth from her last year's mission.

About Books.

MISSIONARY BOOKS.

While serving as a Y.M.C.A. representative with the American army in the Philippines, Rev. John Marvin Dean enjoyed exceptional opportunities for observing the present position and prospects of Christian effort in the islands. In The Cross of Christ in Bololand (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier) he has set down the story of his experiences, and summed up his impressions in a fashion that brings the men and women he met very near to the reader. The fact that Romanist priests and monks had been in complete possession of the field for many years created a peculiar set of conditions; and, among many vivid word-pictures, not the least striking are those showing how the simple Evangel was welcomed by men and women who had previously abandoned their false religions at the call of monks and friars.

From Darkness to Light. In a book bearing this title, Mr. D. Christopher Joseph continues his narrative of the Lord's dealings with him. It is some years since the first volume came out; the sequel, though devoid of distinctive literary character, is very interesting in some of its narratives and statements. Among the most striking chapters is that which gives the cherem, or ban of excommunication, issued in Jerusalem when Mr. Joseph's mission work there attracted widespread attention among the Jews. (1s. to 2s., according to binding. The Author, 138, Clifden Road, Clapton, N.E.)

More than "first impressions of a Mohammedan land" are to be found in Led Forth With Joy (2s. 6d. net. Marshall Bros.). Miss Florence S. Willmot went to Persia with eyes opened by the love of Christ, and the lessons she learned may well be taken home to the hearts of Christian women. The illustrations add to the attractions of an otherwise charming book.

Vignettes of Kashmir. By E. G. Hull, Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. (1s. Marshall Bros.) Sir W. Mackworth Young, K.C.S.I., late Lieut. Governor of the Punjab, contributes a preface to this little book, which contains a series of brief readings on missionary incidents and scenes, embellished with fifteen illustrations.

The Shining Land: The Story of C.E.Z.M.S. Work in Ceylon. By Evelyn S. Karney and Winifrede W. S. Malden, C.E.Z. missionaries in Ceylon. (1s. Marshall Brothers.) Colonel Robert Williams, M.P., writes a preface to this little book, which is full of interest and well illustrated.

In 'Neath Palm and Pine, by A. G. Penny (Religious Tract Society. 6d.), the veil is lifted in very interesting fashion from missionary life in India. We see men, women, and children from whose lives a burden is borne away by the Lord.

Christian work among soldiers is splendidly illustrated in The Bible Punchers, or Shifting the Batteries, by E. C. Rundle Woolcock. (2s. Religious Tract Society.)

The Popular Library of Art has been enriched by the addition of Frederick Walker, by Clementina Black (2s. Duckworth). An interesting biography of the man whom Sir John Millais described as "the greatest artist of the century," is illustrated by reproductions of thirty-six pictures.

What a Business Man Ought to Know. By "a Confidential Clerk." (1s, Guilbert Pitman). Contains explanations of many of those terms and matters of business which puzzle the uninitiated. The youth who makes diligent use of it will certainly cause his principals to wonder where he was trained.

In The Way to the Father, by Rev. John Wakeford, each clause in the Lord's Prayer is made the subject of a helpful homily, with an incident in the life of our Lord as a basis. The modest volume will be welcomed as an aid to quiet meditation, especially in families connected with the Church of England. (2s. net. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Mr. George Kirby is well known in the city of York as an earnest Christian, ever ready to co-operate in aggressive work. The story of his life, which is largely a record of effort to reach and influence the outside masses, is well told by Mr. Albert Harrison in Plucked from Peril. Rev. Dinsdale T. Young contributes an introductory note. (1s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell.)

The Story of the Light that Never Went Out. Part IV. of this work, appearing in fortnightly sections, carries the story as far as the life and times of Wycliffe. The illustrations are numerous and excellent, and will commend the work to young and old alike. These are days in which there is urgent need for the circulation of such literature as this important undertaking represents. (7d. net. Morgan & Scott.)

STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

To the capital "Brave Deeds" series of the Religious Tract Society has been added Noble Deeds of the World's Heroines, by H. C. Moore. The four sections cover deeds of rescue from fire or flood, in the mission field, amid war perils; and tell of self-sacrifice and devotion under varied circumstances of trial. The book has many illustrations, and is a worthy addition to a popular series. (2s.)

The little heroine of E. A. Gillie's latest work, Jimmy: Would that I Were a Boy, is a lively creature. Young girls particularly will enjoy reading of her pranks as well as those of her playmates. The greatest injury anyone could do to "Jimmy" was to call her by her full name, Jemima, and it would seem that even her two aunts with whom she lived only used it in moments of great displeasure, or when they wished to impress her with the enormity of her misdeeds. (2s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

The bright pictures and simple explanations in Mother's Story Book of Birds (1s.) will make it welcome to parents who find the entertainment of little people a growing difficulty. The Silver Lady and The Two Christophers are excellent little story books, with attractive illustrations. (6d. each. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

Brothers do not always conserve an unbroken friendship, and the subjects of Julia Hack's readable narrative, David and Jonathan, though twins, furnish another proof of this. The record of their lives, however, is capitally unfolded, inculcating true manliness, combined with godliness and temperance. (2s. Religious Tract Society.)

In Time with the Stars, by Thomas K. Beecher, is a volume of fresh and suggestive stories or parables for children, each with a good lesson running naturally through it. The child and the child lover will alike prize it, and be helped by it in understanding or explaining great truths. (2s. 6d. Revell.)

As a story for boys and girls, Pat, by Stella Austin, will prove highly acceptable, and as a source of entertainment, convey healthful lessons at the same time. (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.).

Hemmed In is one succession of thrilling adventures. Hair-breadth escapes from the clutches of wild beasts or from blood-thirsty savages, daring exploits and exciting incidents, abound to an extent almost embarrassing. From beginning to end there is not a dull page. (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner.)

The Old Gospel and its New Law. By Rev. John Philip, D.D., Fordoun. (1s. net. Stockwell.) Timely words on Gospel doctrines and practice, viewed from various standpoints.

Everybody's Street Guide to London is a handy little directory, which gives the names of London streets and of the nearest thoroughfare and railway station to each. (1d. Dicks.)

Bishop Moule's little book, At the Holy Communion: Helps for Preparation and Reception, has reached its thirty-seventh thousand. The pages will prove helpful to spiritual-minded readers. (Seeley.)

Hindustani Grammar Self-Taught is a new work in Marlborough's "Self-Taught" Library. It has been prepared by Capt. C. A. Thimm, and should prove of great service to students, travellers, soldiers, officials and others. (2s. Marlborough.)

Two booklets by Miss Ethel R. Boddy—Tested, Trusting, Telling, and Christ to Us, We to Him—will find much acceptance in Christian homes. Both have helpful words for those who are seeking the complete abandonment of self to the claims and service of Christ. (1d. each. Bemrose.)

Sir Josceline's Hostage, by M. S. Comrie, at once raises high expectations. The author has pleased us before; and she does so now. The scene of her story is Teviotdale, in the cruel "killing time" when Claverhouse and his hordes did their work of plunder and massacre against the Border Covenanters. There is love as well as war in the unveiling of the plot. (Shaw.)

The points of difference between the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association and the British-Ephraim Mission are set down in God and Greater Britain, by Rev. Robert Douglas (3s. 6d. Nisbet), which is further described as giving an account of the British Race from the twentieth century B.C. to the twentieth century A.D., and as "an up-to-date Bible revelation of the approaching Millennial Revolution and Reformation of the Nations."

The Sun-Children's Budget, edited by Phœbe Allen and Dr. Henry W. Godfrey, is the friend and counsellor of little folk who find interest in botanical and entomological studies. Formed into clubs and brigades, these happy boys and girls learn much that is curious and useful in their "Budget," which virtually stands for "playing at botany." Volume V., containing the quarterly issues, July, 1902, to April, 1903, is full of good things; and the child to whom the pages come may be congratulated upon the good influences under which he is thus placed. (3s. Wells Gardiner, Darton & Co.)

FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

"What Subject Shall I Take?" A popular edition of this collection of Bible Studies for Pulpit and Class, by Rev. J. John Hunt, of Birmingham, will bring a very useful book within reach of a still larger number of Christian workers. The pages represent the Scripture gatherings of a diligent student; and those who know how to use what are commonly known as "Bible Reading" points, will find some of a very workable character among these—classified as Evangelistic, for Believers, General, and Special, according to their nature, or the intention lying behind their construction. (1s. net. London & Counties Publishing Co., 79, Temple Chambers, E.C.)

The application of simple visible illustration in Bible teaching is admirably opened up in Through Eye to Heart, by A. W. Webster and Rev. William Dryburgh. Infant-class teachers will find in Bible Talks with the Little Ones, by Clara R. Nash, excellent hints for the use of common objects in the dealing with spiritual things. (1s. 6d. net each. Sunday School Union.)

Primer on Teaching: with Special Reference to Sunday School Work. By John Adams. M.A., B.Sc., Professor of Education in the University of London. (6d. net. T. & T. Clark.) An excellent work, at once lucid in statement and practical in design. All who seek to influence the young will find help in these pages.

The Conduct of Public Worship. By Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A. (6d. net. Baptist Union.) Serious words on a subject of great importance. Having a practical design, the author says things that may well command the attention of preachers and workers of all denominations.

Among the Divine provisions for their comfort and help the ministry of angels has been too often overlooked by God's people, and as spiritual gifts must be used or lost, this results in sad impoverishment. In a volume charmingly written and beautifully produced—When Angels Come to Men (2s. 6d. net. Revell)—Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster presents the teaching of Scripture on the subject as a precious fact in the Christian life. Meditative readers will, like Elisha's servant, have their eyes opened to the reality of things hidden from the world.

Lost in the Slave Land, by William Murray Graydon, is a stirring story of travel and adventure such as schoolboys love, with up-to-date references to African exploration (2s. Partridge).

The notable address given by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson at the recent anniversary of the China Inland Mission has been published under the title, Christ's Strait Gate and Narrow Way. (2d. Morgan & Scott.) Those who have made up Dr. Pierson's great audiences during recent months, and the still greater number who have closely followed the reports of his addresses, will find in this closing utterance one of the most helpful and instructive of all. As a charge to missionaries it calls for the widest possible circulation.

In the latest volume of Great Thoughts, the orginal purpose of presenting the finest extracts of the works of notable authors at their best is maintained. A number of deeply informing original articles are also included. The choice fragments of poetry, philosophy, and history, with their analogies of life and thought, are drawn from innumerable sources, and will be of service to busy preachers looking for material with which to illustrate the highest themes. A glance at the index shows that there are quotations from 534 writers, and there is a list of 659 texts of Scripture upon which poems and articles in the volume throw light. (4s. 6d. Smith's Publishing Company.)

The 1903 edition of Quiet Holiday Resorts is a compendium of much service to those who prefer the unfrequented seaside or country village to the popular and crowded centre, in which to spend their vacations. No effort has been spared in searching out healthful and secluded spots in each county of the United Kingdom, and denizens of large towns have a choice of villages in their immediate vicinity to which they can pay short visits, instead of travelling far afield to find a suitable district. Particulars are also given of many such resorts on the Continent; and in every case, whether at home or abroad, the information comprises places of interest in the various localities, climate and scenery, routes, fares, &c. "Primitives" in Conference.

THE annual Conference of the Primitive Methodist Church, which was opened in Newcastle-on-Tyne on Wednesday of last week, was composed of a larger number of delegates than have attended previously. Rev. T. H. Hunt, of Bootle, was elected president, Mr. James Bell, of Durham, vice-president, Rev. John Day Thompson, of Aintree, secretary, and Rev. Benjamin Fell, of Hull, assistant secretary.

A record of the decease of nineteen ministers was made, of whom eleven were engaged in the active ministry, and eight were supernumeraries.

Rev. James Pickett, of Nottingham, was appointed missionary secretary in place of the late Rev. John Slater, and Rev. W. Johnson, of Hartlepool, to the principalship of Manchester College in room of Rev. G. Parkin, who is returning to circuit work. Rev. Arthur T. Guttery, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, was elected vice-missionary secretary, and Rev. W. Jones Davies, of Grimsby, vice-principal of Manchester College.

Twenty-eight names were added to the approved list of ministers. Several ex-ministers asked the conference for permission to re-enter the ministerial ranks, and two applicants were received, providing they were willing to go through a complete course of probation. New circuits were sanctioned at Derby and Rotherham, and several small and feeble ones were amalgamated.

Mr. Samuel King (Bottesford) and Mr. Jabez Barlow (Walworth) were elected to the two vacancies in the permanent membership of Conference.

It was agreed that the next Conference should be held at Birmingham. An assistant minister is to be granted to the President of Conference, and also to Rev. James Travis, President of the National Free Church Council.

A MUNIFICENT OFFER.

In view of the growing need for ministers, Mr. W. P. Hartley, J.P., of Aintree, made the following offer to the Conference, viz., that he would, at his own cost, erect and furnish a new college adjoining the present Manchester College, to provide accommodation for forty additional students, so that provision would be made for 100 students at least. He further promised that if sanction were given to the students to have a three instead of a two years' course of training, he would pay the whole of the third year's fees for the next seven years. The Conference very heartily and gratefully acknowledged Mr. Hartley's offer, and recorded its acceptance of it.

The Examining Committee reported that of the 130 probationers who presented themselves for examination, all passed with the exception of two. The quality of the work done by the probationers continues to show signs of improvement.

The Orphan Home Committee reported that there were fifty children in the Home. Six orphans were ready to leave the Home, and additional accommodation being provided for ten more by the extension of the premises, the Conference was requested to sanction the admission of sixteen others.

The book room report showed that the number of sales during the past year was 2,735,220, the amount realized being £37,819, an increase of £2,965.

Part of Monday's sessions was devoted to the reception of a deputation from the United Methodist Free Churches. The deputation consisted of Rev. W. H. C. Harris, of Manchester, and Mr. R. Bird, J.P., of Cardiff, both of whom addressed the Conference.

Mr. Harris said it was fitting that the first interchange should be between the two most radical branches of Methodism. Unless this movement in the direction of union is prompted and guided by the Holy Spirit their interchanges would be unavailing. Mr. Bird remarked that he saw in this interchange the promise and germ of union. He was looking to a future when overlapping and extravagant expenditure of money caused by so many divisions of Methodism would be at an end.

Church of England.

An anonymous gift of £10,000 has been received for the Poor Benefices Fund of the diocese of York. The purpose of this fund and its method are to augment by annual grants the incomes of the clergy in parishes where the value is less than £200 a year.

The summer term at the Church Army's Training Home has just opened with record figures, thirty-one young men and a like number of women having entered. In almost every case the course of instruction at the Training Home has been preceeded by a term of probation, the men in mission vans and the women at one or another of the Homes. There is a constant demand for candidates for free training, and the Church Army is always glad to hear from likely persons.

The twenty-seventh annual Conference of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union was concluded on Friday last at Leeds. Rev. D. Allison, vicar of St. James', Leeds, presided. There was a large attendance. The final paper was by Rev. J. C. Wright, vicar of St. George's, Leeds, on "The Need and Means of a Spiritual Revival." Mr. Wright said that there is less appearance of religious life than there used to be. As a cause he mentioned the abuse of wealth, inducing extravagant luxury, and the unwholesome struggles of poorer men to copy a standard which they cannot afford. We cannot manufacture a revival by artificial means, but there is the preliminary step of the far-reaching effects of a whole-hearted, consistent, and self-sacrificing Christian life."

Congregational.

Castle Hill Church, Northampton, has acquired a collection of relics of Dr. Doddridge (formerly its pastor), including a jacket worn by Doddridge on the day of his death, and some MSS. and printed volumes, as well as a collection of his hymns annotated by Rev. Job Orton. The mementoes are being placed in the vestry of the church.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne is issuing invitations for a meeting to be held at Whitefield's Tabernacle on June 22 to enlist support on behalf of the Central Mission, whose superintendency he has undertaken. Mr. Horne points out that there is every prospect that the Tabernacle may be made the centre of a far-reaching influence in that crowded district. To provide accommodation for the work it will be necessary to proceed at once to complete the pile of buildings by erecting an institute. The work is, however, already embarrassed by a debt of £8,000.

Baptist.

Rev. Frank James has completed ten years of service at Peckham Park Road Chapel, S.E., commencing his eleventh year of ministry on Sunday week, when ten persons were received into church fellowship.

A site for a new building has been secured by the church at present worshipping in the Public Hall, Bedfont, near Feltham (Rev. S. W. Gentle-Cackett), and the first sod was cut last week. A large number of friends took part in the proceedings, and the sum of £32 was raised.

Rev. F. C. Hughes, of Berkhamsted, has accepted the invitation of Filliebrook Church, Leytonstone, to become the pastor in succession to Rev. John Bradford, now Secretary of the London Baptist Association. Mr. Hughes hopes to commence his duties on the first Sunday in October.

Kingsgate Street Chapel, which is connected with the new Baptist Church House, has been opened for worship, sermons being preached by Revs. Charles Brown and J. H. Shakespeare. The building will accommodate about 400 people. The Kingsgate Street Church has the right to the building on Sundays and for a certain time during the week.

An extension of premises has just been completed at Stroud Green Church, N. (Pastor F. H. King), by the erection of a new prayer chamber and Bible-class rooms above, at a cost of £300. These rooms were opened, free of debt, last week, the money having been raised by the church, principally by a thankoffering, which was augmented by a self-denial effort during the building operations.

Methodist.

A new chapel has been erected at Bawtry, near Doncaster, on a site given by the the Earl of Crewe. The cost is £2,600, and £2,000 is in hand.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has preached the opening sermon of a new Free Methodist church at Plaistow. A public meeting was addressed by Rev. A. Mursell and others. The church has cost £6,000. On the opening day £80 was received, making £2,085 in hand.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Hanson sails for America on July 15. Dr. George Lorimer will occupy the Marylebone pulpit from July 19 to August 16. The services on the remaining Sundays of August will be taken by Rev. Nathan E. Wood, D.D.

At Notting Hill, W., "Missionary Day" this year was successful beyond the most sanguine expectations, in the way in which the freewill offerings came in. They amount to £291 2s. 8d., or £50 more than those of 1902. This sum will shortly be distributed among Presbyterian missions.

The second anniversary of the settlement of Rev. W. Harvey-Jellie, at St. Andrew's Church, Cheltenham, has been celebrated. Services were conducted by Rev. J. G. Train, of Norwood. There were large and appreciative audiences. The past year has been one of encouraging progress, and the outlook for future work is most hopeful.

In the presence of a numerous and appreciative congregation, Rev. E. Scott has been inducted to the charge of St. George's Church, Myrtle Street, Liverpool. During the past twelve months he had ministered with such acceptance during the vacancy caused by the removal of the former minister that the congregation were unanimous in asking the Liverpool Presbytery to sanction his ordination and induction.

At the meeting of the Manchester Presbytery last week Rev. A. Herbert Gray introduced the subject of the Presbyterian Social Service Union. He explained that the object of the Union is to promote the study of social questions, to teach in the churches that the responsibilities and duties of citizenship are an integral part of Christian practice, and to engage members in practical work. The fundamental principle of the Union is that the development of individual moral character and the maintenance of the sacredness of the family are essential elements in the social ideal, and the chief aim of social effort. The law of love is to be carried into effect in commercial, industrial, and social relations, especially in the getting and spending of money.

The "Bishop Hooper" Protestant Van, in charge of Mr. Samuel Bradfield, has just visited the small town of Chesham, Bucks, and the work done is very cheering. Souls have been blessed through the preaching of the Word. A large number of Protestant books have been sold and many books and tracts given away. A Protestant League is to be formed.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. T. BRYANT, Primitive Methodist, who was superannuated in 1887, has died at Exmouth. He retired from active work in 1897, having "travelled" thirty-three years. He was seventy-one years old.—The death has occurred of Mr. ELIAS JONES, J.P., of Llandudno, who during the last forty years has filled almost every position of honour in the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Connexion.

Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh.

THE twenty-second annual social gathering of the workers and friends of Carrubbers Close Mission Gospel Temperance Association, Edinburgh, was held on Saturday evening, June 13, in the large hall of the Mission. Professor A. R. SIMPSON, M.D., presided over a large attendance.

In a brief opening address the Chairman referred to the excellent work the Association has done for the past twenty-two years in the cause of temperance. Mr. G. A. BARCLAY, the president, then submitted his report of the past year's work. The report showed that as the result of the efforts of the Association many lives had been changed and numerous homes had been brightened. They had on all sides cause for gratification at the success of their efforts, which could be seen not only in the city, but in all parts of the country.

Rev. Dr. WHYTE (St. George's U.F. Church), referred to the impulse he had personally received from the knowledge of the great work the Association had done. In this connection he spoke in appreciative terms of the successful efforts of Mr. Barclay and his helpers.

Rev. D. BUTLER, of the Tron Parish Church, also spoke of the far-reaching influence of the mission. The Church, he said, and missions in sympathy with the Church, like Carrubbers Close Mission, ought, among other things, to direct their efforts towards improving the conditions of the people, so that they might feel that the Church was truly interested in their common, everyday concerns. Such a course would do much to bridge the gulf which at present existed between the Church and the masses.

Rev. DINSDALE T. YOUNG, of Nicholson Square Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, thought that one of the greatest blessings a mission like Carrubbers Close effected was the supplying of a common platform, on which all denominations could unite for practical Christian work. They thereby discovered how small were the points that separated the various branches of the Christian Church, and how important were the points on which all agreed, and which formed the only levers by which their efforts could reach and elevate the masses.

'The Directory of the Divine Life."

Under the title of "The Directory of the Divine Life," Rev. F. B. Meyer hopes to contribute to our olumns a series of papers emphasizing some of the lessons of the Sermon on the Mount. From past experience we are assured that this will be a matter of genuine interest to many of our readers. We hope to publish the first of the papers in our next issue, and feel that the occasion affords a favourable opportunity for bringing THE CHRISTIAN under the notice of an extended circle of friends. Will our readers help us?

Unfermented Wine.

The plea set forth in a recent issue for the use of non-alcoholic wine at the Table of the Lord has prompted many correspondents to write on either side. Several contend that the wine used by our Lord was necessarily fermented, and a clergyman supports this view by quoting the word of Paul "another is drunken." (This would seem to afford a good reason for its discontinuance!) It does not follow that if such wine were once used it should be always used, any more than that the Sabbath should perpetually be observed on Saturday, when there is legitimate cause to alter it.

The Letter and the Spirit.

To our mind the spirit of this and the preceding chapters (1 Cor. viii.-xi.) goes far deeper than the surface interpretation. Whatever causes another to stumble is to be put away; though it may be lawful, it is not expedient:—

Take heed lest by any means, this liberty of yours become a stumbling block to them that are weak . . .

And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?

But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

Wherefore if meat [lawful enough in itself] cause my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I cause my brother to stumble.

To the weak, became I as weak . . . and this I do for the Gospel's sake.

I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils . . . ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils.

All things are lawful, but all things are not expedient.

Let no man seek his own, but every man another's welfare.

Whether therefore ye eat or drink, do all to the glory of God.

A Reason for Hope.

The Bi-centenary of the birth of John Wesley has directed attention once more, not only to the great man who, under God, helped to make history, but to the days in which he lived. And a comparison between his time and ours gives us every reason for hope concerning the work that is being done for God in the present day. If, in many directions, things are bad now, they were far worse then. A comparison between the average minister or between social customs past and present—and particularly between the brutal and bestial ungodliness of the working-classes then, and their comparative refinement now—all show how great is the improvement that we enjoy. And if, amid all that darkness and sin the great Evangelical Revival was born, surely we may hope in God for our own time, so much more favoured in every way. The prophets of old made of God's work in the more difficult past an argument for His working in the less difficult present, and so may we. "Because Thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of Thy wings will I rejoice."

The Heart of Revival.

The heart of that great Evangelical Revival, with which the name of John Wesley will be for ever associated, was simply the living recognition, as a practical force in personal life, of the truth of heart conversion. It was just the whole truth, so long obscured by ceremonies and formalism, brought to the front again. Wesley always held tenaciously to the fundamentals of the Christian faith, and rigorously sought to mould his life to them after the High Church manner; but not until his eventful meeting with the Moravians did he know the reality of the spiritual life. Much in his early experience is reproduced to-day among those whose religious life consists in the precise observance of externals. No better study could be offered to such than the story of the great change that came to Wesley through a definite conversion. The much desired revival for which many are praying will have at its heart the same truth that has proved so powerful in other times—for the simple reason that this truth is eternal, and remains unaffected by the changes of time.

A Tribute to Wesley.

A writer, in a daily contemporary dealing with the time when "the lips of gay ladies quivered as they listened on Moorfields, and the grimy cheeks of the Kingswood colliers were scored with tears as they heard the new Gospel," insists that Wesley's great work was based upon a definite experience:—

This man spake what he knew and felt, and he made the people know and feel. . . It was a new voice with tears in it.

Behind Wesley the evangelist, however, there was Wesley the pioneer of the modern movement in social reform.

While proclaiming individual salvation, he ever aimed at the reconstruction of society on a Christian basis. He demanded the application of Christian principles to every sphere of human activity. He denounced the drink traffic, laboured for the emancipation of the slave, visited the prisons, and agitated for prison reform, opened a public dispensary and elementary schools for the poor, and strove incessantly for the purification of the national life.

In that noble career there was no time to devote to German philosophy, there had been a revelation of Christ and Him Crucified in that little room in Aldersgate Street, and that sufficed to make him a great worker for God.

The Man of Macedonia.

Experience makes us seriously discount some of the opinions of the "man in the street" upon the subject of the Gospel and its preachers. A recent article in the Daily Telegraph, however, written with much earnestness and evident sincerity, convinces us that the man of Macedonia still lives and cries out for help. The anonymous writer of the article, apparently a man of the world, says:—

The people are hungering and thirsting for ministers who are in earnest, who have a message which they must needs deliver.

We believe this up to a certain point; yet multitudes of people are doing nothing of the kind. We must not assume that because one man is phenomenally successful, other men who are not so successful have no message. At the same time, it is undoubtedly true that many, like the writer in the Telegraph, are waiting for a strong message. Their call should awaken the apostolic spirit in all true ministers of Christ. Mechanical sermons and literary essays in the pulpit need to be replaced by living, burning speech in the power of the Holy Ghost.

Made in Germany!

In a recent exhaustive review of two important volumes from the pens of Nonconformist pastors, the Church Times says:—

We have upon our table an increasing quantity of Dissenting contributions to theology. None of them can be called original, but they are generally remarkable for their scholarship, their power of thought, their devout temper, and their freshness of expression.

Unhappily, however, this tone is not kept up, and the reviewer professes to have found in the "Dissenting contributions to theology" evidences of a more or less openly expressed community of origin and intention, revealing "integral parts of a new Evangelical system now in process of construction."

They would all imply, though none of them would concede it, that the doctrinal sands upon which the houses of Separation were originally built are shifting . . . and that it has become necessary to underprop them with spiritual and intellectual support.

In this he traces the use of foreign materials "made mostly in Germany," materials, moreover, such as were "not simply declined by the first builders, but would even have been abhorred and denounced by them." There has undoubtedly of late years been a great development of scholarship in the ranks of the Nonconformist divines, but if the power of thought which accompanies it is to be expended in the work of criticising instead of rationalizing the accepted data of religious belief, the gain will be a doubtful one. The old builders wisely placed the spiritual before the intellectual.

As a Little Child.

The writer of an article in the Westminster Review, entitled "The Enigma of Life," speaks dogmatically from that platform upon which the sceptic invariably professes to stand above the men and women of ordinary every-day intellect. She raises the false issue that "no supernatural revelation has come to tell us what we are, whence we come, and whither we tend;" and it is strikingly evident from her paper that science has not made up for the alleged omission. Yet, through the centuries, the finest intellects of each age have rested upon the faith as it is in Jesus, just as they are doing to-day, and as they will continue to do long after these vapourings on the enigma, which Christ has solved, have vanished from our ken. A man assailed an open-air preacher with the objection that "no one ever came back from the dead to tell of the life beyond the grave." The preacher replied, "Pardon me, Christ and Lazarus did!"

Protestantism and Morality. In a recently-issued volume on "Christianity and Modern Civilization," the Roman Catholic writer, Mr. W. S. Lilly, states boldly that, as compared with Romanism, Protestantism conduces to greater moral laxity! Unhappily, the state of things in Great Britain is far from being what it ought to be; but, taking things as they stand, our land certainly has nothing to fear from a rigid comparison with any of the Roman Catholic countries of Europe in this matter. Not only is the low moral condition of the people of Spain, for instance, proverbial, but also that of the priesthood. Every student of Continental literature is only too well aware that a very large proportion of the works of the lighter writers of France and Italy are based upon the immorality of the Romish clergy. Professor Villari's volume, dealing with life and thought in Italy, certainly goes far to show that, so far as his country, at any rate, is concerned, Romanism is not a beneficial factor in public morality; and other noted observers and historians have furnished similar testimony in regard to Spain and France.

Magistrates and Licenses. The conference of magistrates held at Manchester last week, to consider the question of discretion in dealing with licenses, made it very clear that the licensing Bench in responsible cities, where drink has hitherto played havoc with municipal life, will give no quarter to the preposterous measures now before Parliament. Mr. Balfour's action in humbly submitting to the dictates of "the Trade" was very properly severely condemned. It is a fair retort, that if the Premier can keep "an open mind" upon such a grave question as that of Protection, he ought to have kept an open mind upon the question of the conduct of licensing justices, and not to have lent himself to the interested party. Mr. Arthur Chamberlain, we are glad to see, is taking a noble stand in the matter, and his attitude will have much weight, as the "trade" organs are quick to perceive. But surely, if the discretionary powers of the men on the spot—the Licensing Magistrates—are to be subjected to the revision of liquor-sellers, we may as well give up the pretence of government.

Science and Drink. Day by day valuable additions are being made to the great volume of scientific evidence against intoxicating drink. Dr. Alfred Wolff, in a remarkable paper on the increase of cancer in Great Britain, which appears in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, quotes figures to show that the deaths from cancer have risen in England from 67·6 per 100,000 in 1890 to 82·8 in 1900; and that in Prussia, Holland, and Norway, there has been an increase of over 30 per cent. It is equally noteworthy, however, that the districts in which the cancer death-rate is a high one are just those where beer is largely consumed. Dr. Wolff says:—

> The evidence is extremely convincing. The amount consumed in the United Kingdom, which was twenty-seven gallons per head in 1885, was thirty-one and-a-half gallons in 1900, and in the German Empire the consumption rose from ninety to 125 litres per head. In countries such as Italy and Hungary, in which the consumption of beer is small, the mortality from such diseases is small . . . . In no country could any instance be discovered in which a large consumption of beer was accompanied by a low cancer mortality.

Lending to the Lord. In a recent interview reported in a monthly contemporary, one of our prominent philanthropists had something to say which might with advantage be thoughtfully considered by many of those who postpone their generosity to the time when their wills are read. He remarked that a man could not "cut himself into slices" for sixty years and make money, and then devote ten years to the distribution of it; but must live the right kind of life, and help the people to live the right kind of life, "as he goes along." Pressed to define what joy he was able to get out of life, Mr. Lever's reply was full of suggestion:—

> I have passed beyond the stage of joy and reached the stage of satisfaction, and I find satisfaction only when I have accomplished some useful work. I have had the whole of the givings of years returned to me, as though God had said to me, "Here is your money back again, I don't want it."

The Responsibilty of Influence. The remarks of Mr. Justice Grantham in a recent case upon commercial integrity deserve very careful consideration by persons of position under whose names unscrupulous company promoters seek to shelter themselves. An honoured name is a bait to which many people rise, and, dishonestly used, the consequences to investors are likely to be disastrous. Some of the fraudulent companies floated by base men would have no chance of success but for the reliable names which appear upon the prospectus. The latter are often too easily lent to schemes which have never been really investigated. It is a serious thing for a man, by the loan of his name, to aid robbery even unwittingly. The lesson read by the judge applies in other directions besides commercial ones. The influence of a name is a precious gift, not to be unsparingly used.

The Power of Prayer. Deeply impressed with the proofs recently vouchsafed in Australia and elsewhere, as well as in our own land, of the wonderful efficacy of prayer in its relation to the operations of God's Spirit among the people, the missionaries of the Congo Balolo Mission have been asked to unite, during this week and next, in a special effort for the salvation of the people, the home-workers joining in earnest waiting upon God on their behalf. In that and many other districts God's people have long been faithfully ploughing the land and sowing the good seed; we feel that very many of our readers will gladly take their part by prayer in this special effort to garner in the harvest.

Do we mean our Prayers? The presence of the impotent man at the Pool of Bethesda (John vi.) was evidence of his desire to be cured. Yet the Lord's question, "Wilt thou be made whole?" startled him into a fresh earnestness of purpose. So it may be that Christian believers are too easily satisfied about their desire for the ingathering of souls. God's people may fairly be asked to face the question whether the petitions sometimes uttered regarding the heathen at home and abroad really express their deepest longings. If this were faithfully done by ministers and other leaders, we believe the result would be such a fresh realization of the spirit and power of prayer as would transform the church. In Congoland, and in every other region on the face of the earth, labourers in the Gospel would feel a new and marvellous support in their hours of need and difficulty; accompanied by the felt power of God.

Brotherhood. It has more than once been pertinently asked what the condition of the poor would be to-day if the amelioration of their lot had been left to the professors of the ethical and, so-called, humanitarian movements which profess to be substitutes for old-fashioned Christianity. A statement, to which much prominence has not been given, that the London Congregational Union's Free Shelter at Medland Hall has to be greatly enlarged, so that at least 500 men can be received nightly, may well illustrate the query, as it shows that while some humanitarians have been talking about brotherhood, others who have learned true humanity in the light of the Incarnation have been carrying into practice the lesson of Matt. xxv. 31-46.

The Indians at the Cape. Sir William Wedderburn's statement, at the recent meeting of the East Indian Association, as to the wretched position of our Indian fellow-subjects at the Cape certainly is a very painful one. It will come as a surprise to many people in this country to learn that these Indian settlers, who were induced to migrate to the Transvaal, and who are useful cultivators, domestic servants, and traders, and numbers of whom are professional men, are being treated worse than the black races were in America; that they are excluded from some districts altogether; that in others they are compelled to trade and live in ghettos; that in some they may not live or move about without a pass; and that they are forbidden in others to walk on the public footpaths, or use public conveyances. This sort of legislation harmonises badly with that Imperialism of which we hear so much, and is even still more out of keeping with the Christianity which teaches us that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men" (Acts xvii. 26).

The Child and the Parent. The striking list of terrible crimes committed by mere children which was published recently in the Daily News, has drawn from Dr. Forbes Winslow a statement of the utmost value. First, he points out the alarming growth of insanity in children, the average number of these under fifteen years of age admitted to asylums in England and Wales between 1895 and 1900 being 233 a year, and the majority of these were boys. He divides these into three classes: (1) hereditary lunatics; (2) those with ill-balanced organizations; (3) those who suffer from poverty or neglect. In most cases the lunacy of the child is directly attributable to the parents.

Christian Parentage. Everyone knows the famous reply of Napoleon to the question, "When should a mother commence to train her child?" "Twenty years before it is born," said the Emperor. It is just here that the failure comes. Our young people are not trained for the solemn function of parenthood. Few preachers touch the subject; yet it goes to the quick of our national and church life. Youths and maidens need training for Christian parentage. While we would not for a moment wish for the passing of that brightness which is associated with courtship and friendship between young people, we should like to see greater discouragement of the ignorance and joking associated with matters of this kind. The sacred name of "love" needs delivering from the flippancy and degradation which often surrounds it. Young people need to face the solemn responsibility of parentage, and to prepare for it in the sight of God.

Answers to Correspondents.

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

THIS paper brings to a close the series of answers to questions submitted in connection with the recent lectures at Exeter Hall. Many inquiries are still unanswered, and some continue to come in; but time and strength must now be reserved for the preparation of the lectures for their contemplated book form. A few words may be added in the way of final counsel and solemn warning.

1. In a book emanating from God we may expect to find MANY THINGS FAR ABOVE OUR GRASP; but Robert Hall has reminded us that "a religion without its mysteries would be a temple without its god." S. T. Coleridge also drew a fine distinction between apprehension and comprehension. There is a great gulf fixed between the two; but many a fact may be apprehended while its philosophy is not comprehended, as in the case of the phenomena of electricity, which mankind is utilising more and more as a motor, messenger, illuminator, heater, and even therapeutic, while as yet in profound ignorance of its essential nature.

2. It behoves us to BEWARE OF ORIGINALITY in matters of faith. The old maxim that, "what is true is not new, and what is new is not true," is of no little value. Parke Godwin used to say that he had heard a good deal of "original investigation, where the originality surpassed the investigation." Dr. C. F. Deans also remarked: "Believe your beliefs, and doubt your doubts; never make the mistake of doubting your beliefs and believing your doubts."

3. NEVER BE RECKLESS IN ABANDONING, without sufficient cause, a faith long cherished by the most devout souls of all ages. As Paley says: "We should never suffer what we know to be disturbed by what we do not know." And Butler well adds: "If a truth be established, objections are nothing; the one is founded on our knowledge, the other on our ignorance." There is an Arab fable of a dervish who was told that the "philosopher's stone" lay in a certain riverbed. He picked up pebble after pebble, only to throw it away; and actually picked up the treasure among the rest, but he had formed such a habit of casting away that he threw the philosopher's stone away, too, and never could recover it.

UNDER-PIN, NOT UNDER-MINE!

4. It is simply a CRIME TO SPREAD DOUBTS. Here I want to add one plain word of remonstrance. I hold it a CRIME as well as a blunder for any man, above all a professed Christian teacher, to publish his doubts. It is using a position of authority to lend sanction to an infidel or sceptical tendency. "Give us your convictions; as for doubts we have plenty already," said Goethe. There is no possible good coming from negations. "We speak that we do know." Men crave not even opinions, but convictions—truth confirmed by personal experience, wrought over in the inner history of one's own life—a truth proven to be fact by experiment. One word spoken from such heart knowledge is worth a thousand uttered from a book or creed. The tendency of the human heart is to doubt and disbelieve. Why give it any encouragement? Think of the wrong of undermining the faith when you ought to be underpinning it!

I consider it no part of a preacher's business to retail and repeat, and so advertise, the blasphemies of men. If professed Christian teachers would stop digging trenches for defence, and carry the war into the enemies' territory, preaching a positive, not a negative Gospel, there would be far more faith. Sometimes we only spread doubt and give infidelity currency. The chess-player who is kept on the defensive loses his game, and the general who has to look after the protection of his troops loses his battle. Satan achieves a great triumph when he turns an advocate of Christianity into an apologist.

5. Beware of RELIGIOUS TRIFLING. A man evades personal claims of God upon him by saying, "I have difficulties in my way—who was Cain's wife?" He deserves no better answer than John McNeill once gave: "If you want to preserve respectability you will not be too much concerned about another man's wife."* Another, who is not openly identified with any body of professed disciples, meets the duty of confession by the old objection, that he cannot identify himself with Christians because they are so inconsistent and imperfect. Mr. Spurgeon met a woman who had for a long time been looking for such a church as she could feel lived as they professed. He said, "You go on looking until you find a perfect body of believers. Only when you do, don't join them yourself, because you would bring into such an assembly your own imperfection! and spoil it." Even counterfeits only prove the sterling coin—it does not pay to counterfeit worthless money!

6. ALWAYS CHOOSE THE SAFE SIDE.—There is a story of a man hiring a driver for his carriage in a hilly district. He asked three applicants one question: "How near could you drive to the edge of a precipice with safety?" One thought, on a good road, he could venture within eighteen inches; the second, that he could go within a foot; the third replied that he should keep as far away as ever he could. "You're my man!" said the owner.

7. THE HUMAN SOUL RESTS NOWHERE BUT IN FAITH.—The novelist Zola made a piteous lament over a wasted life-effort, but reached a wise and correct conclusion, when he said: "For twenty-five years I have been endeavouring to teach Positivism, and must confess now that I have made a mistake, and that the only hope of France recovering her true position lies in her once more recovering her Christian faith." This testimony is all the more important and convincing, because it comes from one who is not prejudiced in favour of Christianity. France has tried infidelity, free-thinking, and Romanism, but they have not brought her true stability, well-being, and glory. The Gospel is her supreme need.

8. SOME CRITICISM ONLY BRINGS THE CRITIC INTO CONTEMPT.—They, in their judgment of the Oracles of God, betray their own ignorance and stupidity. It is possible to be one of the princes of this world, and yet crucify the Lord of Glory because the true glory of His person is not seen or known. The critical Greek esteemed as foolishness, and the self-confident Jew as a stumbling stone and rock of offence, that very Gospel which to the truly saved and divinely illumined soul is both the wisdom and power of God unto salvation.

AN APPOSITE FABLE.

Mythology tells how Pan, god of the shepherds, set up his rude reed music as rival to Apollo's lyre. He was pronounced defeated by Mount Imolus, all present approving, save only King Midas, whose ears were stretched to the dimensions of those of the ass as the reward for his obtuseness. Midas tried in vain to hide his long ears; but an attendant discovering the secret sought to keep it. Afraid to reveal, yet unable to conceal, he dug a hole in the ground and whispered his secret to the earth. But the reeds that grew, shaken by the wind, echoed the secret, whispering, "King Midas has ass's ears!"

There are those who seemed determined to eliminate the supernatural from the Inspired Word and the Divine Christ. Perhaps it is not altogether a simple opposition to the supernatural element in miracle and prophecy, but a lack of insight. Yet, thank God, there are thousands who do see and cannot be persuaded to the contrary. And they are not the world's princes, but sometimes only God's little ones, the babes to whom our Lord thankfully declared that things hidden from the wise and prudent, had been Divinely revealed (Matt. xi. 25, 26). Yet, it is barely possible that to them has been imparted a spiritual vision which no mere human brains or culture can command. God whispers His secret to His earth-born children, and the very reeds and rushes along His watercourses whisper to the wind secrets which none of the princes of this world knew; and, like the blind man who was unable to cope with the argument of the Pharisees, they humbly, but confidently, answer, "One thing I know; that, whereas I was blind, now I see!"

9. We add a final warning. Peter, conceding that, in Paul's writings, "are some things hard to be understood," adds, "which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction" (2 Peter iii. 16). The word here is "wrench," and is from the noun, strebloō, which means a windlass or wrench, an instrument of torture. The idea is that they who are untaught in Divine things and unstable in mind violently wrench or distort the deep things of the Word from their manifest intent and meaning, perverting what was meant for salvation to their own destruction. It is like hanging oneself on a rope meant to rescue from danger. Retzsch, in illustrating "Faust," represents the demons below as seeking to drag down a soul to ruin. The angels above, looking down with deep interest, pluck the roses of heaven and fling them down; and as they pass into the sulphurous atmosphere of the pit they turn to burning, blistering coals! What leaves God's hand as a rose of paradise may be turned into a burning coal by human ingratitude and rebellion.

Millions of believers have come, in simple childlikeness, to the Word of God, and there found salvation, sanctification, and satisfaction. To the same fountains of health and bliss, alas! millions of others (and never more than in our own day) are coming only to pervert God's best gift to a curse. But it is no fault of God's. A child's spirit is, as it ever has been, the condition of entrance into the Kingdom.

To simple faith, the gates ope wide,
And God is seen and known, within;
But those whose eyes are blind by sin
Blind error follow as their guide.

To childlike heart the way is plain,
A Higher Hand outstretched to lead;
A Father's love meets every need,
And confidence proves not in vain.

O, docile spirit, quiet, meek,
That one supremest ornament!
Be thou, my soul, henceforth intent
This jewel of the heart to seek.

* This was obeying the proverbial precept, "Answer a fool according to his folly."

A Song of Praise.

WHEN the morning brings the light,
When I lay me down at night,
In my working through the day,
As I journey on my way—
May there ever be in me
Songs of praise, O Christ, to Thee.

When afflictions lay me low;
When assaulted by the foe;
When temptations strong assail;
When I fear my strength will fail—
In my weakness, strengthen me,
Praise to give, O Christ, to Thee.

As I read the Book of books,
As my hope to Heaven looks,
As I through abounding grace
Gain fresh glimpses of Thy face—
Then my gladdened heart will be Filled with praise, O Christ, to Thee.

When I leave this earthly state,
When I enter Heaven's gate,
When Thy glory there I see,
And recall Thy love to me—
Full of joy, my voice I'll raise,
Thee, O Jesus Christ, to praise.

But the joy is not complete
Till Thou come Thy saints to meet—
When the body and the soul
Re-united are made whole—
Then, how great the song will be,
Praise, O Jesus Christ, to Thee.

Then will gather round the throne,
All redeemed by blood, Thine own,
Out of every clime and race,
All the subjects of Thy grace—
These will join in one accord,
Singing praise to Thee, their Lord.

THE

Science and Mystery of Prayer

By Rev. FREDERIC C. SPURR.

III.—Our Lord the Model of Prayer.

HAVING comprehended the radical principles of prayer, we now proceed to examine our subject in its application to life. And the first thing to remark is, that prayer is not simply, or chiefly, a remedy designed to counteract the effects of sin. Had sin never existed, prayer would still have been an essential element in the life of man. The proof of this is in the life of our Divine Lord, who, although sinless and perfect, was, throughout His life, a Man of prayer.

The prayers of Jesus, however, belong to two orders, corresponding to the unique relationship sustained by our Lord towards God and men. Unless this is firmly grasped, we can never understand the records of the Gospels. It is impossible for anyone who does not believe both in the proper Deity and in the proper humanity of our Lord, to harmonize the different qualities of our Lord's prayers.

The prayers of Jesus belonging to the first order are specifically recorded in the fourth Gospel xiv. 16; xvii. 9, 15, 20. These prayers were offered on the night of the Passion, and they represent our Lord's final will and testament on behalf of His people. These final prayers were not, in our sense of the word, petitions. They were the requests of One who was conscious that He had the right to demand what He willed. The whole setting of these prayers makes it clear that we are dealing with something absolutely unique. On the same night Jesus had linked Himself with the Father in a wonderful manner (John xiv. 23; xvi. 28; xvii. 5), and He "willed"—not begged—that certain things should be accomplished (xvii. 24). This order of prayer is closed to us. The very best man in the world dare not say to God what the Master did on that dread night of the Passion. At the utmost we say, "If it be Thy will"—never "I will."

THE LAW OF PETITION.

But the second order of our Lord's prayers is open to us. He prayed as our great Head, and He wills us to follow Him there. We, however, are sinners, and our prayers must ever contain the element of confession—an element there could never be in His prayers. Prayer was the atmosphere of His life; but it is recorded for our instruction that upon certain occasions Jesus retired to pray in a specific manner. The substance of these prayers is generally concealed from us. It is very remarkable, however, that once only is it recorded that He offered petition, but that one occasion is sufficient to make us comprehend the law of petition. At the instant Jesus prayed, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from Me," He guarded His prayer with a word which serves to draw forth the soul's deepest trust, and to fix the limit to all petition—"Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Thus, petition is not the bold and petulant demand for whatever we desire to have; it is the exercise of a holy desire subject to the holy will of God.

Space alone prevents a detailed examination of the passages which record our Lord's prayers. The merest outline must suffice. It is essential, however, to notice that upon each recorded occasion when He specifically prayed, He had reached a crisis in His human life.

At every new departure He prayed, and in this we must remember He is our great example.

1. At His baptism (Luke iii. 21). This struck the keynote of His life. He steeped His initial action in prayer. Whoever would follow Him must do likewise. A chief reason why so many people's lives break asunder is that they have excluded God from their beginnings.

2. In the full tide of His ministry He "kept withdrawing (lit.) into the wilderness and praying" (Luke v. 15, 16). That again was a crisis, and Jesus met it with prayer. Popularity is always a grave crisis for him who works for God. Many have been completely ruined by popularity. Jesus points out the way whereby His followers may help the crowd without being spoiled—it is the way of constant withdrawing for prayer.

3. Another crisis in His life was the choice of the twelve Apostles. That was preceded by a night of prayer (Luke vi. 12). He "who knew all men" waited upon God an entire night before choosing His life companions, to teach His disciples, surely, one of the most necessary lessons for them to learn. The companions we choose have the power to elevate or to degrade us—nothing more serious than to admit another life into the fibre of our own; nothing more important, then, than to take God into our confidence as to the choice of our comrades. But there are few things which people pray less about than the choice of their intimate companions! Many a life would have risen that has, unhappily sunk, if a period of prayer had preceded the selection of the life comrade.

4. When the supreme moment arrived for the declaration of our Lord's Deity, "He was alone praying" (Luke ix. 18) ere He asked the decisive question, "Whom do men say that I am?" This is most significant, for it clearly shows that (be it said with deepest reverence), in asking this supreme question, there was no tinge of vanity. Here, again, the Saviour becomes our example. Every Christian worker must try and discover what kind of an impression he is making upon those who listen to him. But it is one of the most difficult and delicate questions that a man can ask—"What do men say of me?" We must first breathe for this alone can guard from chagrin or haughtiness.

5. The Transfiguration was another crisis in our Lord's life. It was the greatest height that His human nature achieved, and it was accomplished through prayer—"As He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was altered" (Luke ix. 28). At first sight it would appear as if the Transfiguration was so unique an event that it could not possibly be placed before us for emulation. Yet, remarkable thing, the exact word that is used to record our Lord's Transfiguration is applied in two other places to Christian life. (1) "Be not conformed to this age, but be ye transfigured" (Rom. xii. 2); (2) "We all, with unveiled face, are transfigured" (2 Cor. iii. 18). Do we not know lowly and saintly people who possess the transfigured heart and countenance? Prayer produces this marvellous change. Every life may become radiant with the light of God, if the heart abides in communion with Him.

6. Astronomers tell us that our world is a child of the sun—an offshoot of its life, which under the Creator's direction has reached its present perfection. So that body of prayer, known to us as the Pater Noster, is the child of our Lord's own prayers. "As He was praying," the disciples asked that they might be taught to pray; and Jesus gave "the Lord's Prayer" as a model to all (Luke xi.). Struck with the character of our Lord's address to the Father, the disciples felt by contrast the poverty of their own prayers; hence they asked for instruction. Prayer in Him begat thirst for prayer in them. In this surely our Lord would have us follow Him. He would have our own communion with God so real and attractive that men, perceiving its effect upon us, would demand our secret. In this way the Kingdom of God is to be extended, not so much by eloquent speech or logical demonstrations of truth, as by the force of holy living, the product of our communion with God.

In many other places in the Gospels do we find references to our Lord's special prayers. Each of them is full of suggestion for us, and each is a call to seek communion with God as He did.

In the light of His prayers we understand the grandeur and the force of his own promise: "If ye shall ask anything in My Name, I will do it" (John xiv. 14). To ask in Christ's name is more than to invoke His name and to plead His merits; it is to be so saturated with His Spirit that we may boldly pray as He might pray. As the late Prof. Godet phrased it: "To ask in His name is to be in vital communion with Him; to be one with Him; to be as representing Him." And whoever is thus one with the Divine Lord cannot miss his goal, nor present prayers which remain unanswered.

The Ol' Tunes.

You kin talk about yer anthems,
An' yer arias an' sich,
An' yer modern choir-singin'
That you think so awful rich;
But you orter heerd us youngsters
In the times now far away,
A-singing' o' the ol' tunes
In the ol'-fashioned way!

There was some of us sung treble
An' a few of us growled bass;
An' the tide o' song flowed smoothly
With its 'comp'niment o' grace;
There was spirit in that music,
An' a kind o' solemn sway,
A-singin' o' the ol' tunes
In the ol'-fashioned way.

I remember oft o'standin'
In my homespun pantaloons—
On my face the bronze an' freckles
O' the suns o' youthful Junes—
Thinkin' that no mortal minstrel
Ever chanted sich a lay
As the ol' tunes we was singin'
In the ol'-fashioned way.

The boys 'ud always lead us,
An' the girls 'ud all chime in,
Till the sweetness o' the singin'
Robbed the list'nin' soul o' sin;
An' I used to tell the parson
'Twas as good to sing as pray,
When the people sung the ol' tunes
In the ol'-fashioned way.

How I long ag'in to hear 'em
Pourin' forth from soul to soul,
With the treble high an' meller,
An' the bass's mighty roll;
But the times is very diff'rent,
An' the music heerd to-day
Ain't the singin' o' the ol' tunes
In the ol'-fashioned way.

Little screechin' by a woman,
Little squawkin' by a man,
Then the organ's twiddle-twaddle,
Jest the empty space to span.
An' ef you should even think it,
'Tis n't proper fur to say
That you want to hear the ol' tunes
In the ol'-fashioned way.

But I think that some bright mornin',
When the toils of life air o'er,
An' the sun o' heaven arisin'
Glads with light the happy shore—
I shall hear the angel chorus,
In the realms of endless day,
A-singin' o' the ol' tunes
In the ol'-fashioned way.

Oxford Notes.

THE working of the New Education Act is creating much discussion in Oxford. A Passive Resistance League has been formed, the new chairman of which is Dr. Massie, of Mansfield College.

During the coming week the conferring of degrees will take place in the Sheldonian Theatre. Among the recipients of the Doctor of Divinity Degree is the Rev. C. J. Casher, curate of St. Aldate's Parish Church, of which Canon Christopher is the beloved rector.

At the seventeenth annual meeting of the trustees of Mansfield College an eminently successful report was given. A larger number of students have passed through the college than ever before. Five graduates have entered the ministry. Professor Buchanan Gray has received the degree of D.D. from Aberdeen University; and Professor Garvie, D.D. from Glasgow University. The college begins its eighteenth year with twenty-eight students—twenty theological and eight arts. The Congregationalists and Dr. Fairbairn are to be warmly congratulated.

This week the great Bi-Centenary celebration of the birth of John Wesley was held in Blenheim Park, Oxford, by permission of the Duke of Marlborough. From all parts of the district Methodists assembled, and among the speakers was Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, June 28. Psalm xli.
The Song of Convalescence.

THE Psalmist is surely none other than David who complains of the treachery of Ahithophel. Perhaps the trouble of his conscience had led to the sickness of body under which he was labouring when this Psalm was composed. Such an illness would, at least, explain how Absalom succeeded in maturing his plans without let or hindrance. David comforts himself with the thought that, though his sky was overcast, yet God would not forget him. He seems to have caught a glimpse of the beatitude, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy" (1-3).

4-9. Here is a picture of his sufferings. He is stretched on a bed of languishing. Beneath the pressure of sore sickness and pain he can in no wise lift up himself; and he recognises that there has been a close connection between his sickness and his sin. "Heal my soul, for I have sinned against Thee." Under these circumstances one of his enemies comes, under the pretence of a friendly solicitude, to visit him. He speaks kindly, and notices any symptoms of the depth and inveteracy of the disease. Then he hurries away to tell how ill he had found the patient. We have depicted the scene in the plotter's house. "A thing of Belial," they whisper, "is fastened upon him." And the Psalmist is pricked in his heart to the quick, as our Lord was, when He had occasion to quote verse 9.

10-13. So the sick man is driven back on God. They had said, "He shall rise up no more;" but he cries with unabated faith, "Raise me up." "That I may requite them" is a note that falls below the full chord that the Master struck in the Sermon on the Mount; but it was natural to the days when God's righteous acts on the behalf of His people were principally in view. The psalm closes radiantly; the enemy triumphs not; and God upholds. Oh, soul of man, live radiantly even in thy sick-chamber. God lives and loves.

MONDAY, June 29. Psalm xlii.
The Song of the Exile.

With this Psalm we begin the second book of the Psalter. The first eight Psalms are ascribed to the sons of Korah, who were Levites and keepers of the door of the sanctuary (1 Chron. ix. 19). They retained that office even in the second Temple (Neh. xi. 19).

This and the following Psalm make one, and fall into three parts, each closing with the same refrain (5, 11, xliii. 5). "Longings and tears, remembrance of festal hours passed in the sanctuary, but gone beyond recall, melt the singer's soul, while taunting enemies hiss continual sarcasms at him as God's forsaken. But his truer self silences these lamentations, and cheers the feebler 'soul' with clear notes of trust and hope, blown in the refrain, like some trumpet call rallying dispirited fugitives to the fight. The stimulus serves for a moment; but once more courage fails, and once more plaints and longings wail forth."

1-5. The soul is here compared to a hind (for pants is the feminine form of the verb) which has been "heated in the chase." It has lost its correspondence with God, and is disquieted. It pants and thirsts, is cast down and rendered almost hopeless. However dear the objects of human love, and however many the alleviations of this mortal life, none can slake the soul's thirst—none but God. The depression is intensified when we are deprived of our wonted place in the sanctuary. But, after all, is not God near at hand?

6-11. Once more the soul alleges reasons for its depression; but the warp is shot through with the woof of hope. The singer believes that God will command His angel, Loving-kindness, to take the lyre, and sing of Him. Even there, and in the night, when God seems to have forsaken and forgotten, He is still "my rock." Dare to affirm it, though thou canst not feel it.

TUESDAY, June 30. Psalm xliii.
The Song of the Twin-Angels.

Apparently the nation was in arms against this lonely man, or against the cause he loved, and if it were not that the Hermons and Mizar indicate another locality, we should naturally find an origin for these two Psalms in Absalom's revolt. The prime mover of the national revolt seems to have been a deceitful and unjust man; and God appeared to have cast off and left the soul to the oppression of the enemy.

At such times we sigh for those twin angels —God's light and God's truth; and ask that they may be sent forth to lead us to God's holy hill and altar. But these are not for us. Not in this mountain, nor yet in Jerusalem, are we to worship the Father. For us the holy hill is Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, where an innumerable company of angels, and the spirits of the just made perfect, await us.

As the Psalmist sings, he soars. He began by speaking of God as a living God (2); then he spoke of Him as the God of his life (8), and his rock (9), but now he describes Him as the gladness of his joy (4). "O God, my God!"

"In darkest shades, if He appear,
My dawning is begun,
He is my soul's bright morning-star,
And He my rising sun."

"I saw," said George Fox, "a black dark sea, it was the sea of sorrow; and a very bright and beautiful sea, it was the sea of joy in God; and this broke into that and swept it away for ever."

WEDNESDAY, July 1. Psalm xliv.
A Commemorative Ode of the Great Past.

1-8. A wistful look backward to days already "old," when God fought for His people. The whole story of the Exodus from Egypt and the conquest of Canaan is gathered up in verses 1-3. But what a contrast is presented in the second stanza (9-16)! What a story of rejection and disgrace! The armies had gone forth, but had turned back before the enemy, and the defenceless flock had been ravaged by the savage foe. The sheep were sold, but no price or emolument accrued to the Divine Shepherd; and as the flock, purchased at much cost, are trampled down, the nations make fun out of their agonies, and nod their heads in scorn.

17-22. In spite of all, the people remained true to the national covenant. "The place of jackals" is evidently the place of slaughter, referred to in the previous verses. Through this, and through thick darkness, the nation had passed, but had remained true to the monotheism of Sinai. Surely this must refer to the captivity in Babylon! Only during those seventy years was Israel absolutely true to the national covenant.

23-26. On the ground of integrity of heart, and of sore suffering, the soul appeals for help. But we may take our stand in the Mediator and Advocate, by whom we may enter even into the holiest. God neither slumbers nor sleeps, but to the expectant heart He seems to tarry long. But at last the Redeemer will come to Bethany, and raise our beloved even from the grave (John xi.).

THURSDAY, July 2. Psalm xlv.
A Marriage Ode.

Oh, Master, it is of Thee I sing. I cannot keep back the words that spring from my heart. My love boils over into speech. My King, it is easy to write when my soul is glowing thus!

Thou art fair beyond the sons of men. Though thy face was marred with pain, and sad with sorrow, it is beautiful with the light and triumph of eternity; and as I see Thy smile, I know that Thou discernest already the victory that shall be. How sweetly Thou speakest to Thine erring and unworthy servant; grace pours from Thy lips; none ever spake as Thou!

But see how Thine enemies gather, squadron on squadron, rank on rank! Take sword and shield; mount Thy white horse; press forward where the fight is sternest, and the foemen thickest. Ah, Thine arm doth terrible execution! The giant forms of drink, impurity, and hatred, yea of death and the grave, fall under Thee, and Thy throne is established for ever and aye. And now comes Thy marriage day—the day for which the world, yea, and heaven, is waiting.

Thy Church has made herself ready, and in the rapture of this hour has forgotten that she was born of the world. Thou lovest and desirest her, and she worships Thee, as she awaits the consummation of Thy wooing. Her embroidered raiment was Thy gift; her cloth of gold won by Thy bloody sweat. And now with her train she sweeps into Thy palace. So shall we be for ever with the Lord! And Thy name shall linger on the air, thy praise shall ascend for ever. Thou shalt reign through all ages, and we with Thee—world without end.

FRIDAY, July 3. Psalm xlvi.
A Psalm of Victory.

This Psalm may celebrate Jehoshaphat's deliverance from the powerful coalition that threatened his kingdon (2 Chron. xx.). But it is even better to refer it to the destruction of Sennacherib. Remarkable parallelisms may be detected between it and Isaiah. Compare, for instance, v. 4 with Isa. xxxiii. 21.

1-3. Here is chaos. The earth's face is changed by terrific convulsions, the mountains totter to their overthrow and sink in the raging billows, the spray and foam are dashed high in the air, and even to heaven. But amid it all, God is a refuge and stronghold. When He is with His saints, they are sheltered as in a high tower rooted in impregnable foundations.

4-7. In this second strophe the same contrast is presented with reference to hostile kingdoms. Nations rage, kingdoms are moved. But amid it all, God is still a refuge and stronghold. The refrain is repeated. What He had been amid the rage of the storm, that He would be amid the rage of the ungodly.

The defence and help of God are set forth in a beautiful natural image. Alone among the great cities of the ancient world, Jerusalem had no river. Babylon had the Euphrates, Thebes the Nile, and Rome the Tiber, but the Holy City was perched high among the hills. Nevertheless, she would be at no disadvantage, for what rivers were to others, her God would be to her. If the nations resemble stormy seas, God's help is sure. But when God succours His people, He is never behind His time—He comes at morning-dawn; when He utters His voice the earth melts.

8-11. Men are asked to tread a recent battlefield; "the broken bows, splintered spears, and half-charred chariots" of Israel's foes enforce the burden of the Psalmist. Well might Luther love this Psalm!—

Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott.
(A Mighty Fortress is our God.)

SATURDAY, July 4. Psalm xlvii.
A Festal Hymn.

This Psalm probably celebrates the same great national crisis safely passed as the foregoing one. It is an appeal to all nations to acclaim Jehovah as their King.

1-4. A summons to all nations to acknowledge the sovereignty of God. He is a great King over all the earth; but how blessed it is when the individual soul can say: "Thou shalt subdue my enemies under Thy feet. They are too many and too mighty for me. Interpose on my behalf. And Thou shalt choose my lot in life, whether for richer or poorer, whether in sickness or in health." Happy is the soul that has no care except to please God and to do His will, leaving Him to care for all beside.

5-8. The Ascension. God, who came down to deliver, now returns triumphantly on high, and takes His seat on His holy throne. He rides up on a chariot of praise, and the music of harping minstrelsy lingers in His wake. What is this but the Ascension of the Redeemer, who is gone up on high, leading captivity captive, that He may succour from His throne those whom He saved by His cross?

9. The Conversion of the World. The singer beholds the kings and princes of the wide world gathering with the chosen people to acknowledge the God of Abraham. With poetical license He describes them as one people. The greatness of His exalted state fills his heart. Oh that it may elicit our adoration and praise. "Sing with the harp to our King!" F. B. M.

Awakening in Germany.—3.

By COUNT A. BERNSTORFF.

WHAT is the tendency of the whole movement? The answer is in fact very simple. Religious life! True conversion to Christ, the sanctification of the believer, work for Christ.

To English readers it will be remarkable to hear that the whole movement stands within the national churches. To understand this one must realize that the great majority of the people belong to the State churches, and though we very clearly realize the weak side of these, we think it right to recognise the historical state of things. We wish to bring souls to Christ without bringing them face to face with Church questions. We also think that the Lord sanctioned this principle, as all the men through whose agency the Lord has granted this revival are members of the State Church.

We are, of course, at heart all Evangelical Alliance men, but we think it more practical to work within the Church. This gives us a wide field of activity; and though we gladly recognise all that the other denominations have done, we often find their members more narrowly tied to their own church than we are ourselves.

Those who call us "Methodists," and who always repeat that we have "schismatic" tendencies, have said in one of the synods that we seemed to change the word of our Lord, "in the world but not of the world," into "in the Church but not of the Church." This, however, is not right. We fairly remain members of one Church. What we desire is life and liberty. We want spiritual life in the Church, and a certain liberty of action. This liberty consists chiefly in the arrangement of meetings without requiring the permission of the pastor. We must gratefully acknowledge that the Church leaves us much liberty. The Prussian law on associations, which gives the right of holding public meetings, is a great safeguard for our work. The personal position of the Church to the "fellowship" must depend upon the persons concerned. If the pastor is a large-hearted, and the evangelist a considerate man, all goes off in a friendly way; if not, there is often difference.

This state of things makes it more difficult for the Evangelical Alliance to make such headway as might be desired, but in the end it will after all gain by the movement, because it is permeated by a large-hearted Evangelical Alliance spirit, because it brings true believers together, and teaches them practically that unity in spirit is more valuable than conformity in church matters. The Evangelical Alliance does not mean to unite the churches, it brings the living members of Christ to a sense of their oneness.

THE EFFECT OF EVANGELISM.

Another important side of the matter must not be forgotten. The Evangelistic Movement has done much to increase activity in the churches. Wherever a Gospel hall was erected, the pastor generally found it his duty to begin Bible-classes in his church. In the Easter week, for three years a gathering of ministers takes place for "pastoral fellowship." No theological questions are discussed, but the pastors seek mutual edification. The evangelistic movement has not only created a large number of conferences throughout the land for the deepening of spiritual life; it has done much beyond its own sphere of action towards promoting real spiritual life. The tone of many sermons has been raised. Even many of those who do not join the movement now preach conversion and sanctification, and promote Bible study. In many parts (as the Salvation Army originated the Church Army in England) church societies for evangelization have been formed.

The movement stands before two dangers at present. The one is that some pastors, who were originally friendly, now turn to the more ecclesiastical organizations. For instance, one of our ablest evangelists, Pastor Keller, now often strongly attacks the movement, reproaching its narrowness of views. We can confidently leave this to the Lord. He has called us to the work and has owned it. We rejoice when others also work, though on somewhat different lines, but we go on in the way we think right. Of greater importance is the other danger. In measure as the movement grows, discussion between the workers and inward difficulties arise. But in the full confidence that the cause is the Master's, we leave this also in His hands, trusting that He will preserve the movement and use it to prepare His Church for the blessed day of His return.

In Need of a Friend.

The following is taken from the latest report of Mrs. Wall's Evangelistic and Medical Mission Work among the poor in Rome.

TURNING into a narrow street we stopped before a good sized entrance. "This," said the Biblewoman who was with me, "is where the blind man, about whom I was talking to you, lives. He comes with his mother-in law, old Rosa, to the meetings for the very poor."

There was no need of ringing or knocking, for the door stood open, and just inside it sat the blind man trying to keep himself warm by holding his hands over a pan of burning coals.

"Where is Rosa?" asked the Biblewoman. "She is behind there," said a little boy pointing to an old screen, "but she is ill." For a few seconds I could not see anything on account of the darkness, but gradually I was able to distinguish the form of a poor woman crouching at the further end of the room. There were two beds in this cellarlike habitation, a part of which was curtained off to accommodate another family. There was nothing on the planks on which Rosa sat but a little loose straw and a few rags, a hard resting-place indeed for an old and infirm woman. It was evidently acute rheumatism from which she was suffering. "I took her to the hospital yesterday," said her daughter who had come forward to meet us, "but they would not receive her, as she has no fever. What can I do for her? I do what I can to support my blind husband and seven children, by going very early every morning to the market to work. But what are the few halfpence I can earn when they are divided among ten people? My husband sometimes goes the round of the shops on Saturdays and gets something in that way. Several times he has been imprisoned for begging; yet what else can he do?"

"But some of your children are able to work?"

"The eldest is here; she used to earn something by making bricks, but now she is out of work. My boy of twelve comes next. He is employed in a shop, but only gets a few soldi a week. The other children are too young to work. Here is the youngest"—and she led us to one of the beds on which lay sleeping peacefully a sweet little babe of eight months looking as well and as happy as though she were any rich man's child.

"How good God is to keep you and your children in such good health notwithstanding all your difficulties and privations," I could not help exclaiming. "Yes, indeed," answered the woman brightly, and she looked lovingly at her children as though she would not spare one of them for all the gold of the earth!

My heart was full of pity and admiration for that woman who was cheerful and hopeful notwithstanding the hard and unequal struggle she has to wage with want, and I longed to do all that was possible to help and encourage her.

Leaving a little money with her so that she might buy some food for her mother, we told her to send one of her children to us for some medicine. We prepared a comfortable bed for the poor sick woman, and shall do our best to find a place of service for the young girl.

May we not hope and pray that brighter days are in store for this poor family; brighter not only in a material sense, but also in being gladdened by the light of the love of God being shed abroad in their hearts?

In the Heart of Brazil.

MANAOS is the centre of the great rubber district of Brazil. It has a population of more than 45,000. Near the brow of a hill overlooking the city stands the home and chapel of Bethesda Mission, founded in 1888 by Rev. Marcus E. Carver. The city then had a population of only 12,000, and in every way indicated the lack of foreign energy. The difficulties of these days can be imagined, when it is stated that Mr. Carver began work there alone, 1,000 miles distant from any other mission.

From small beginnings a vigorous mission has grown, with an ordained Indian evangelist, two deacons, and three Bible-readers, and many members. The workers are all natives, except one of the deacons, who is a Portuguese. All are hard-working people, and can, therefore, only give their evenings and Sundays to helping on the Mission.

PHASES OF WORK.

In a short account of the Mission, Mr. Carver says:—"Aside from the religious part of our work, we have a day-school which last year numbered forty. The children are of all ages, from three to sixteen, unkempt, and almost nude. Touched with their poverty, I have learned to run a sewing-machine, and, with the aid of our Mission workers, we make them clothing from the calicoes and other light materials given me while in North America. The work I most love is looking after the sick and poor in the hospitals and in their homes; or, as I have often done, caring for them in our own home.

"We push on with our labour, lacking oftimes the bare necessaries of life, always the least of its luxuries, or what would be called its comforts at home; feeling that the dear Master abides with us. The sick native in the mud hut, the English, American, French, Hungarian, German or Polish stranger have looked their recompense; and if that look has come from eyes already dimmed by death, and if the form someone has loved in the far away homeland has been laid in the grave by us, almost strangers, we have thanked God that we could be there to care for them.

AN INDIAN BOY'S TRAINING.

"Our Mission Home was begun in 1889, and the chapel in 1896. This has been the result of my own hands and brain, supplemented in a small degree by our poor people of the Mission. All I have earned (and this has been my chief means of support and also of the Mission) has been done by giving private lessons aside from our free school work already mentioned. Of late also some stray contributions have come from friends in North America."

Among others who receive kindness and Christian teaching in this Home is a little Indian boy of ten, who was with Mr. John Nonnen and Mr. George Witte at their Mission near the Tacertus river in Northern Amazonas. When, at the death of Nonnen and Senhor Luiz, the Mission had to be given up for a time, this boy was taken down by Mr. Witte and left in Mr. Carver's charge. Pastor Carver writes in a letter dated April 1, 1903:—

"Pedro is a dear fellow, and a boy one would be proud of anywhere. I am teaching him as I should my own, and who knows what the future may have in store for him? I am convinced of one thing, we must have well-trained native helpers, and men who will not be moved here and there easily, but who will stand firm to the faith of the Gospel. Inconstancy is the great bane of the Brazilian race, just as is the case with all Latin races.

A DISASTROUS STORM.

"Our general mission work goes on well, and is encouraging. We have, however, discouragements in many ways, but I cling to the words of the blessed Master, 'Lo, I am with you alway.' Last month we had a terrible storm, which demolished my little home; I am now engaged upon the work of repair. I don't know whence God will send the means to put things straight, as it will cost at least £100; but it must be done, and He will send the means, I am sure, ere the end of the year." E. N.

A Pioneer Indian Missionary.

THE letters and journals of William Tobias Ringeltaube, the pioneer missionary of the London Missionary Society in Travancore, have been collected by Rev. William Robinson, of the London Missionary Society, Salem, South India, and published through the Sheffield Independent Press. The small, unpretentious volume, which has some interesting illustrations, including a likeness of Ringeltaube, is a loving, sympathetic, and graceful tribute by a missionary of to-day to one who laboured a century ago, a man who should never be forgotten. In Travancore itself his name has a holy fragrance until now; he is known as "Ringeltaube, the Rishi," that is, "a holy Sage, supposed to be more or less divine, through rigid abstraction and mortification." From the time of his becoming a Christian, when he was a youth in Silesia, to the end of his life, he was a man much given to prayer, and this was a habit which the people of India could appreciate. He is a saint in their eyes, and coming generations will revere his memory as the British people revere the memories of Wycliffe, Baxter, Bunyan, and Knox. But given to prayer as he was, his piety was essentially of the Western type, practical, aggressive, much enduring. The love of Christ drew him away from a dearly-loved home to a land where he was practically an exile, and from which he never returned.

THE SECRET OF POWER.

Like all great and efficient workers for Christ, Ringeltaube had in his own soul a strong and vivid apprehension of the reality and power of the grace of God; his own relation to God in Christ was clear; the Cross was to him his only hope. God opened in his heart a fountain of love that never failed. His first work was in connection with the S.P.C.K., and took him to Calcutta; but this was not according to his wishes, and he was not happy until he came into association with the L.M.S. The destitute condition of India in 1806 may be seen from the fact that at that time the Baptist and London Missionary Societies had four men in Bengal, two in Vizagapatam, one in Madras, one in Bombay, and Ringeltaube in the extreme south—eight in all! How great is the contrast now! Mr. Robinson points out that "Maharasan was the first of two solitary Christians in Travancore in 1806. The church commenced in the courtyard of his house. In 1901, the adherents, including baptized Christians, numbered 65,714; schools, 368; scholars of both sexes, 16,540; contributions of native churches, Rs.26,581; buildings for public worship, 363. Mission hospitals, which serve all classes of people irrespective of race or creed, treated 67,000 patients in 1901; while the mission press, since 1853, has issued 7,301,260 publications."

To follow the story of this missionary's abounding labours, to mark him going about among the people dressed almost as one of them, speaking their vernacular as freely as they did, giving away his small means to their poor, preaching to congregations, pleading with and instructing individual souls; to hear him pour out his grief for sin and failure, his gratitude for mercies, his yearning for home and all the dear ones; to note how shrewdly he reads the motives and characters of the natives, and how soberly, with what rigid exactness, yet wide charity, he measures the results of his work—to do this is to get some idea of what it costs to win a corner of a country for Christ. It is like spade cultivation. Yet even in these early days converts of remarkable strength and fidelity were made by the grace of God. The story of one of them, Vetdamanickam, may take place with any story in Christian annals.

So few were white men in Travancore a century ago that Ringeltaube sometimes did not see one for four or five weeks together. But he had a few who understood and appreciated him and his work, Lieut-Colonel Trotter and Colonel Macaulay, uncle of Lord Macaulay, among the number, and he had occasional fellowship with brother missionaries who were as consecrated to their holy work as himself.

In 1816, Ringeltaube's health having given way, he decided to leave his work in the care of a native whom he could trust, and whom General Munro had promised to supply with the necessary funds. "Ringeltaube then called all the people to Mayiladi Church. Having given Vetdamanickam authority in writing to appoint or dismiss catechists and teachers, Ringeltaube preached and administered the Lord's Supper; then, calling Vetdamanickam, he placed his hands on his head and blessed him. Taking off his surplice, Ringeltaube put this upon Vetdamanickam, and exhorted him to be faithful. Then, amid the weeping of the vast congregation, he said, 'In this world ye will not see me again; in the heavenly world we shall meet.' So saying, he took leave of them, and, giving all his furniture and utensils to his servants and the poor, left for Europe."

Some letters written by him after this date were duly received in London and in Germany, but of him nothing more was heard. Many suggested explanations of his end were put forward. Mr. Robinson's hypothesis is that Ringeltaube's letters show that he was seriously ill of liver disease, and was doubtful whether he would live long. In topical countries disease of this kind rapidly runs its course, and probably Ringeltaube died between Malacca and Batavia, and was buried at sea. "No man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day." Soldiers in the Nilgiris.

WELLINGTON is in the Nilgiri Hills, South India. At the foot of the hills lies Mettapullaiyam, fifteen hours' from Madras, whence a tiny train carries passengers up the hills.

Leaving the hot plains behind, it is good to be borne slowly up, amid the tea and coffee plantations, and trees and overhanging foliage almost as fresh in their greenness as in England. The terminus is Coonoor, which stands at an altitude of some 5,600 ft., and from these Wellington is three miles distant.

At the top of the "Commissariat Road" stands the pretty white bungalow whose very exterior speaks a welcome—those who know it know that the signboard outside tells truly that it is indeed a "Soldiers' Home."

On entering, the first impression is of prevailing brightness. The cheerful clink of cups and saucers at one end mingles with the strain of music from the other, and bright faces greet the entrance of the visitor. The outer room is used as a sitting and reading-room, and from it opens another, in which every evening meetings are held and Christ made known as the soldiers' Saviour and Keeper. Mr. Charles Studd, who has charge of the Union Church at Ootacamund, some nine miles from Wellington, comes to help in taking the meeting whenever possible, and all friends interested in the work are cordially welcomed. A recreation-ground stands high at one side of the house, and at the back is a garden, while beyond and around is the beauty of the "everlasting hills."

Up there in the quiet beautiful hills, where "every prospect pleases," the powers of evil are as strong to influence the soul as in any city with its noise and rush, and the Soldiers' Home is a light that "giveth light to all" who come within the reach of its friendly doors.

Mrs. Moore (who will gladly forward reports of her work to any one interested) has opened branch homes at Ahmednajur, Cannanore, and Malapuram, and is just now much in need of £25 for furniture, &c. ADA J. GRAVES.

Pandita Ramabai's Work.—We have just received a letter from "E. L. S." expressing the great joy of meeting with many missionaries at the Pandita Ramabai's Homes. One such visitor recently wrote in the visitors' book that "Mukhti is a bucketful of diamonds destined to sparkle for all eternity," while another added, "I always find that the work here has enlarged and opened new departments between my visits. I am impressed by the simplicity of faith by which it is carried on." We much regret to learn that there has been recently a serious falling off in income.

How the Truth Operates.

DESCRIBING in the Missionary Herald of the Baptist Missionary Society a baptismal service held at the village of Masangi, on the Lower Congo, Rev. George R. R. Cameron quotes the following testimonies given by converts before the ordinance. They show how varied are the means used by God to touch the human heart:—

"(1) Kiantongono (evangelist), brought to the Lord in 1894 or 1895 through a Sunday-school lesson by the late Dr. Webb on the words, 'He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy.' (He was the means of the conversion of the three next named.)

"(2) Lukumu, received salvation through the Gospel of John iii. 16, 'God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'

"(3) Lutayi, helped by the parable of the Prodigal Son (and by the example of a godly husband).

"(4) Nkubu, awakened by the solemn warning of 1 Cor. vi. 9, 'Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the Kingdom of God,' &c.

"(5) Miyulukidi (evangelist) converted through an address by the late Mr. Philip Davies, on the miracle of Christ walking on the water, especially our Lord's words, 'It is I; be not afraid!'

"(6) Ntietie, brought to Christ through an address on 'The True Vine' by Miyulukidi (5).

"(7) Ngo-i-bila, aroused by testimony of Christian neighbours, was brought to decision through an address on 'The Fruitless Fig-tree;' also by Miyulukidi.

"In the foregoing instances I have put together helpers and helped. It was very encouraging to hear these testimonies. The good a man does is not always interred with his bones; it lives after him. Years have passed since Mr. Davies and Dr. Webb were taken from us, yet their work is still fruitful.

"There are other elements of interest in many of the testimonies.

"(8) Bikuta, a widow broken-hearted by the death of her two children, is told that they have gone to Jesus, and is urged to follow them. This hope, unknown in the darkness of heathenism, stirs her soul, and she seeks and finds the Lord.

"(9) Sangu, coming home after some years' soldiering, finds the Gospel established in his village. At first he despises the Message, but the faithful words of a Christian fellow-villager, backed by the story of the Rich Fool, show him his lost condition, and he seeks and finds the Saviour.

"(10) Ndayila finds himself in the same caravan with the earnest Christian who helped Sangu. During the twenty days' tramp to Matadi and back, Menga urges him to receive the Saviour. He is awakened, and later comes to decision through the warning message of the parable of the Ten Virgins.

"(11) Wavanduka feels his heart touched by the story of Christ's sufferings, but is tempted to harden it when he realizes that faithfulness to Christ will involve the giving up of his trade as a drink-seller. But he is faithful to conscience, and has his reward in the smile of the Master.

"(12) Mata, in the retinue of his heathen chief, visits a village where the Gospel has taken root. A Christian headman (Francis Lutunu Smith, who, as a boy, accompanied the late Mr. T. J. Comber to England in 1885) urges the chief to encourage education and the preaching of the Gospel in his district. Though unheeded by the chief, the words find good soil in Mata's heart, and he removes to a village where there is an evangelist, and there he is more fully instructed in the way of life."

"A Message in the Window."—Mrs. Virgo, 8, Ladbroke Road, Bayswater, W., writes: "I have been putting in my drawing-room window (on the ground floor, where many see it) a Gospel message in cardboard letters. I shall be pleased to let anyone have the pattern."

Protestantism in Venice.

Rev. Dr. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, Cav.

A PROMINENT place among Christian workers from this country who have made their home on the Continent of Europe must be assigned to Rev. Dr. Alexander Robertson, who for more than twenty years has exercised a strong influence in connection with every Evangelical movement in the Italian Peninsula. Dr. Robertson is now in his fifty-seventh year, having been born in Edinburgh, in 1846. Educated in his native city, he took a creditable place in his classes at the Free Church Normal School in the High Street, and at the University, where he was a prizeman in English literature.

When his theological training was complete, the young minister was ordained to the pastoral charge of the island of South Ronaldshay, in Orkney. Abundant testimony remains to the excellent work which he was privileged to do among the people there, and to the large measure of esteem and respect in which his name is still held.

In 1881, the way opened up into a wider sphere of usefulness, and he became minister of the congregation attached to the Church of Scotland at San Remo. Till 1890, he laboured there with much success and acceptance, among English-speaking visitors and the people of the land in which so large a portion of his life was to be spent. He built, in a beautiful position, facing south over the blue Mediterranean, a Scottish church, receiving from King Humbert a royal decree authorizing it. As the years passed his interest in his neighbours deepened, and he also founded an Italian church. Both these churches are centres of usefulness, and are increasingly full of promise for days to come.

In February, 1887, the Riviera was visited by a disastrous earthquake. This called forth all the energies of Dr. Robertson, who personally visited the ruined villages, writing of them in The Scotsman, and other newspapers and magazines, collecting a considerable sum of money, with which he relieved the more immediate needs of the sufferers. The following year San Remo was again much before the public, on account of the residence there of the Crown Prince Frederick of Germany. Dr. Robertson, being the intimate friend of Sir Morell McKenzie, did much to enlighten the public as to the true nature of his illness, and as to the political difficulties surrounding the case. No one appreciated more than the Empress Frederick what he wrote.

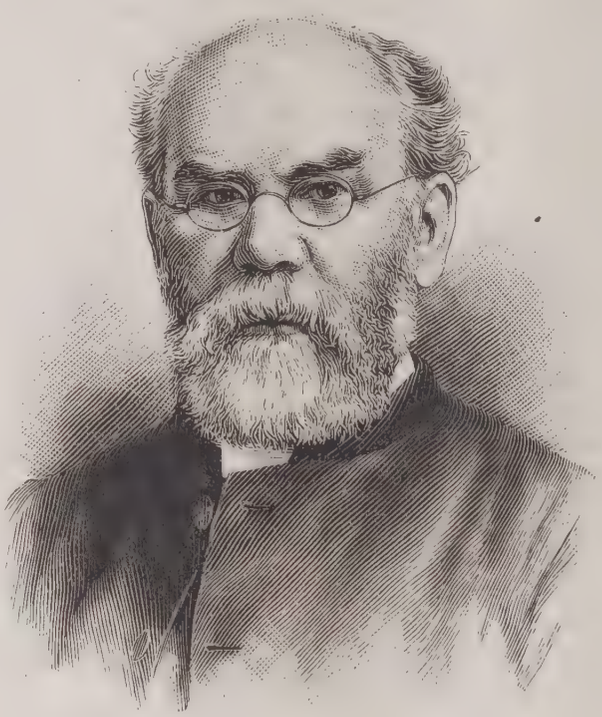
It is in connection with his later life at Venice that Dr. Robertson is best known. There his appreciative audiences are representative of many lands, and of different sections of the Christian Church. Secondary separating influences drop away, and worshippers realize their common faith and essential unity in Jesus Christ.

Many testimonies are given as to the comfort and profit received from these services. In numerous instances, after their return to their own homes, hearers have written to the pastor of their having found them like that crystal fountain in the desert round which the people gathered in their thirst. The British Consul at Venice, in his "Diplomatic and Consular Report for 1891," sent to the Foreign Office, says: "There has been in this town for about fifteen years a Scottish Church, which is numerously attended by Scottish and other tourists. The entrance to the Church has been improved by order of the Municipality, that is, at their expense."

In 1895, Dr. Robertson was received in private audience by the late King Humbert, who, at its close, expressed the hope that Dr. Robertson would long remain in Venice and go on with his work, wishing him also much success in his person, writings, church, and country. A further honour came in 1898, when Dr. Robertson was nominated by the King to be a Cavalière of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, the ancient and honourable Order of the House of Savoy, "in attestation of his Majesty's esteem and goodwill," as well as in recognition of his work in Italy, and of his writings, which always expressed such loyalty to the throne and constitution, and were so well calculated to advance the best interests of the Kingdom.

Though a Presbyterian, Dr. Robertson does not confine his sympathies to native churches working on these lines, but is ready to help all who are doing good Christian work. Hence his interest in Catholic reform, both in Italy and Spain. To advance the former, which he deems adapted to a certain class in Italy, he wrote in 1891 the history of the work associated with the name of Count Campello. In 1892 the late Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, invited him to accompany him in a tour in Spain and Portugal, to visit all the Reformed Churches in these countries. Dr. Robertson afterwards wrote on what he saw in the Quiver and other magazines.

Dr. Robertson enjoyed for many years the friendship of the Empress Frederick. From 1887 till her lamented death in 1890 he received annually a letter from her, and not a few tokens of her majesty's regard and esteem. In November, 1898, by command of the Empress, Dr. Robertson went to Windsor, where she herself presented him to her mother, the Queen. As a memento of his visit he received from the Queen an autograph portrait, and from the Empress a silver medal bearing on one side her portrait and on the other the arms of England and Prussia intertwined.



REV. DR. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON.

As an author, Dr. Robertson is well known. Among his more important works are "Catholic Reform," 1891; "Fra Paulo Sarpi, The Greatest of the Venetians," 1893; "Through the Dolomités, from Venice to Toblach," 1896; "The Bible of St. Mark," 1898. He is also a well known writer on Italian and Roman Catholic subjects to newspapers and periodicals.

A friend of many years, Rev. Thomas Dunlop writes: "About the beginning of May last year I met Dr. Robertson in Venice, after an interval of nearly thirty years. At once I recognized the same alert and vigorous personality, although the 'almond tree' had blossom on it, which it had not then. Long ago we had been associated in ministerial work in Edinburgh, with perfect mutual trust and esteem. There was the same acute power of observation which I had known formerly, and the same happy talent for giving clear and suitable and forcible expression to what his eye saw and his mind wished to convey.

"It was a delight to renew acquaintance with him in the city of his adoption, where he has lived and laboured, studied and written, steadily and unweariedly, and I might say enthusiastically and joyfully, for upwards of a dozen years. Venice is as dear and as well known to him as though she had been his mother; and he knows Italy, in all aspects, equally well. I am sure he would rather have lost his right hand than see the Campanile in ruins; and the articles he has written on that sad catastrophe seem to have been written with tears, all the more giving this impression because executed with so much graphic skill and thorough knowledge and literary ability.

"Dr. Robertson's great work is 'The Bible of St. Mark,' a superb book both in substance and in aim. For this and other works bearing on the national life and scenery of Italy he has attracted notice in high quarters. In matters Venetian or Italian, Dr. Robertson is perhaps the best British authority existing, not more full of sound knowledge than gifted with the easy facility for imparting it, and one of the most obliging and accessible of men. For many years past English and American visitors have found him ready to be of service at any time; and on Sunday have found his discourses very helpful.

"Dr. Robertson is fortunate in having a like-minded and highly-cultured lady for his help-mate, who is 'At Home' to travellers every week, and endeavours to make her house a social centre for them. Besides the work done in English, evangelists are maintained for Italian work, and a school for children is kept up at Dovadola."

The latest of Dr. Robertson's works is "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy" (6s., Morgan & Scott), which, in common with all the rest of his writings, bears the impress of a thorough knowledge of his subject. An undertone of sadness runs through the convincing argument, which illustrates the changelessness of the Church of Rome, everywhere and at all times, in its perversion of simple Christian truth, and how inevitably it works for the ruin of all that is good in national life. The King of Italy, the Premier, the Minister of Public Instruction, have all expressed approval of it. The first edition was bought out quickly, a second edition, sent to press without delay, was taken up before publication, and a third is ready for issue next Monday (29th inst.).

Pastor Edwin H. Ellis.

EAST LONDON TABERNACLE.

A GREAT change has come over East London since the days when Pastor Archibald G. Brown founded the famous Tabernacle in Burdett Road, E. Many of the prosperous tradesmen and well-to-do residential people who filled the sanctuary in other years, have migrated to the suburbs. Moreover, there has been a rapid eastward growth of the London Ghetto, and with the altered condition of affairs the whole district has become poorer. In that vast desert of brick and mortar are hundreds of the one-roomed homes which figure from time to time in the magazine article of the economist, the lurid chapters of the sensational novelist, or the sordid reports of police-court cases. Here are true deliberate types of the "outside masses," oblivious of all religious influence, who constitute the chief problem of the churches.

To undertake the charge of the Tabernacle in days when it had been for a considerable time without a pastor, and, in view of the Jewish drift, was seemingly faced with a struggle for existence—betokened a lively faith on the part of the present pastor, Rev. Edwin H. Ellis; but the Divine blessing has been bountifully outpoured, and the building is one of London's busiest centres of religious life and activity.

THE PASTOR'S CAREER.

Led to realize the Lord's saving power while still a youth, Mr. Ellis was early distinguished by special capabilities for the Christian ministry. When a very young man he was chosen as a leader of the Sunday-school connected with the Baptist church at Edmonton, and at the age of twenty-three he entered the Pastor's College, adding to the reputation of his student days by the inauguration of a cause at Norwood.

Mr. Ellis found his first pastorate at Wellington Road, Stoke Newington, where a depressing state of things was soon changed, the building becoming too small to accommodate the people. The question of extension speedily came to the front; happily, it was arranged to join forces with Devonshire Square Church, N.E., Mr. Ellis accepting the pastorate of the united causes, making their home at Devonshire Square. The membership increased in seven years from 300 to about 800, and the church developed into a busy hive of work for the Master. Considerations of health subsequently led Mr. Ellis for a time to Australia, and he came back to the old country to take up the operations at Burdett Road, which Pastor Archibald G. Brown had not only founded, but maintained with conspicuous success for thirty years.

AN EVANGELISTIC MINISTRY.

The arduous task was undertaken in a spirit of calm confidence in the Most High. Signs of renewed interest were forthcoming, and prayer for revival was answered. Mr. Ellis is essentially evangelistic in his ministry; his appeals are to conscience and reason, urging an immediate decision. He aims to gather in to Christ's fold those thousands of outsiders who live in close proximity to the Tabernacle. To influence these Mr. Ellis has a triple plan—Gospel preaching, the distribution of religious literature and striking invitations, and room-to-room visitation throughout the district for half a mile southwards. The trained nurse and two lady visitors, who speak the Gospel message in such dark places, have to cope with manifold difficulties; but their labours are not in vain in the Lord.

RELIGION AND PHILANTHROPY.

The condition of affairs may be gained from the following notes of one of the workers:—

Miss P. lives alone in one back room with a wild cat, which she says never goes out. There is literally no furniture in her room. An egg-box for a table, a smaller one for a chair, another one for a cupboard, a dirty cushion and a heap of rags for a bed, black boards; and the cat is all of loved ones she has.

Called on Mrs. H. The father, mother, and seven children, live in one small back underground kitchen; the landlady has lately had compassion, and let two of the children sleep in her kitchen. When I went in, the man was ill in bed with pleurisy, covered with one thin covering, an oil lamp showing the poverty of the place, a sack fastened up at the window for a blind, a small, old table and a make-up bed for some of the children, two of them in bed with the sick man. The eldest daughter (the only one able to earn anything) has been earning 4s. or 5s. a week at matchbox making. The woman has had to pawn her dress and boots to buy food, so is unable to go out to work. She pulled a box out from under the bed and asked me to sit down, as there was no chair. Mr. H. has been ill for sixteen weeks. I gave them help at once, they were all so hungry.

REV. E. H. ELLIS.

From Photograph by Mr. Chas. E. Long, 60, Bow Road, E.

To clothe some of these poor creatures, Mrs. Ellis, who toils assiduously with her husband, has organized a "Thimble League," which has already provided 1,500 garments, for necessitous cases, during the present year. Another undertaking in view is the organization of country holidays for the sick and suffering.

Mr. Ellis estimates that by means of visitation a larger number of people are brought under the sound of the Gospel than in the Tabernacle itself, and he points out, as an interesting fact in connection with the Church Census, that the Monday and Tuesday afternoon Mothers' meetings are attended by hundreds of poor women who are unable to be present at public worship at any other time; hence they are not given in census figures, but they are brought under church influences.

The charge of two important philanthropic enterprises of an undenominational character was inherited by Mr. Ellis. The Orphan Home entailed heavy responsibilities which, combined with other burdens, brought much anxiety. The pastor laid the matter before God in prayer. He thus sums up his experience:—

Let me give my testimony. We have come home from the Orphan Home Committee Meeting with sad hearts. Bills had been presented for payment, and we had not a third of the money in hand to meet them. The outlook seemed dark, and we went to rest with a weary heart, and awoke in the morning to find the shadow still hovering around. Fatherless children needed food, clothing, and shelter; bills to meet, and no money. So we took it again to God in prayer. . . . Not many days passed ere the whole of the money was in hand, and every bill met. Others may laugh, but we are bold enough to declare and believe it was sent in answer to prayer, and since that day the heart has been kept restful, confident God will provide for every need, whether spiritual or temporal. For home, heart, or church needs, we say, Ask Him.

Then there are the "Christian Buildings," a noble block of premises containing twenty-four homes, with nearly ninety rooms in all, which are let to Christian people, irrespective of sectarian distinction. They are tenanted chiefly by aged couples and widows; three rooms and a washhouse being let for only two shillings a week. Of late the Buildings have been renovated.

A THRIVING OUTPOST.

Away towards the London Docks is an important outpost, the Devonport Street Mission, the outstanding feature of which is the prosperous Sunday-school; and where, in the winter months, thousands of meals are given to the starving poor. Another Sunday-school is held at South Grove Board School. With the young people at Burdett Road, about 1,500 scholars are under regular instruction.

Manifestations of renewed life and growth, therefore, are many and varied, and the chief of them are the enlarging congregations and the conversions at the Tabernacle. Mr. Ellis and his band of helpers lose no opportunity of influencing the people, and it is their ideal to make the much-loved sanctuary a great and popular mission centre. A recently-issued compendium of advice to members runs as follows:—

How to Make the Tabernacle Prosper.

1. Attend all the services regularly.
2. If it rains, make a special effort to go. Macintoshes, goloshes, and umbrellas are inexpensive.
3. Never miss a week-night service or prayer meeting needlessly.
4. Invite someone else to go every week.
5. Think of the services through the week, speak of them to others, and pray that they may be attended with the Divine blessing.
6. Pray for the Pastor. His usefulness will be greatly increased by the daily prayers of all the people.
7. Note the absence of members, not to criticise or find fault, but to show them proper attention in case of sickness, and sympathy if in trouble.
8. Speak to strangers, and invite them to come again.
9. Accept gladly any work assigned to you, and never show a spirit of envy when others are promoted in the church.
10. Give cheerfully, according to your ability.
11. If able, take in a church paper.
12. If the pastor or someone else is struggling under a heavy load, take hold and help.
13. Make some undecided one a special subject for daily prayer. Persevere in prayer until that one shall be brought to Christ.

In these days of neglect of the Bible and the sanctuary, it is no easy task to counteract the religious indifference which is so widely prevalent, and to build up a great soul-winning cause amid depressing surroundings. May the good pastor's bow abide in strength!

The Wesley Bi-centenary.

WITH characteristic fervour Methodists throughout the world celebrated on Wednesday last week the bi-centenary of John Wesley's birth.

In London, Wesley's Chapel, City Road, was the headquarters of the celebration. At seven o'clock there was an early morning love-feast, at which Rev. C. Burbidge presided. Some idea of the interest that was taken in the service may be gathered from the fact that in forty-five minutes no fewer than thirty-five testimonies were given. Ministers and men with fifty and sixty years' experience, sisters, young men of sixteen all vied with one another to tell of the keeping power of God.

Next came a sermon at the morning service, preached by Rev. W. L. Watkinson from Gal. iii. 2, 3. The concluding words were of solemn appeal: "This bi-centenary reminds us that we are getting a past. Now a past often proves a dangerous thing. Men attempt to live upon the past, they are impeded by it, they are destroyed by it. And we are getting a past in Methodism. We are becoming rich in memories and traditions—we can speak of a not inglorious past. But this will do us little good, and it may do us a great deal of harm. The only way in which the past will greatly help us is when it reminds us of the great principles and ideals of our origin. 'Having begun in the Spirit'—let us be true to that. I plead to-day for a simple intense spirituality; for the power to live near to God, for the power to bring men to God through Jesus Christ. Simply that, and then we shall amply, happily fulfil our destiny. The world never needed us more than it does to-day; we were never more able to help it than we are to-day. Let us with our growing resources remember these two great Scriptures: 'Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory, for Thy mercy, and for Thy truth's sake;' 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.'"

In the evening, many representatives of various branches of the Methodist family were among the speakers at a great "family gathering" in the same building. Mr. R. W. Perks, who presided, said that the side of Wesley's career which was the most worthy of imitation by his successors was that of being an evangelist. If the Methodist Churches ever fail to hold their position as religious teachers in this country, it will only arise from the preachers of Methodism failing to put in the very forefront of their work as evangelists the glorious preaching of a full and free salvation. Mr. Perks urged Methodists not to be too anxious to secure culture, lest they might sacrifice too much in their anxiety. Among reforms which, the speaker considered, John Wesley would strive for if living now would be Methodist Reunion, and sobriety in drink, dress, and food.

AT EPWORTH.

Interest naturally centred in the celebration at Epworth, and Methodists from all parts of the kingdom made the pilgrimage to the charming Lincolnshire village which was Wesley's birthplace. A procession formed in the market place, and marched to the chapel, outside which there was already a waiting multitude.

Rev. Chas. Kelly said that all the changes that have occurred in the physical world—transit by steam and electric power, daily newspapers, extension of literature, and so on, are not to be compared with the gift of Wesley to the world and the moral change his life made. Wesley commenced his evangelistic campaign when religion in England was feeble. A study of Wesley's life teaches us what men can do when inspired by God. Wesley was a great educationalist, and his followers are pledged to make the nation intelligent as well as pious. Wesley grew. He who was born at Epworth was not the same man as he who died eighty-eight years later. He had developed.

He had an excellent mother. "The hidden hands of help" secured much of his success, and such a silent helper was Susannah Wesley. The Evangelical Revival grew out of Wesley's experience, and Methodism stands for the doctrine of Pardon. If the day should ever dawn when Wesley's followers cease to believe in conscious conversion, then Methodism is doomed. But that day is far distant. Methodists all the world over rejoice in their earthly leader, and are resolved to follow him as he followed Christ.

"Primitives" in Conference.

AMONG the reports which were considered during the second week of the Conference sessions, was that of the Chapel Aid Association. Its present deposit account amounts to £312,325, an increase of £33,177. During the year further loans to Chapel Trusts had been made to the amount of £53,551. While this society has been in operation, Chapel Trusts through its agencies have reduced their liabilities by £140,844.

A report was presented from the United Committee for Promoting Methodist Concerted Action. All the Methodist bodies are represented on this committee, its object being co-operation in mutual defence, in Christian and social endeavour, independent of party associations and political creeds.

The committee's recommendations include a "love-feast" in every centre, preferably on Whit-Sunday, and that in all cases of threatened overlapping appeal should be made by any aggrieved cause to the General Chapel Committee, or other similar committee of the supposed aggressor, with a view to a brotherly settlement of the difference.

A further recommendation was that they, with other Methodist conferences, would appoint to and receive from each of the other Methodist conferences two representatives. These recommendations were heartily approved and adopted. Eight representatives—four laymen and four ministers—were appointed to represent the Primitive Methodists on the Concerted Action Committee for the ensuing year.

SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS UNION.

The subject of Methodist Union in a new form was again before the Conference. It is only some three or four years since the negotiations for union between the Primitive Methodists and the Bible Christians collapsed. For the last twelve months there has been a Joint Committee composed of representatives of the United Methodists, Bible Christians, New Connexion Methodists and Wesleyan Reform Union, considering a possible basis of union between their respective churches. After several meetings they have agreed on the outline of a scheme, and are now asking the Primitive Methodists to appoint representatives on the Joint Committee with a view to embracing all the minor and more liberal branches of Methodism in one scheme of union. The matter had previously been submitted to the General Committee of the Primitive Methodist Church, and as that committee could not easily dismiss the question, it felt bound to give the Conference an opportunity of expressing its mind on a scheme wider and more important than any previous proposal. After considerable discussion it was decided to thank the Joint Committee for their invitation to enter into these negotiations; but as the Joint Committee had already held meetings and arrived at certain tentative conclusions, the Conference was of opinion that in the interests of Methodist union itself, it was better for the present Joint Committee to complete its work and then submit its findings and decisions for their careful and frank consideration.

ENCOURAGING FACTS AND FIGURES.

The statistics of the Connexion were particularly interesting to the Conference, inasmuch as there was not a decrease in any department. The church members number nearly 3,000 more than a year ago, and in the value of church property there is an increase of upwards of £100,000, while the aggregate debt on church property is nearly £50,000 less than a year ago. The sitting accommodation provided by the churches of the Connexion amounts to 1,009,984, while the hearers number nearly 600,000, and the church members almost 200,000.

The centenary of the Connexion is drawing near. Seven years hence it will be 100 years since the first society class was formed, which constituted the beginning of the Primitive Methodist Church; and four years hence it will be 100 years since a series of camp meetings were held on Mow Cop, which led to the formation of a class of ten members in 1810. The Conference and the Connexion generally are of opinion that the centenary celebrations should occupy the period from 1907 to 1910. It was therefore resolved to authorize the General Committee and the General Missionary Committee to select a committee to consider suggestions for raising a great Centenary Fund, and report to the next Conference. It was decided to hold a series of missionary conventions in the twenty-five British districts for the purpose of intensifying interest in missionary enterprise, and the creation of funds for further aggressive efforts.

Glasgow Mizpah Band.

TWENTY-ONE years ago, at the close of a four months' mission in Glasgow, at which a great number of drunkards were saved, Mr. D. L. Moody, who, with the help of Mr. Sankey, Miss Bonar (now Mrs. Oatts), and others, had conducted the mission, formed an organization which was named the Mizpah Band. The membership, numbering hundreds at the start, is still large, and every member is an abstainer from drink, as well as a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. Many of the original band have gone to be with the Lord, but numbers of others have been added as the years have passed.

The annual demonstration was held as usual on the first Saturday in June, when the members in great force mustered at the Bible Training Institute at four o'clock, and marched thence to Nelson's Monument on the Green, headed by two bands of music. At five o'clock, the leaders of the various sections—there are six or seven different meetings over the city—mounted the platform, and for nearly two hours song and testimony poured forth as to God's redeeming and reclaiming power.

Ex-Bailie Jack led the meeting, and was supported by Mr. William Clyde, who has acted as missionary for the Band from the beginning. As seven o'clock drew near, the procession re-formed and marched to the Tent Hall, where another two-hours' meeting was held, addresses being given by Rev. John McLean and others, and at the close several precious souls were led to Christ, some of whom put in an appearance along with the Tent Hall workers on the following night at their open-air meeting in Jail Square.

The Mizpah Band is worthy of its founder, having within its circle numbers of men who spend and are spent in winning men to God.

Amlwch Ragged School.

THE mission work which has been carried on for the past sixteen years at Amlwch, North Wales, among poor children, for which Mrs. Agnes Morgan is responsible, continues its useful career. Mrs. Morgan has the assistance of her daughters, and of a schoolmistress, who kindly gives her services. Parcels are also distributed on vessels using the port.

At the weekly classes for girls, practical instruction is given in sewing and knitting, and the friendly interest in their welfare is continued in later years. Mrs. Morgan writes: "Many of my old scholars are doing well in different parts of the world. The work has received stimulus from time to time through the co-operation of the Ragged School Union."

Many letters have been received from the needy and suffering, expressive of gratitude for the help which has enabled them to tide over times of special stress.

Owing to the long illness and subsequent death of Mr. Morgan, circumstances have been somewhat difficult of late, but Mrs. Morgan (whose address is the Ragged School, Amlwch, N. Wales) adds, "I do not think that God wishes the work to be given up which has been, by His blessing, such a boon to many poor, helpless ones at the most critical period of their lives."

Working-Boys in London.

THE triennial festival of the Homes for Working Boys attracted a large audience to Queen's Hall, W., on Tuesday evening last week. Instead of inviting the subscribers to partake of dinner and listen to speeches, it is the custom of the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham (honorary secretary) and his friends to give a dinner to the boys who are residing in the Homes, and to whom, also, the addresses are given.

The object of the institutions is to provide board and lodging for honest working-boys who have no home of their own, but who are earning wages and can afford to pay something for the food and accommodation supplied to them. Every boy costs the Society nearly £10 per annum.

A REMARKABLE CHANGE.

In many instances the help given has proved highly beneficial. A typical case is that of G——, left an orphan when a child, who ultimately had to enter Poplar Union Schools for about a year. He was only in Standard IV. of education, and appeared to be such a dull boy no one would employ him. The Guardians applied for his admission to one of these Homes, and a situation was found for him. He showed such steady perseverance that after a year the superintendent was able to place him in a better situation, which he kept for three years. Meantime, a great spiritual change came over the boy, and he gave himself up to mission work amongst his fellow-residents. He devoted much time to the study of the Scriptures, started and conducted a meeting in the Home for Bible reading by the boys, took up Sunday-school work, and, with the assistance of one or two of the elder lads, took the superintendence of a mission hall in a very rough neighbourhood. He left this year to be trained by the Church Army as an evangelist.

A DILIGENT STUDENT.

Another striking case is that of R—— B——, who was admitted from the City of London Union Schools. He was somewhat weak in intellect, and so short-sighted that no one would employ him. After seven weeks' trial at as many situations a local doctor gave him a trial, and he kept this place for two years. Though so poorly educated, and under such great disadvantage that he could not read without a magnifying-glass, he became a diligent student of God's Word, and eventually visited the aged poor to read and pray with them. He also undertook mission work in the city. The vicar, in asking that the boy might be allowed to continue, said, "He gets the place nearly full."

It must not be supposed, however, that the lads are dull as a rule. The great crowd of young fellows who assembled at the Queen's Hall were, indeed, bright and intelligent, as well as discreetly behaved.

After Rev. F. S. Webster had led in prayer, the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham referred to the loss sustained by the institutions by the deaths of Mr. Edward Trotter and Mr. Quintin Hogg; and, describing the work, said that the highest importance is attached to sound religious teaching. The boys are received from all parts of the country. As to immediate needs, it is hoped to purchase the premises now occupied in Wine Office Court, Fleet Street.

Speaking from the chair, Lord Aberdeen congratulated the boys on being inmates of such admirable Homes. He gave them some sound advice regarding prevalent vices, particularly gambling, and bade them rely upon Divine help in the battle of life.

"GIVE THE CHAP A CHANCE."

The Bishop of London, speaking first to the friends in the balconies, said he "knew of no better work in the diocese." Why do lads drift to prison? For lack of the helping hands of such men as Mr. Pelham. It is a real moral work. "I was once introduced to an East End audience with the words, 'give the chap a chance.' I make the same appeal for these lads, confident that they will make the best of it. Turning to the lads in the body of the hall Dr. Winnington-Ingram urged them to respond to the efforts made in their behalf, by manifesting loyalty to their employers, by maintaining a good spirit in the Homes, and, most important of all, by yielding their hearts and lives to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir John French dwelt briefly on the fact that unselfishness and self-reliance are qualities which largely contribute to make useful men. Proceeding, he emphasized the importance of punctuality, thoroughness, obedience, and discipline.

The last speaker, Rev. E. J. Kennedy, of Boscombe, counselled each of the lads to "seek to be a man, courageous in the highest order of courage, able to say 'no,' when tempted to evil. It was said of Lord Lawrence that 'he feared man so little because he feared God so much.' A man's strength lies in his personal holiness, by which is meant, not an emasculated pietism, but having a heart and life right with God and man." The meeting concluded with a few words, breathing gratitude and hopefulness, from Lord Kinnaird.

Clapham Conference.

UNITED in the common belief and certainty that the "coming of the Lord draweth nigh," Christians of various shades of thought assembled on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday last week at Clapham for the annual prophetic conference and convention for deepening of spiritual life. The gatherings this year were held in the Presbyterian Church Lecture Hall, and the attendance showed a deepening of interest in the consideration of the special subjects which were kept in view.

Each day's proceedings commenced with an hour of prayer and humiliation for individual and national sins; and with the numerous petitions there mingled many expressions of thanksgiving for the Divine favours which have been enjoyed during the year.

On the subject of "The blessings of Scripture" some helpful thoughts were offered by Rev. T. Currie, who presided on Wednesday afternoon. Pointing to the wide purpose which the Word of God serves, he emphasized the light which it sheds on sin, the knowledge it affords of the present life, and the revelation it gives concerning "things to come." It is not for Christians to be living in fear of death, but to have their minds and hearts continually set on the Second Coming of Christ, and the furtherance of the interests of His Kingdom.

Rev. J. Gosset Tanner gave a comprehensive survey of the "blessings" of Scripture as they refer to (1) the people of Israel; (2) the present dispensation, and (3) the era to commence on the return of Christ. Timely words on the same line of thought by Rev. J. J. Luce followed.

MAN IN THE FIRST AND SECOND PARADISE.

Among the special subjects of prayer at a meeting over which Dr. Woods Smyth presided on Thusday, were the downfall of Turkey, the release of Bible lands, and the peace of Jerusalem. In a luminous address on "Daniel," Rev. H. C. Sturdy outlined the prophet's life, emphasizing the outstanding features of his career and service, all of which had their springs in an unflinching faith.

Rev. T. George, in an informing discourse, contrasted man in the first and second Paradise. The points of difference in man's position in the second Paradise compared with the first were shown to be—(1) That he will be grander in body; (2) nobler in character; (3) higher in rank; (4) higher in service; (5) his freedom will be more perfect.

At Friday's prayer-meeting, intercession was made "for all saints," Lord Radstock leading the devotions. A well-attended communion service occupied the afternoon. Pastor Fuller Gooch delivered a heart-searching address on "The Communion of the Blood of Christ." Rev. F. W. Ainley also took part.

In the evening, Rev. N. S. Taylor dealt with the subject of "The Signs of the Times." The speaker passed in review the present condition of the Jews, the unrest which is giving impetus to the Zionist movement, their anxiety to return to their own land—all of which indicate that the providence of God is working for the fulfilment of His own purposes. Other signs of our times touched upon were the number of anti-Christs and false prophets that have arisen, the existence of anarchy, and the ecclesiastical apostasy in the falling away of Christian churches from the true faith into the errors of Romanism. All these events, it was shown, correspond with what Christ tells us should be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man. Rev. F. W. Ainley followed with some helpful words on the Christian's attitude in view of these signs and events. Directing attention to 2 Cor. iii. 18, he pleaded that Christians should seek to realize the possibilities of the Apostle's ideal.

Scots in London.

THE annual meeting of the Caledonian Christian Club was held at 24, Guilford Street, W.C., a few days ago. From the chair Mr. Robert Morton expressed his belief that the Club was doing a unique work, which was greatly needed and blessed. The need for enlarging their premises to accommodate the increasing fresh arrivals from Scotland was seriously urgent.

Mr. Arthur Robertson, general secretary, showed that the year had been one of exceptional pressure on the resources—165 new resident members had been received, giving for board-residence and fees £620, being £43 increase on the previous year. About 300 others had made use of the Club, many of these being directed to safe and suitable lodgings.

The members came from all parts of Scotland, the provinces, and Ireland. Having bidden farewell to their friends and home, they are on the critical threshold, entering the swirl of London. It is just here that the Club stands with hearts and hands, and a happy Scottish Home open to the new comer. The accounts showed a deficiency of £39.

Rev. J. M. Wilson, Highbury, spoke on the lapsing or drifting of large masses of our young men from all the churches. He urged that Christian workers in London should take a special interest in the work of the Club, because it was doing a work the churches had failed in. Rev. Dr. Hall (Islington) also spoke.

Hoxton Costers' Mission.

IN his forty-second annual report, Mr. W. J. Orsman of Costers' Hall, quotes Mr. Charles Booth's "Life and Labour in London":—"The Costers' Mission relies before all on the power of the Gospel of Salvation—Mr. Orsman working for more than forty years on Gospel lines, aided now by the young generation that his teaching has formed—plays a very considerable part in the lives of the people. This Mission was founded in Golden Lane in 1861 by its present honorary superintendent, the late Lord Shaftesbury being its president from 1866 until his death. It is connected with the Ragged School Union, and works on thoroughly Evangelical lines. It recognises that the true way to elevate the poor 'is to reveal to their hearts the reality of eternal things. The Gospel in the home chases away darkness and degradation, and men and women thus influenced become capable citizens and a blessing to society.' 'Were it not for such missions as these, tens of thousands would never be taught the Word of God.' In the list of 'Operations'—twenty-one are religious, thirteen are social and educational, fifteen are benevolent, and ten are temperance and thrift—making fifty-nine in all. Charitable relief is not a great amount, and no effort is made to attack by such means the low loafing lodging-house class. For the poor a great deal is done in many helpful ways, and a very real Christianity is both preached and practised at Mr. Orsman's Mission."

Mr. Orsman (Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.) adds:—"We now report that there is no slackening of the work, and the blessing of the Lord continues thereon. The Gospel services, prayer and praise meetings, the Bible-classes, and Sunday-schools are crowded; services in the common lodging-house, and in the open-air, have been regular; Gospel lantern meetings have dealt with 4,600 'ragamuffin' children; the Christian Endeavour Societies are strong and useful, and the I.B.R.A. has 728 readers. We have still with us Mr. E. C. Collinson and 157 other voluntary helpers, whose work is greatly appreciated."

The Y.M.C.A. in Force.

THE event of the week, so far as religious gatherings in the provinces are concerned, was the Y.M.C.A. Conference, held at Bristol (June 16-19), which was very numerously attended. The presence of the veteran, Sir George Williams, who has been spared to see almost the completion of sixty years of Y.M.C.A. work since its inauguration by himself, was especially valued, and many were the heartfelt expressions of hope that he would yet see many more. The multiplication of Branches all over the world forms a striking record of which any man may be proud, and especially, thankful that, under the blessing of God, the "little one has become a thousand." The Bristol Association also owes a deep debt of gratitude to its president, Mr. Lewis Storrs Fry, for his spiritual aid and practical sympathy during many years.

The kindly presence, on Tuesday evening, and encouragement of the Bishop of Bristol was another feature which cheered the conveners; and his wise words on "the almost unbounded possibilities of youth," struck a strong true note, as he thanked God for an association which so ably strives to turn the steps of young men into the paths of holiness. Canon Head, too (vicar of Clifton), voiced the interest of "more than eighty of the clergy of Bristol and Clifton," in presenting an "address" in which his fellow-labourers of the National Church offered their congratulations to the Association and its honoured founder.

Nonconformity was also well to the front through its ministers, who found in the Y.M.C.A. a common meeting-ground with their clerical brethren, despite the differences which just now are rife in regard to educational matters. Would to God there were more such opportunities! Dr. Glover humorously cited Carlyle's remark: "We but occasions like these afford a welcome means of manifesting their agreement as regards the work and purpose of the Gospel of Christ. "Youth, piety, and fellowship" were subjects which might fittingly weld together in a common cause men of differing opinions.

The High-Sheriff also welcomed the delegates on behalf of the citizens of Bristol.

The proceedings of Wednesday were opened by an early devotional meeting, conducted by Rev. Arnold Thomas, of Highbury Chapel. Subsequently an address was presented on behalf of 140 ministers of the Free Church Council and their respective churches, thankfully recognising the Y.M.C.A. as a God-given ally in its organised endeavour to promote the social, intellectual, and religious well-being of the young men of the land. "Bible-class work among young men," and "Athletics and the Bible" were also dealt with. Some divergence of opinion was expressed regarding the relation of these two practical subjects to each other; the general impression being that it is a question of degree, all depending upon whether the spiritual or the secular element is in the ascendancy.

SERMON BY DR. MOULE.

Following this session, a service was held in the Cathedral, when the Lord Bishop of Durham gave a splendid sermon from Mark iii. 14. The twelve disciples were appointed (a) "that they might be with Him," and (b) "that He might send them forth"; thus were fellowship and service happily united in the Divine ideal. It was through men that He would have this work develop, which He began by His own solitary message in laying its foundations; and it is through men that to the end it will tell upon the world. The greatest and most glorious youth is that willing manhood that yields itself to Christ, when it hands its sword to Him, and then becomes conqueror; when it gives up its liberty to Him, and then steps out into perfect freedom.

In the evening a mighty throng surged into the vast Colston Hall, the initial proceedings being brightened by a recital from that master of the organ, Mr. George Riseley. (How delighted Tubal Cain would have been could he have been present to hear it!)

Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry imparted a touch of solemnity to the meeting by referring to the many noble men who had laboured and died since the Association had been founded, and to the improbability of those present ever all meeting again. Personally he had recently celebrated his golden wedding, as the Association had already done. Its work was "full of Divine coincidences." The tree of life brought forth its fruit in due season. God had foreseen events which to human sight were invisible—e.g., the founding of Sunday-schools, Missionary and Bible Societies, all of which had sprung into being just when the world needed them. So also was it with the Y.M.C.A.; but God having done His part, His children must do theirs, taking advantage of the progress of human ingenuity as to means of communication, so that the Gospel may be spread to earth's remotest bound. The prosperity of a nation depends upon its grasp of the things of God.

> A virtuous populace will rise the while
> And stand a wall of fire
> Around our much-loved isle.

The President of the Baptist Union) Ald. George White, M.P. followed, "not to give an oratorical display, but, as a plain business Christian man," to testify to the blessing the Y.M.C.A. had been to himself, and the moulding of life and character by the associations into which he had been brought. These included companionship, intellectual culture, and physical exercise, combined with Christian influences, which are greater than all. When President Garfield entered college, he was asked, "Are you going to make a minister?" His reply was, "That is uncertain; but I am going to make a man!" And subsequent years proved the reality of his desire. A trite remark of Oliver Wendell Holmes was also brought to bear: "What you are speaks so loudly, I do not want to hear what you say!" Then came an opportunity for the meeting to translate its cheers into practice in a collection in aid of the special jubilee fund of £2,000 for the local Association, of which £630 still remained to be raised.

The Bishop of Durham, warmed up by his service in the Cathedral earlier in the day, entered heartily into the spirit of the meeting and its purpose. Referring to the place of physical culture, he said he had lived too long among young men, and felt too much of a young man inside still, to overlook the benefits of physical exercise when kept within proper limits; but would be lost if the spiritual were not always to the front (and here the meeting was manifestly with him). It is a very serious thing, indeed, to be a serious Christian. Present day tendencies and temptations are in the opposite direction. There are so many amenities in life; so much that softens the pathway—but to be a Christian indeed is no mere child's play. Many things improve, but the enemy of souls is beyond improvement, and can never be anything but a force calculated to achieve the complete and everlasting ruin of mankind. The narrow way will never be broader, to the end. There is no modern substitute for conversion, nor can there ever be. The Christian life is and must be a Pilgrim's Progress.

After the devotional service, Thursday's programme was opened by Mr. William Wright, organizing secretary for Ireland, who read a paper on "The Y.M.C.A. as an Evangelistic Movement on behalf of Young Men," treating his subject as a claim for the past, a conviction for the present, and a commission for the future. Its chief business is to win young men to Christ; and he advocated endeavour after efficiency, and the setting apart of special men for special work. In view of the recent Church Census in London, there is clearly great room for the churches, Y.M.C.A.'s, and all other Christian agencies, to justify their existence more abundantly. The open Bible, a spirit of prayer, and a fresh, free, faithful, and simple presentation of the Gospel, are the only antidotes to the growth of indifference, pleasure-seeking, and worldliness, which meet us at every step. Messrs. J. H. Putterill (London), A. Bell (Scotch National Council), W. M. Oatts (Glasgow), and others, continued the topic.

Sir Algernon C. P. Coote presided over the second part of the meeting, when "Work among Youths" was surveyed, emphasis being laid upon the necessity of getting hold of young fellows at the time when the Sunday-school ceases to retain them.

The noon sermon was preached by Rev. W. L. Watkinson in Old King Street Baptist Chapel, from the words, "The vintage of the wicked" (Job xxiv. 6).

"SUCCESSFUL SIN"

was his modern interpretation of the text. Sin is never worse than when it succeeds; it is more hideous when it is gay than when associated with dishonour, bankruptcy, or imprisonment; it is never more impoverishing than when it is lucrative, never more tragical than when triumphant.

Then there is its blinding power. The successful sinner is tempted to ask, "Doth God know? Is there knowledge with the Most High?" When we see a scoundrel with an orchid and clothed in purple, we are tempted, indeed, to doubt and scepticism. As we look upon the vineyard of the unrighteous, we are prone to question: "Is there a Moral Ruler to vindicate the broken law?" The moral sense becomes confused.

The beguiling power of sin was next dealt with—its fascination, especially when it is successful. "The way of the wicked seduceth them." Every few yards there is a fresh nugget gleaming in the dust; plucking one poisoned flower, we are instantly dazzled by another. There are such a delightful lot of half-way houses.

Yet with it all, it is well to remember the old proverb: "The devil helps the thief every day, but one day God helps the policeman," and that soon puts arrears right. It was a solemn message worthy of a very wide hearing.

The evening meeting was a great time, in the large hall of the local association, redolent of memories of D. L. Moody and Ira D. Sankey, to whose efforts that valuable addition to the premises is due. The scope of the British National Council, the work in New South Wales, Burmah, the Balkan States, &c., were all passed in review, showing the wide sweep of the Association's influence.

"Young Men in Relation to National Life" was the subject ably treated by Rev. J. Morgan Jones, of Merthyr, who pleaded for, not a moribund condition, living in the present, nor for the present and past alone, but for a true, sound, healthy Christian patriotism.

Other meetings were held on Friday, including a garden party at Henbury Court, by kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Lennard.

One of the interesting functions of the week was the laying of the foundation stones of a much needed addition to the premises of the Totterdown Association in the shape of a new hall.

Mildmay Conference.

OPENING MEETING.

IN every part of the English-speaking world there are those whose thoughts this week are centred in the gatherings taking place in the historic hall at Mildmay, for there are few fields of Christian activity at home or abroad which have not felt at some time or other the influence of the Conference held annually for forty-seven years. While its offspring are found in similar convocations throughout the land, the old-time interest and attraction of Mildmay abide in a great measure, and its spiritual privileges are heartily welcomed by the present generation, and widely appreciated.

When the proceedings commenced on Tuesday morning there was a good assemblage. The Conference had been prepared for by prayer, and was opened in the same spirit, and the solemn hush that fell on the company during the few moments of silent waiting upon God which preceded the meeting indicated the prevailing note of reverent expectation. In the course of some preliminary notices, Colonel Morton announced that Lord Polwarth, unable to be present, had written assuring them of his prayerful interest in the Conference; also Rev. D. B. Hankin, who for many years had been a prominent figure at the gatherings, was unable to bear the strain of a three-days' conference. Touching reference was also made to the loss sustained by the death of Mr. Edward Trotter, who for a considerable period had been a trustee of the Mildmay Institutions.

The Chairman, Captain W. H. Dawson, having read several passages of Scripture bearing on the general subject set down for consideration at the Conference—"Service"—the Dean of Peterborough led in fervent and comprehensive petitions to the Throne of Grace. God was praised for the many occasions on which His Spirit and power had been manifest at Mildmay, and a continuance of these Divine favours was besought.

A few words of introduction by the Chairman was followed by another petition in song, Jesus, stand among us in Thy risen power."

Christ, the Lord's Servant.

The first address was given by Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, on "Christ, the Lord's Servant: What are His Claims upon His Followers?" He remarked at the outset that the conception of the Servant of Jehovah in Isa. xl.-lxvi. is a unique contribution to prophetic revelation of the Messiah, and proceeded:—If we take these chapters we shall see five aspects of the Servant of the Lord—a Prophetic Messenger, Divine Witness, Suffering Martyr, Sacrificial Victim, Victorious King. The whole order of these chapters corresponds with the order of our Lord's earthly manifestation—coming as the sent of the Father, going on through His life of testimony, sacrificial martydom, and crowning victory in His resurrection and ascension.

In venturing to answer the question what this revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ as the Servant of God has to do with us to-day, I want to say that every fact in the life of Christ is intended to be a factor in the life of Christians.

A NINEFOLD CLAIM.

Let me take nine stages in the revelation of Christ which are intended to be nine factors in our life, with their ninefold claim upon us.

1. Our Lord's Incarnation. "He being in the form of God, did not count equality with God a thing to be retained as a prize, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, and being found in fashion as a man, humbled Himself even to the death of the cross." This condescension in the Incarnation is the most stupendous fact in history; God in Christ made flesh. The revelation makes its claim upon us, and elicits from us a response of the deepest humility of heart and mind and soul. Throughout the Christian life it is only as the saved man finds nothing in himself that he is able to realize Christ as his All in all.

2. Our Lord's earthly ministry. The keynote of His work was found in the words: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." In His preaching, the working of miracles, the training of the Twelve, He confirmed His own words: "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." And His ministry makes its claim upon us for stedfastness of purpose and strenuousness of endeavour.

3. Our Lord's Example—a revelation of perfect manhood. We see in His manhood what God intends man should be. "He did no sin"—the negative side of His character; "He did those things that pleased God"—its positive side. This revelation makes its claim upon us and is intended to elicit from us holiness of character. Character is the outcome of goodness, conduct its expression. All our experiences are intended to develop in us this goodness and help us to realize our Lord's example.

4. Our Lord's Death. This fact is the revelation of unutterable love. His death, as the atoning sacrifice, is unique, and claims from us a response of grateful self-sacrifice. "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." This love binds us to Him with cords of affection, leading us to yield ourselves to God, to live and labour, to suffer, and, if needs be, die, if we can but "fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ," and reveal to the world the greatest of all powers—self-sacrifice.

5. The Resurrection of Christ. This fact reveals His absolute Lordship; the Servant of Jehovah becomes the Lord of mankind. The Resurrection also is intended to have its claim upon us, and elicit from us unquestioning obedience. "To this end Christ died and rose again that He might be Lord." And when we realise the Lordship of Jesus Christ through the Resurrection, we are conscious that we ought to give to Him our undivided allegiance.

6. The Fact of the Ascension. Here we have the revelation of Heavenly provision. The Ascension marks the closing of His earthly manifestation and the introduction to another life, that of heavenly glory. We often dwell upon the Resurrection, but do we realize the power and place of the Ascension? It makes its claim upon us as a revelation of heaven and spiritual provision, and is intended to elicit from us a response of spiritual appropriation. It means access, liberty, fellowship; God continually abiding with us.

7. Our Lord's Pentecostal Gift—the revelation of supernatural power. The gift of the Holy Spirit was the gift of the Risen Christ. It means power to work, witness, and wait, to stand, save, and serve, to resist, persist, and insist—power for everything in Christian life and conduct. And Pentecost makes its claim upon us of absolute dependence upon the power of the Spirit. All work done for God from the standpoint of human enthusiasm is sure to fail, only that done in the power of the Spirit will abound to His glory.

8. Our Lord's Perfect Life in Heaven—the revelation of His perpetual presence. There is nothing so clear and unmistakable as our Lord's present life in heaven. He is still hard at work in the skies, but bestows His Spirit upon men, and is interested in individual Christians still. We often hear the cry, "Back to Christ of the Gospels;" I would say, "Up to Christ on the Throne," in whom all the Gospels become powerful with heavenly energy. This revelation makes a claim upon us of evangelistic enterprise. It was because He could say, "Lo, I am with you alway," that He could say, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

9. The Fact of our Lord's Coming. This afford us a revelation of His eternal Kingship—the crowning manifestation of God in Christ—and is intended to have its own claim upon us, and elicit a response of joyful confidence. We are to live and labour in the light of that great day. Death is never set before us as the hope of the Christian. We should not look forward to the grave but the sky as our goal. And while we accept the assurance that the past were "good old days," and realize that the present times are precious because of the fellowship and presence in our lives of the living Christ, let us remember that the best are yet to come, when Christ shall return to reign.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

Mr. W. R. Lane began with personal memories. One Mildmay Conference, he said, stands out very prominently in my memory to-day. It was many years ago, I am afraid to say how many. I was then a babe in Christ, about six months old; serving in the Coldstream Guards, quartered at the Tower of London. I heard somehow of Mildmay, and came and sat in that corner on my left-hand by the door; Mr. Pennefather was here then. I do not think I recollect the subject or the speeches, but the influence, the spiritual atmosphere made an impression on me that has never passed away.

In the afternoon there was, of course, a meeting under the Mulberry Tree. "Safe in the arms of Jesus" was then nearly a new hymn. That meeting in the garden was to me, in truth, the "Gate of Heaven." I sometimes fancy that the Mulberry Tree was more beautiful then than it is now. Brethren, many of us have got into the afternoon and eventide of Christian life now; we have learned many things since we first knew the joy of sins forgiven. We have gained treasures of knowledge; we have become, maybe, more able and critical in Divine things; but are we as tenderly and closely in touch with Jesus our Saviour, as in the fresh early morning of our experience?

We are called aside that we may enter more intimately into communion with God our Father concerning His Holy Servant Jesus. May the Holy Spirit be our Guide and Teacher.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN ISAIAH AND THE GOSPELS.

Both prophet and apostle give a solemn and terrible warning to the wicked of the unquenchable fire of judgment. In Isaiah xl. we hear the Baptist herald crying in the wilderness, preparing the way of the Lord. In chapter xlii. 1, "Behold my servant, mine elect in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon Him," corresponds to the sacred hour of our Lord's baptism and public introduction to His Father's service. Then in verses 2-4 and in chapter l. some of the characteristics, and excellencies, of God's perfect Servant are set forth by the prophet. But the emphasis and climax of the whole story is chapter liii.

In chapter ix. the Saviour's birth is referred to, but only referred to; and then you are rapidly taken away to other topics, but in this chapter the Spirit lingers about the Cross. One verse tells of His birth, but a whole chapter and more are given to the wondrous theme of His death.

It is so, not only in the prophetic programme, but also in the historical fulfilment. Two of the Gospels speak of His birth in a rapid and fragmentary way; but all four evangelists enlarge on His suffering and death. The centre of gravity, so to speak, of the Christian Gospel is not Bethlehem, but Calvary. God the Father, who gave up His only begotton Son for our salvation, speaks to us, from the midst of this Calvary chapter, about His "Righteous Servant."

He came into the world saying, "Lo I come to do Thy will, O God," and His first recorded utterance to His mother in the Temple was, "I must be about my Father's business." As He sat at Sychar's well, dust-stained and weary, and His disciples wondered that He was not hungry, He said to them, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of. My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work." In dark Gethsemane He said, "Thy will be done." A few hours afterwards, when He died on the cross, He said, "It is finished."

He had done the will of God. In treading the weary miles of Palestine, He never took a step that He could wish to retrace; He never said a word that had been better left unsaid; never was there a thought in His mind or a desire in His heart that was not in perfect harmony with the purpose and pleasure of His Father.

Thank God there has been one servant of His in this poor world, who lived a life that could not have been better. But the crown and climax of His service was when He shed His precious blood to put away sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness.

Foreign Mission Week.

THE ELF.*

PEARL-EYES, otherwise the Elf, because it exactly describes her, was very good for the first few weeks, after which we began to know her. She is not a convert in any sense of the term. She is just a very wilful, truthful, exasperating, fascinating little Oriental.

I never saw anyone except the Elf look interesting when naughty. She does look interesting. She is a rather light brown, and any emotion make the brown lighter; her long lashes droop over her eyes in the most pathetic manner, and when she looks up appealingly she might be an innocent martyr about to die for her faith.

The Elf's chief delinquencies at present, however, spring from a rooted aversion to her share in the family housework (ten minutes' rubbing up of brass water-vessels); an appetite for slate pencils, she would nibble them by the inch if we would let her—"They are so nice to eat," she says; and, most fruitful of all in sad consequences, a love of being first.

As regards sin No. 1, I hope it will soon be a thing of the past, for she has just made a valuable discovery: "Satan doesn't come very close to me if I sing all the time I'm rubbing the brasses. He runs away when he hears me sing, so I sing very loud, and that keeps him away. Satan doesn't like hymns." And I quite agree, and strongly advise her to persevere.

Sin No. 2 is likely to pass, and she hates the nasty medicine we give her to correct her depraved proclivities; but No. 3 is more serious. It opens the door, or, as she once expressed it, it "calls so many other sins to come"—quarrelling, pride, and several varieties of temper, come at the "call" of this sin.

She is a born leader in her very small way, and she has not learned yet that before we can lead we must be willing to be led. "I will choose the game," she remarks, "and all of you must do as I tell you." Sometimes they do, for her directions, though decisive, are given with a certain grace that wins obedience; but sometimes they do not, and then the Elf is offended, and walks off.

But she is the life of the game, and they chase her and propitiate her; and she generally condescends to return, for solitary dignity is dull. If any of the seniors happen to see it, it is checked as much as possible, but oftener we hear of it in that very informing prayer, which is to her quite the event of the evening; for she takes to the outward forms of religion with great avidity, and the evening prayer especially is a deep delight to her. She counts up all her numerous shortcomings carefully and perfectly truthfully, as they appear to her, and with equal accuracy her blessings large and small. She sometimes includes her good deeds in the list, lest, I suppose, they should be forgotten in the record of the day. All the self-righteousness latent in human nature comes out, or used to in her earlier days, in the evening revelations.

Here is a specimen, taken at random from the first month's sheaf. She and the Imp had come to my room for their devotions, preternaturally pious, both of them, though quite unregenerate. It was the Elf's turn to begin.

First came the day's sins, counted on the fingers of the right hand, beginning with the fourth finger. "Once," and down went the little finger on the palm, "I was cross with L." (L. being the Imp, nine-and-a-half to the Elf's seven-and-a-half, but most submissive as a rule), "I was cross because she did not do as I told her. That was wrong of me; but it was wrong of her too, so it was only half a sin. Twice," and the third finger was folded down, "when I did not do my work well. That was quite all my fault. Three times," and down went the middle finger, "when I caught a quarrel with those naughty little children; they were stupid little children, and they would not play my game, so I spoiled unity. But they came running after me, and they said, 'Please forgive us,' so I forgave them. That was very good of me, and I also forgave L.; so that is three bad things and two good things to-day."

I stopped her, and expatiated on the sin of pride; but her mind was full of the business in hand.

"Then there were four blessings—no, five; but I can't remember the fifth. The Ammal gave me a box for my doll, and you gave me some sweets, and I found some nice rags in your waste-paper basket"—grubbing in rag-bags and waste-paper baskets is one of the joys of life; rags are so useful when you have a large family of dolls who are always wearing out their clothes—"and I have some cakes in my own box now. Those are four blessings; but I forget the fifth."

I advised her to leave it, and begin, for the Imp was patiently waiting her turn. She, good child, suggested the missing fifth must be the soap—the Ammal had given each of them a piece the size of a walnut. Yes, that was it apparently, for the Elf, contented, began:

"O loving Lord Jesus, I have done three wrong things to-day" (then followed the details, and prayer for forgiveness). "Lord, give L. grace to do what I want her to do; and when she does not do it, Lord give me grace to be patient with her. I thank Thee for causing me to forgive those little children who would not play the game I liked. Oh, make them good, and make me also good; and next time we play together give me grace to play patiently with them. And oh, forgive all the bad things I have done to-day: and I thank Thee very much for all the good things I have done, for I did them by Thy grace."

You cannot interrupt in the middle of those rather confusing confessions, she is far too much engaged to be disturbed; but when the communication is fairly over, and she cuddles on your knee for the kissing and caressing she so much appreciates, you have a chance of explaining things a little.

She listened seriously that evening, I remember; then, slipping down off my knee, she added as a sort of postcript, very reverently, "O Lord Jesus, I prayed it wrong. I was naughtier than L., much naughtier. But indeed, Thou wilt remember that she was naughty first—Oh, that's not it! It was not L., it was me! And I was impatient with those little children. But—but they caused impatience within me." Then getting hopelessly mixed up between self-condemnation and self-justification, she gave it up, adding, however, "Next time we play together, give them grace to play patiently with me," which was so far satisfactory, as at first she had scouted the idea that there could be any need of patience on the other side.

As a rule she is not distinguished for very deep penitence, but at one time she had what she called "a true sense of sin," which fluctuated rather, but was always hailed, when it appeared in force, as a sign of better things. After a day of mixed goodness and badness the Elf prayed most devoutly: "O God, keep me from being at all naughty to-morrow. But if I am naughty, Lord, give me a true sense of sin!"

On reading the above, I thought how similar children's hearts are, whether their faces are white or brown or black. I think many of you will recognize some who are as imperious and impatient as little Elf. If so, will you learn from her the need of Jesus' forgiveness, and the power of His grace? But first of all you must, like her, seek to have "a true sense of sin."

Home Missions (Luke xiv. 12-24.

OUR Lord was ever ready to accept the invitation of rulers and Pharisees, and his host on this occasion was probably both. There is reason to accept the invitations of the children of the world, so long as they invite us, if only we will go in the spirit of Christ, who never hesitated to speak as He felt, of God and forgiveness, and eternal issues, when sitting at the feasts of the great.

The good John Newton condemned the parties and feasts of Christian people on the ground of these words. Of course it is unbecoming for such to go in deeply for ostentation and display, or for a wasteful prodigality of expenditure on eating and drinking; but we must not go to the other extreme, and neglect the claims of fellowship. What our Lord forbids is the giving of feasts for no other object than to obtain a recompense of some kind from our guests.

"Give hospitality," he said, "from the royal generosity of the heart, and with no thought or expectation of a return." That there will be such a recompense when we rise from the dead is clearly to be inferred from the Master's words; but we realize that the deed itself is its best recompense, and we are not counting on the final award. It will be enough for us to have pleased our Master and Lord. To hear Him say, "Ye did it unto Me," will be our heaven.

One of the guests then uttered one of those pious platitudes which betray the smug and self-complacent spirit beneath. His words, however, while sounding praiseworthy, hid a threefold mistake; first, a sensual idea of the resurrection; then his confident assurance that, because he was an Israelite and a Pharisee, he would have a right to eat it; and, finally, an evident desire to divert the whole conversation, and relegate the reward to an indefinite future. "Yes," he seemed to say, "We shall all be happy one day, meanwhile let us have done with further discourse about the matter, and have a good time of feasting and enjoyment." But, instead of being silenced, our Lord took occasion from his words to go further with His discourse.

The excuses of the invited guests were very flimsy, and evidently concealed a rooted determination not to accept the proffered hospitality. They had had ample time to make all arrangements. The man who had bought the land need not have gone to see it after the purchase, though surely he ought to have done so before. The land could not move away. The second should have tried his oxen before he completed the purchase; and in the third case there was no reason why the wife should not accompany her husband.

Notice that none of these men declined to accept the invitation. So far from this each one represents himself as hindered by a pressing circumstance that blocked his way for the moment. But notwithstanding their plausible utterances, they were treated with the same rigour as though they had said boldly, "We will not come."

The second call was addressed to those still within the limits of the city of God, probably its despised and outcast classes—the publicans and sinners—half heathen in the midst of Gospel light, and altogether miserable.

The third call surely means the heathen—"strangers from the covenants of promise, and without God in the world." There is room for these in the Father's heart, room in the mediatorial work of our Saviour, room in the Eternal Home. Those who have had no shelter but a hedgerow, or have long been tramping along the dusty, weary highways! Yes, and we are bidden to take no excuse. We have orders to compel them, though they are without preparation, to do it without delay. F. B. M.

Israel asking for a King (1 Sam. viii. 1-10). Golden Text—1 Sam. vii. 3).

THE company of oppressed slaves from Egypt had become, under the leadership and training of Moses, the servant of the Lord (Num. xii. 7), a separate nation. Judges were raised by God to deliver and govern them "until Samuel the prophet" (Acts xiii. 20). "And the Lord was with the judge" (Judg. ii. 18). Gideon refused the nation's request to be their king. "I will not. . . . the Lord shall rule over you" (Judg. viii. 23, xxi. 25). The Lord was their King (1 Sam. xii. 12).

Samuel the Prophet.

Called of God, proved a faithful deliverer of the Lord's messages (1 Sam. iii. 11, 18, viii. 10). A fair and righteous judge (Deut. xvi. 19, 1 Sam. xii. 4, 5). An intercessor for Israel before the Lord in all times of trouble and perplexity (vii. 5; xii. 19, 23). He founded the school of the prophets at Naioth, a suburb of Ramah (1 Sam. xix. 20). And served his nation by teaching, and a wise, unselfish rule for some forty years. A lifetime of devoted service rewarded by ingratitude and reproach (v. 5). Samuel had been their uncrowned king as chief ruler under God (v. 4). The popular assembly (Ex. iii. 16; Num. xi. 16, 24, 25).

1. The Request. 2. The plea. 3. The explanation.

1. For a king, a judge, a leader of their armies.

2. Samuel's age and his sons' sins. Not a word of gratitude for his past services, or sympathy because of his sons' evil doings. No regard for the feelings of the aged saint.

3. Wilfulness and pride. They wanted a king they could see, with pageant and show like other nations. Their hearts were turned away from God.

Foretold some 400 years before (Deut. xvii. 14). The root of the sin was the same as in Ex. xxxii. 4, not satisfied with Jehovah. Apostacy. By faith we can see Him, who is invisible (Heb. xi. 27).

The request of the nation came with double pain to Samuel, a personal slight, and dishonour to Jehovah. Like David, he went into the Sanctuary when troubled or perplexed (Ps. lxxiii. 17, lxxv. 7). He needed comfort, strength, wisdom, guidance, patience, rest. He knew from experience where to seek. The Lord gave him sympathy, a clear word of guidance, and strength to deliver it faithfully. The elders acted according to their own wills and wishes, Samuel submitted his to God.

The request granted.

By the way of hard experience brought His chosen people to His own Divine purpose to set up a king after His own heart. Israel had to suffer, and was faithfully warned.

Special Points.

1. God's messages must be delivered faithfully. Keep close to Scripture, "thou shalt speak My words" (Ezek. ii. 7, vii. 27), neither add nor diminish (Deut. iv. 2; Rev. xxii. 19). "I am a child" (Jer. i. 7, 8). "I am with thee." We need the Master's touch on our lips also (Isa vi. 5, 6, 7; Jer. i. 9-17), we must speak when the Lord bids us do so after.

2. The people did not say they rejected God, but in asking for a king they showed they meant so. When we are attracted by the glitter of the world, and choose it rather than eternal realities, when we neglect Jesus as our Saviour, we reject Him as our King. We must choose Him as King of our life here if we want Him to own us as His subjects when He comes to reign for ever (Dan. vii. 13, 14).

3. Because I have godly parents my responsibility is the greater. The grace of God does not come by inheritance, I must seek the Lord for myself and His Holy Spirit for my guide to walk in His ways (Matt. iii. 9). The Pharisees thought, because they were descended from Abraham, they were sons of God (John viii. 33-59). John the Baptist pointed to the stones in the desert, and called the Jews to repentance. "For us also" (Rom. iv. 1, 25; xvi. 24).

4. God's predictions are not always His plans for us, but He will control our wills to do His pleasure (Deut. xvii. 14, 15).

5. Pray for the eye of faith to see Him who is invisible to the eye of sense (Heb. xi. 27) but who will be seen for "He cometh in the clouds and every eye shall see Him" (Rev. i. 7).
